Likud coalition in doubt

Crucial budget vote passes 58 – 52

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Sunday that he hopes Foreign Minister David Levy will retract his resignation, but he is confident that the government will survive the crisis, at least through 2000, and that early elections will not be held.

He also vowed to have the budget passed by Monday afternoon. In fact, the budget did pass by a vote of 58-52.

Speaking at a news conference four hours after Levy's announcement, Netanyahu sought to put on a brave face and a business-as-usual air.

He said he could "hear the gleeful cries from the leftists and see the broad grins on Labor faces. My advice to them is not to be so quick to smile and celebrate. If you are preparing your victory suits, you will have to pack them away. We will not repeat our errors of 1992, when we enabled the leftists to assume power."

Between the lines, however, it was clear that Netanyahu did not expect Levy to return to the government. He said that he would hold onto the foreign affairs portfolio for the time being, and would continue the talks on redeployment once the budget is passed.

Just as Levy took care not to attack Netanyahu personally, so Netanyahu picked no quarrel with Levy. "In all, we worked well together," he said. "I tried to phone him but he wouldn't take my calls."

Netanyahu disputed a reporter's assertion that Levy was pushed into resigning. "The opposite is true," he asserted. "We made tireless efforts to keep all the undertakings made to Levy. Some were fulfilled even before the budget debate, like a long school day and a task force to combat unemployment. The attempt to find the funds was really not simple. We did not want to levy new taxes nor breach the budget framework. I was out to make sure the promises were covered – and not merely on paper. We wanted to look out for the weaker segments of society, despite the enormous overdraft we inherited, which put us in a situation of economic distress."

In what sounded like electioneering, Netanyahu spoke of "a new rail link between Tel Aviv and Beersheva, which was decided upon Sunday, to provide employment for Negev residents and link the periphery to the centre, and thus trigger development. We are also diverting funds to development towns and setting up a scholarship fund for university students from development towns."

No consensus on pluralism resolution

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Marathon efforts to achieve a united front on religious pluralism in Israel failed at last month's 33rd World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem, and the gathering ended with the adoption of a resolution that Orthodox delegates could not support.

The battle was a setback for Jewish unity but a boost for the Reform and Conservative movements, which have been trying for years to win official recognition in Israel.

Orthodox delegates, including those from Mizrachi and Emunah, could not support parts of the resolution on religious pluralism and instead drafted their own resolution based on the final document, but omitting some passages.

In the end, however, the Mizrachi version was defeated by the entire congress, and the final resolution was easily passed by a majority vote.

The drafting of the final resolution was a hard-fought marathon, with World Zionist Organization (WZO) chair Avraham Burg trying to convince Orthodox delegates to accept a compromise statement.

Setback for Jewish unity at WZC

Burg said he had "pleaded, begged and cried" for a reported nine hours with the Mizrachi delegation, urging its members to accept the final draft.

However, the increased strength of Reform and Conservative delegates from the United States helped pass Burg's resolution, and defeat the Mizrachi/Likud proposal.

Canada sent 16 delegates to the three-day meeting, which also marked the 100th anniversary of the first Zionist congress in Basel.

The resolution states that "in a democratic society, the expression of Judaism must be pluralistic;" that "secular and religious Jews of all streams have equal democratic rights to observe their faith and lifestyles their own way;" and that "an attempt by any entity to impose

The News in Brief

CANADA

Fund Award Winners

VANCOUVER — The Holocaust Education Centre here has announced that Richmond Jewish Day School and Vancouver Talmud Torah are winners of Lovi Memorial Fund awards for Holocaust education in Jewish schools.

The Lovi Memorial Fund was established to provide grants of up to $500 to Jewish schools in British Columbia's lower mainland for special projects on Holocaust education or remembrance.

Temple Tackles Poverty

CALGARY — The social action committee of Temple B'nai Tikvah has joined with the Jewish community's Action Committee, to fight poverty among Calgary's Jews.

Plans call for a public awareness campaign and a "mitzvah card" – a checklist of activities to help battle poverty in the community.

Jewish Identity Contest

TORONTO — The Board of Jewish Education is coordinating a contest on Jewish identity as part of its 50th anniversary of Israel celebrations. Students in grades 7 to 13 in Jewish day or supplementary schools are eligible.

For further information write to: Torah Department, 4600 Bathurst St. Suite 232, Willowdale, M2R 3V3 or call 416-633-7770.

Shopping Extravaganza

TORONTO — The new Dominion save-a-centre at Lawrence Plaza will host a food shopping extravaganza '98 on Jan. 13. Five percent of the total gross sales during shopping hours that day will be donated to Toronto Hadassah-WIZO's Women for Women and Kids for Kids projects in Israel.

ISRAEL

Extremist Convicted

JERUSALEM — An Israeli woman was tearful but not regretful after she was convicted last week of racism for plastering across a West Bank town posters depicting the Islamic prophet Mohammed as a pig.

Suskin's posters, which used an animal considered unclean in Islam to depict the founder of Islam, stirred angry reactions throughout the Muslim world.

In announcing the verdict, the judge ruled that freedom of speech did not absolve Suskin, a supporter of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane's outlawed Kach movement.

Suskin faces a maximum sentence of 26 years for her act. She also faces possible jail time for throwing rocks at a car driven by a Palestinian a day after putting up the posters.

Special Stamp

Minister of Communications Limor Livnat said in the Knesset that the Israeli Government issued the stamp to honor the Chabad program for "its unique contribution to aiding Jewish children who are at extreme risk because of the radiation released from the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear disaster."

WORLD

Le Pen Convicted

LONDON — French far-right leader Jean-Marie Le Pen has been convicted for saying that the Nazi gas chambers were "a mere detail" of World War II.

Le Pen, 69, was not present when a court in a suburb of Paris ordered him to pay about $50,000 to finance publication of the judgment in 16 newspapers. He was also ordered to pay symbolic amounts to 11 different human rights and anti-racist organizations.

The charges stem from remarks Le Pen made in an address in the German city of Munich on Dec. 5.

Reform Judaism

NEW YORK — Judith Silverman of Yarmouthport, Mass., was recently elected to a two-year term as president of the Women of Reform Judaism – Federation of Temple Sisterhoods.

In addition, 42 persons were elected to the board of directors including Catherine Bianco from Holy Blossom Temple in Toronto.

Bronfman Fellowships

ALBANY, N.Y. — Applications are now available for the 1998 Bronfman Youth Fellowships in Israel.

The fellowships offer an opportunity for 26 students entering the 12th grade to spend five weeks in Israel this summer. Application forms must be postmarked no later than Jan. 30. Finalists will be notified March 2.

For application forms and information write to The Bronfman Youth Fellowships in Israel, 17 Wilbur St. Albany, N.Y., 12202 or call 518-465-6575 or fax 518-432-8984 or e mail [yfi@bronfman.org].

Nazi Guard Found Guilty

FRANKFURT — A German court has given 20 months of probation to a man involved in the World War II murder of Jewish children in a Ukrainian village.

The court found Ernst Hering, 75, guilty of guarding the site in Israelowka where 19 children under the age of 10 were shot or beaten to death by the Nazi SS.

The judges said Hering also helped guard about 60 Jewish residents in his native village before they were shot to death in a pit on the edge of the town.

LOS ANGELES — A task force of federal and local officials is investigating fires, apparently set by arsonists, at two neighboring Orthodox synagogues here.

Although authorities have not ruled out the possibility of hate crimes, the absence of the usual anti-Semitic graffiti has led them to believe that the fires were set by one or more transients.

Vandalism at Latvian Shul

MOSCOW — Vandals have painted a swastika and anti-Semitic slogans on a synagogue in the Latvian capital of Riga.

The desecration came after a neo-Nazi group known as Lightning and Cross distributed leaflets in Riga calling Jews and Russians enemies of the Latvian people.

SS Officer Relocated

ROME — Erich Priebke's new neighbors are not happy with the Christmas present given to the former SS captain.

On the orders of a military appeals court, Priebke, who was convicted in July of taking part in the 1944 massacre of 335 people, was moved Dec. 23 from a military hospital into a Rome apartment to serve out the remaining three months of his sentence.

Thousands celebrate Chanukah, Israel's 50th birthday

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Music, dancing, celebration and an emotional candlelighting ceremony recently kicked off a community-wide celebration of Chanukah and Israel's 50th birthday.

An estimated 5,000 people filled the south lawn of Queen's Park as a giant menorah was lit, but only about 1,000 managed to crowd into the legislative building's front lobby for the rest of the evening's festivities. The crowd far exceeded organizers' expectations and the steps leading into the legislative building were quickly filled by people unable to enter.

... including lots of enthusiastic kids. [Stephen Epstein and Paul Lungen photos]

Inside, people were jammed shoulder to shoulder in the foyer of the elegant public building as 50 candles were lit to honor Israel's 50th anniversary. That was followed by brief speeches and musical entertainment. A dancing space was created only after it was announced that Chanukah food was available in the building's wings.

The lobby area then gave way to exuberant dancers, including Ontario Attorney General Charles Harnick, as participants took to the impromptu dance floor.

The event was part of a celebration by Jewish communities around the world to mark Israel's golden anniversary. Leaders of 33 nations lit Chanukah candles on the opening night of the holiday, including U.S. President Bill Clinton. In Rome, a representative of the Pope lit a menorah in a Vatican garden along with Israeli and Italian Jewish representatives. Shortly afterwards, Italian President Oscar Luigi Scalfaro lit the first candle of a huge menorah set up underneath the Arch of Titus in the Roman Forum, JTA reported.

The arch was built to commemorate Rome's victory over the Jews and the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem in 70 CE. On its inner side the arch displays a carving showing the Temple menorah being carried by captive Jews into Rome.

"This evening, a circle closes," said Israel's ambassador to Italy, Yehudah Milo. "We are here at the arch, not as slaves, but as representatives of the independent, free State of Israel."

In Toronto, the outdoor first candle of Chanukah was lit by Harnick and Rabbi Yisroel Landa. Following brief statements by event organizers Donald Carr and Judy Feld Carr, Cantors Armand Moyal, Yehuda Rottner and Efraim Sapir entertained with spirited songs of joy.

The event then reconvened inside the legislature for the candlelighting. One of those participating in the service was Miriam Rosenthal, proprietor of Miriam's Judaica store. Sharing the stage with her was her granddaughter, Alisa Rosenthal, a student at Netivot Hatorah school.

Miriam, an ardent Zionist, is a Holocaust survivor whose wartime story beggars belief. A native of Hungary, she was pregnant when she was deported for slave labor to the Kaufring work camp in Germany. She was one of seven women expecting children who were transported to the camp, she explained.

Conditions in Kaufring were "terrible. People were especially cruel and people suffered," she said.

"We didn't know why they were keeping us," she said, but she speculated that with the Americans and Russians closing in, the Germans "wanted to show the Allies they they didn't kill children."

After giving birth to her son, Leslie, on Purim in 1944, and almost dying from complications afterwards, Rosenthal was sent back to work, sometimes working in a laundry. Other times, she said, "we carried dead bodies on a carriage to a pit." One woman stayed in a frozen wooden hut to care for the babies.

Although their food rations were meagre, one of the mothers was able to produce milk and she nursed all the children, one after the other, Rosenthal added.

Towards the end of the war, the prisoners were shipped by train to Dachau, where they were eventually liberated by American forces. In Komarno, Slovakia, her birthplace, Rosenthal was reunited with her husband, William, who had been taken for slave labor. In 1947, they immigrated to Canada via Paris and Cuba.

Rosenthal said she was overwhelmed by the honor of being chosen to light one of the 50 candles celebrating Israel's creation.

Israeli politics a seething cauldron

During the closing days of 1997, from Dec.16 to Dec. 24, I was in Israel attending the Seventh International Conference of the Jewish Media and the first day and a half of the 33rd Zionist Congress.

Both gatherings were held in Jerusalem, and as anyone who has ever been there will attest, it is unlike any other place. It is an enchantment and maelstrom of history, culture, religion, politics, architecture, archeology and language.

Over the next few issues of The CJN, I will endeavor to describe some of what I experienced during my visit to Jerusalem.

* * *

Israel is a tightly wired society. This is true on both the literal level where cell phones, computers and computer chips abound, and on the emotional level where, each day, it seems, the ship of state lists and rocks from one political crisis to another, constantly upsetting one's sense of inner peace and balance.

For example, this column is being written just as Foreign Minister David Levy proffered his resignation to the prime minister on Sunday. In so doing, he has cast doubt on the government's very existence and cast the country into its latest crisis.

If he carries through with the resignation, the government's parliamentary majority is reduced to the barest minimum, namely, one vote. If he does not carry through with the resignation, the government's credibility, already battered, is thrashed even further.

But Levy's resignation is symptomatic of a phenomenon that attracted considerable media coverage when I was in Israel, and that continues unabated three weeks later.

That phenomenon is the apparently growing disaffection with the prime minister personally. This disaffection is expressed not only by his political foes, which is to be expected, but increasingly, by his political allies and colleagues as well.

In recent weeks, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has been publicly criticized by Ariel Sharon, Limor Livnat, Avigdor Kahalani and of course, by David Levy, with his criticism – in the form of resignation – being the most extreme of public rebukes.

Professional politics has a nastier, harsher edge in Israel than that which we are used to in Canada. Politicians seem less restrained in what they say and in how they say it. The concept of cabinet solidarity, which is one of the pillars of parliamentary democracy here, does not apply in Israel. Each week, it seems, someone or something is "leaking" from the cabinet.

And of course it is a truism of any western democracy, wherever there is an opining politician, there will always be an open microphone or a scribbling steno pad to capture the opinion.

As a result, the pages of the newspapers and the newscasts on radio and television are a constantly churning cauldron of allegations, accusations, betrayals and accommodations.

It is from this cauldron, in part, almost always stewing near a boil, that the collective political psyche feeds. Is it any wonder then, that the ordinary person's sense of inner peace and balance is so often upset?

Against this rising tide of personal disaffection, Netanyahu spoke to the approximately 120 visiting foreign Jewish journalists during the conference.

Not surprisingly, his main theme was the media. He dealt primarily with the portrayal of Israel by the western, non-Jewish media in relation to the stalled peace talks with the Palestinian Authority (PA), accusing the media, essentially, of ignoring the facts, and thus, the truth in the current situation.

"Why is Israel accused of violating the Oslo Accords", he asked, "when the government of Israel has honored all of its commitments?

"Why is the PA not accused of violating the accords, when they have failed to carry out any of their 10 specific commitments.

"There has not been violence done to the truth so systematically as has been done to the truth of the Palestinian-Israeli conflict," the prime minister boldly asserted.

He attributed this distortion to two aspects of journalistic perception. The first is that Israel is no longer seen as a young David struggling valiantly against a mightier Goliath. The second is the result of the fact that Europeans view the conflict through the filter of their own colonial experiences, which they in turn have projected, inaccurately, inappropriately and falsely upon the two key protagonists, Israel and the Palestinians.

"The West Bank is part of our land. [It's future] should be discussed and negotiated, but most of the world media has already agreed on the higher truth."

The prime minister's remarks were also directed at us in the international Jewish media, urging us not to "bend over backwards so as not to appear writing from our Jewish identities" in our coverage of the conflict.

When asked by a journalist why Israel should proceed at all to negotiate with a "partner" that does not intend to keep its obligations under the agreement, the prime minister answered: "That is why we are demanding that they meet their obligations before we take the next steps.

"After all, what we do – giving up land – is irreversible. What they do is not."

With this, the first issue of 1998, we introduce two new columnists from Israel. Gerald Steinberg teaches at the BESA Institute for Strategic Studies at Bar-Ilan University. He is an internationally renowned commentator on Middle Eastern geopolitical and strategic affairs. Robert Sarner is a writer, director, newscaster with the Israel Broadcasting Authority in Jerusalem. He combines a keenly observant eye, many years of international journalistic experience along with a deft writer's touch.

We are pleased and grateful to be able to add their unique voices to the diverse harmony of The CJN. It is part of our ongoing effort to provide new and different features for the benefit of our readers. They replace Emil Fackenheim and Martin Himel in our columnists' rotation, both of whom we publicly thank for their outstanding contributions to the paper.

NYGH set to run Branson

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Branson Hospital will remain open as an in-patient acute care hospital for at least two more years.

After Feb. 1, however, it will be run by North York General Hospital (NYGH), according to Branson president Brian Fenton and NYGH president and CEO Murray MacKenzie.

An agreement has been made between Branson and North York General, under which Branson staff become NYGH employees and Branson doctors are given privileges at NYGH after Feb. 1.

The transfer of Branson's management and governance to NYGH ahead of the planned June 1999 date will solve the staffing problems it has been facing, said Fenton.

MacKenzie said there will be some transfer of medical and other staff, and possibly new recruitment by NYGH.

The emergency department at Branson was scheduled to be taken over by NYGH at the beginning of January, as keeping Branson emergency staffed has been a main concern.

Consideration will be given to reopening the Branson emergency at night (it is now closed) or opening it earlier in the day, but not immediately, MacKenzie said.

Allegations of unsafe conditions made by Liberal health critic Gerrard Kennedy in the legislature were a "tempest in a teapot," Fenton said.

"They were based on anecdotal evidence which couldn't be documented," he said.

Some individual members of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, which founded Branson 40 years ago, have voiced objections to the decision of the Hospital Restructuring Commission to make the hospital an ambulatory care centre.

"This is not the official church objecting," Fenton said. "It's a year late for this kind of thing."

"We just want to make sure the position of the church is maintained," said church member Neil Collins.

"This is the only hospital in Canada with any association with the Seventh Day Adventist Church," said Collin Wiggan, another member of the church.

Fenton took over the reins of Branson only two weeks ago from Jack Gallop who retired after serving the hospital for 32 years.

"It's been an interesting time," Fenton remarked.

The date on which Branson ceases to be an in-patient hospital depends on how soon expansions of NYGH, Humber River, and York Central in Richmond Hill, authorized by the Hospital Commission, take place.

"I think it will be in business until the millennium," said MacKenzie.

Irene Zundel reveals life with husband Ernst

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It had all the elements of a made for TV movie: a love triangle; a happy home broken asunder; the aggrieved wife trying to get back at the other woman; a marital split; and then suggestions she sought revenge against her estranged husband and his love interest.

However, unlike a daytime soap opera or a slap dash television movie, that melodramatic scenario played out in a Toronto courthouse recently, as Irene Zundel testified against her notorious husband, pro-Nazi publisher Ernst Zundel.

The role of an aggrieved wife seeking to take revenge against her rival was scripted for her by lawyer Doug Christie, representing Ernst Zundel. At various points during three days of cross-examination he called her insanely jealous, two-faced, irrational and involved in a cat fight with her rival.

It was a role that Irene Zundel declined to accept, rejecting Christie's numerous suggestions that she hated her husband's paramour, Ingrid Rimland, and wanted to take revenge against her and her husband by testimony that would help shut down an Internet Web site they ran.

Irene Zundel was testifying before a Human Rights Commission tribunal that is determining whether Ernst Zundel violated the Canadian Human Rights Act by operating a Web site that brought hatred or contempt upon an identifiable group. The Canadian Human Rights Commission alleges that Ernst Zundel controlled a Web site based in the United States, called "Zundelsite," and employed Rimland.

Much of Christie's lengthy cross-examination focused on Irene Zundel's relationship with Rimland, arguing it affected her credibility. He repeatedly suggested her testimony was motivated by hatred and revenge. He pointed to a letter Irene Zundel sent to Rimland on June16, in which she ridiculed Rimland, 62, for going to "Dr. Facelift" for plastic surgery while she, at 39, was "slim, blonde, pretty, vivacious and unwrinkled."

Irene Zundel kept her composure under Christie's verbal barrage and denied she hated Rimland, though she acknowledged she resented her for coming between her and Zundel.

She said she was only testifying to matters she had personally seen or heard. She said Zundel sent a $3,000 (US) cheque to Rimland to operate the Zundelsite, that he employed Marc Lemire to post items to the Web site, and that he had editorial control over the site's contents. She testified that except for some rare occasions, Rimland toed Zundel's line regarding the Web site's content.

She also said that in recent months, she has come to change her views of Zundel. She no longer sees him as a pacifist and peace-lover despite his efforts to paint himself in that light.

That response came after a series of questions by Christie, who pointed to a letter she had written to members of parliament in which she described her husband as someone being persecuted for holding unpopular views of history. Why else but for revenge would someone who held those views come from the United States to testify against her husband, Christie had asked.

'You lied to me and conned me'

Irene Zundel agreed she had believed only a few months ago that Zundel was being persecuted for his political beliefs. But she said at the time she hadn't read much of his Internet postings. She has now read some of the material and "I see some of his material as borderline dangerous."

She said a ZGram (a newsletter) posted on the Web site pushed the cause of a South African dissident, but when she studied the case from other Internet sources she learned the dissident had in fact led a raid on an armory. Supporting him was inconsistent with Zundel's professed pacifist beliefs and led her to question him on other items, she said.

Irene Zundel said that over time, "my opinion of Mr. Zundel the man, Mr. Zundel the propagandist has changed for a variety of factors," including his personal treatment of her.

The most vivid illustration of her new-found attitude to Zundel came in an Aug. 24 letter she faxed to him titled, "How stupid do you think I am?" The letter was submitted to the tribunal by Christie.

It was sent a week after Zundel, under Irene's instigation, had sent a letter to Rimland breaking off their romantic relationship and affirming his commitment to his wife. Within a week he had "reneged" on that letter, Irene Zundel testified.

In the subsequent letter to her husband, she writes, "Do you really expect me to believe that you would relinquish control of the content of the Web site to a woman who is dangerous to your operation and someone you said no doubt would betray you as a secret witness one day?

"You agreed to fire her and shut down your Web site. Your promised a clean break and an end to your romance. This scheme was never an option. You lied to me and conned me... Let me tell you plainly that I will never help you to immigrate to the United States and let you enter my homeland under false pretenses, or to avoid being nailed as a security threat to Canada and deported to your homeland [Germany]. And I will not be loyal or a fool for a man who has cheated on me from day one, and used me in a way that insures horrific karma for you.

"I refuse to aid you in the future and if I am ever questioned about you by authorities, I refuse to lie on your behalf."

In two months, Irene Zundel's attitude had undergone a sea change. In a June 16 letter she faxed to Rimland, also submitted by Christie, she had described Zundel was a true National Socialist and said she too was "cause-driven," doing "valuable work for the cause. I am well-suited for my life as Mrs. Ernst Zundel." She signed the letter "Frau Z."

ONE PEOPLE. MANY VOICES. SEND A MESSAGE. LET YOUR VOICE BE HEARD.

The strength of the Jewish people has always been our sense of community; our commitment to help each other without regard to personalities or politics. But the ties that bind can hurt if they are pulled in different directions. Right now, mounting strains over religion and politics in Israel imperil Jewish unity. But a solution may be in sight.

A committee headed by Israeli Finance Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman is working to forge a solution acceptable to all Jews - Orthodox, Conservative or Reform. Our community stands strongly behind the Ne'eman Committee as it seeks to build an Israel where all Jews feel at home.

UJA Federation has taken a leadership role in assuring that your voice is heard in Israel. We ask you to join us in communicating our community's concerns by filling out the tear sheet below and returning it to us. We will forward your message to the Ne'eman Committee in Israel, along with those from thousands of your fellow Jews across North America.

Members of the Ne'eman Committee need to know how essential their efforts are to our community. Their decisions will influence the destiny of the Jewish people.

Two vital unities

In his typically insightful, but droll, manner, Albert Einstein once quipped: "I never think about the future; it comes soon enough."

Thankfully, very few of us are as wise as Einstein.

The first editorial in 1998 is a perfect opportunity to think about the future. It is only natural at the start of a new calendar year to wonder what will be the major stories in the coming months, to speculate at the new, unfolding possibilities for human betterment and to be hopeful about where we will be a year from now.

As we cast our eyes to the as-yet-unshaped horizon of 1998, we face a number of very important issues, both nationally and communally.

Nationally, we have witnessed and continue to witness at all levels of government the increasing divestment of former funding of programs and the abrogation of former responsibilities, to the point where most Canadians are worried about the viability of institutions and services that once were secure and that once helped to define the country as Canadian. For example, Canadians are worried about the state of universal, national health care; a cruel, bothersome high rate of unemployment; the spiralling cost of post-secondary education; and the seeming precariousness of old age pensions, to name but a few of the pressing national issues.

Communally, we have held our collective breath for almost a year, longing and hoping for the resumption of the stalled peace process. We have seen the unyielding, fanatic, Islamic fundamentalism become bolder and more murderous in its campaign against Jews, Israel and western values. We have also watched the development and further proliferation in the Middle East of the non-conventional arsenal of weaponry, much of it intended for eventual use against Israel.

As important as each of these issues is, however, it is our opinion that the two principal dilemmas facing the Jewish community of Canada heading into 1998 are the "two unities," the national unity of Canada and the communal unity of the Jewish people. We place the highest priority upon these two vital unities and thus it is of utmost importance that the Jews of Canada strive without cease towards their achievement.

We must be in the vanguard advocating appropriate, reasonable, constitutional change in order to preserve the political and territorial integrity of Canada. We must try to persuade Quebecers that the best way of ensuring a vital, exciting, dynamic French-language culture in an electronically connected, free trading, predominantly English-language North America is through the strong, assertive, officially bilingual federal institutions of universally respected and widely envied Canada.

We must also be in the vanguard as advocates for communal unity between the two households of the Jewish family in Israel and in the Diaspora. The issue of pluralism within Jewish life in Israel has brought the different streams of Judaism to an unprecedented impasse that threatens to drive a dangerous wedge between the non-Orthodox Jews of the Diaspora and the state of Israel.

Unity does not mean conformity and uniformity. It never has; it never will. Nor should it. But it does mean nurturing and protecting the common tie – profound, historical, cultural, religious and metaphysical – between Israel and the Diaspora.

The fact that the recently concluded World Zionist Congress failed to achieve a consensus on pluralism within Israel is discouraging. But we must not despair. Rather, our resolve on behalf of communal unity should be heightened.

The Ne'eman Committee, which was appointed by the government of Israel to find a channel through the impasse, has an extremely difficult task. The deadline for its report to the Knesset is Jan. 31. We, the Jews of Canada, must stand at the very forefront of support for its work.

Jewish presence in homeless programs

In response to Ron Csillag's "As I was saying" (CJN, Dec. 11, 1997), Congregation Darchei Noam, the Reconstructionist Synagogue in Toronto, has 65 volunteers who work in Out of the Cold programs. Together with St. Peter's Church, we have formed the First Interfaith Out of the Cold program. The volunteers are congregants and other associates who wish to ally themselves with us. In addition, some Darchei Noam volunteers volunteer in a downtown Toronto Out of Cold lunch program and in an overnight program in a community centre.

It was our decision to go where the need is, on the street, and we therefore joined forces with a group that was experiencing some weariness in the battle of facing the daily misery of the people who live on the streets.

Our volunteers keenly feel their responsibility to be a Jewish presence in this effort to address the crucial inequities of our community. In our joint coordinating efforts with St. Peter's, we often have the opportunity to articulate the Jewish principles that drive us to social action. We also shared an interfaith third seder at Passover, with Rabbi Larry Pinsker and Father Mike Kerrigan, and our St. Peter's colleagues participated in an Out of the Cold Shabbat, just prior to Rosh Hashanah. Congregation Darchei Noam is also responsible for a non-profit cooperative at Bathurst and Lawrence, Moshav Noam.

Although we are a small congregation, the spirit of social action is alive and well.

Celebration snafu

The Israel At 50 celebration at the Ontario legislature turned into a dangerous, chaotic, crushing mob scene. Hundreds of people were stuck on the stairs of the legislature, many trying to leave, others selfishly blocking their way, trying to get in. I saw many elderly being shoved, young children frightened by the crush, a man holding his screaming infant high above everyone's head in a car seat. My wife and I, among other parents we spoke to, felt the celebration had turned into a serious safety risk to our children. Amazingly, not one organizer of the celebration was on the steps trying to control the situation, as they should have been. The sole policeman on hand could do nothing to help.

Auschwitz memorials ignore Jewish deaths

The trial of Maurice Papon, a Catholic, who as police chief of Bordeaux in wartime France deported 1,690 Jews, including 223 children, to Auschwitz, (CJN, Oct. 15, 1997) bluntly highlights the attitude of us Catholics towards Jews.

As an eyewitness to Jews being herded into the gas chambers of Auschwitz, I became indignant at the cover-up, denials and letters to the editor that diluted our Christian complicity and our guilt of silence during World War II.

Cardinal Camillo Ruini, chair of the Conference of the Catholic Bishops of Italy, consecrated yet another church in the area of the former Auschwitz concentration camp, in memory of 40,000 Italian Catholics, none of whom actually died in Auschwitz.

This is now the sixth Catholic place of worship erected since 1950 in a circle of chapels and churches surrounding Auschwitz, the world's largest cemetery, where 90 percent of the victims were 1.3 million Jews.

In spite of the well-documented locations where Italian soldiers or civilian workers were imprisoned during World War II, the Italian episcopate zeroed in on Auschwitz.

A few years from now, when we the survivors are dead, all that will remain in the vicinity of the death camps in Poland will be a proliferation of crosses, churches and memorial signs for the Catholic victims. The wanton slaughter of Jews will be whitewashed.

Recalling the Rosenzweigs

I read with sadness (CJN, Oct. 30, 1997) of the illness of Rebbetzin Kathy Rosenzweig, currently of Windsor. I recall the Rosenzweig family with fondness. I always thought we had an unusual connection, as we were part of the same community three different times, in Winnipeg, Tzfat and Jerusalem. I recall them as an outstandingly dynamic, warm and spiritual couple.

Tales of the Blue Boxes

I was delighted that blue boxes were the most popular item at the Jewish National Fund booth at the recent general assembly convention in Indianapolis where I was a volunteer.

Many people stopped by, older ones, young kids, students, bare-headed or with kippot, almost all had a story to tell. It brought back fond memories.

One old man remembered when he was 3 years old, his parents emptied the box on the table and counted the pennies, while he was sitting under the table catching any coins that fell.

A man picked up three boxes, one for each of his children, while a lady took one for her and one for her daughter at university. People from small communities asked what to do when the boxes are full. A few had a collection of them dating to 1948.

Perspectives

Jewish survival: calling forth Shchinah

By DOROTHY LICHTBLAU

Judaism is an evolving, creative process that cannot be static, but must move, flow, be in action, to remain alive. It connotes inclusive, egalitarian and compassionate action. As contexts change, we must make sure that we don't get stuck in behavior that has become meaningless and subsequently soulless and degrading.

Judaism, as a living testament to the one God, is by definition about unity and a holistic world view. It is through our daily lives as Jews that we express our covenant with God. In the marketplace, on the farm, at school, at home, in the synagogue, we are commanded to manifest justice and charity. Judaism informs us that the spiritual and political are like the entwined braids of a havdalah candle. Since we extol harmony with the Eternal we must infuse ordinary action with spiritual awareness.

In her book, Standing Again at Sinai: Judaism From a Feminist Perspective, feminist theologian, Judith Plaskow frames the picture this way: "This institutionalized separation of spirituality and politics, proceeding from the same hierarchy of mind and body that supports the disparagement of women and nature, represents a dualism to be rejected. When spirituality is understood from a feminist perspective – not in other worldly terms, but as the fullness of our relationship to ourselves, others, the earth and God – it cannot possibly be detached from the conditions of our existence."

This view underlines the notion that Judaism is a dynamic, multi-dimensional and affective process. Judaism is not under the guardianship of any elite. As part of the Jewish community, each person is responsible for developing and maintaining our heritage. This concept is engaging and it implies that the Eternal Force is immanent and apparent to anyone who seeks to become attuned to it.

If, then, Judaism can be a source of immense satisfaction and wisdom, why, in the last couple of generations, have its daughters and sons been fleeing from it in droves? Having recently completed the celebration of Chanukah, it seems appropriate to consider what brought us to our current situation and the possibilities that lie ahead.

I am part of the generation of North American Jews born after World War II. Perhaps my experiences are not much different from those of others born in the same period.

Many of my recollections I embrace fondly. Holidays, of course, were special and quite significant for families. It was a time of hospitality, when all were warmly welcomed, even those peripheral adults, who were single, childless or both.

At home, my mother and grandmother put much effort and many hours into cooking and cleaning. We girls assisted, not only to help out, but because it was a way to train for our future work. The men showed appreciation for the results of all these activities, but their heftier concerns absented them from working in the kitchen or pushing a carpet sweeper.

In synagogue, the men led the services, while the women followed the proceedings. Men wore kippot and tallitot, symbols of faith; women covered their hair to show modesty. By the time I was eight or so, though no one had said it, I had learned that furs, jewelry and big cars signified important people. Here in the land of opportunity, holidays were about food, the exhibition of possessions and the confirmation that Jews could practise their rituals and be powerful in the world.

At services, we children tried to be attentive, but got bored quickly because it all seemed so remote. The problem was that my friends and I had received enough Hebrew school training to know we were Jewish, but not enough to competently act on it.

I went to synagogue because I had learned to be dutiful and to demonstrate that I was proud to be a Jew. Being Jewish meant not letting down my family or community. It was remembering how much Jews have suffered throughout history. It was a show of responsibility. Sometimes I felt as though I was carrying my family, my ancestors and the entire history of the Jews on my back. Maybe that's why my mother kept reminding me to stand straight.

I wanted to connect with God, but couldn't find "Him" in the auditorium-like synagogue, where the male rabbi spoke about the sons of Israel. So, I saved my conversations with God for bedtime, when I would say the prayer my grandmother had taught me.

Boys usually received more Hebrew education than girls, because they had to prepare for bar mitzvah. No one I knew had a bat mitzvah, though I remember vague remarks about becoming a woman around the time I turned 12. What that entailed was largely mysterious to me. Oh, I understood it had something to do with menstruation and sex and babies and looking pretty so a boy would want to marry you, but what it meant Jewishly I didn't get. And I didn't want to be a woman who had babies and stayed home; I wanted to be like Deborah, the prophetess, who went out into the world and influenced the course of history.

Could anyone be keen on womanhood when it seemed so messy, confining and sordid? Why did adults whisper about it? Why the cloaked looks and indirect language? Why did boys get to celebrate changes in their lives, while we girls had to hide our transitions? Boys were applauded for their initiatives out in the world. We got praise for being good helpers and caretakers. I don't think any of my male cousins learned to make honey cake.

I enjoyed our holidays, but they weren't fun like Christmas and Easter, which everyone legitimately took off. Judaism was a solemn endeavor because we continually had to justify doing it. You didn't refer to Judaism directly in mixed company. You had to be careful: "They think we killed Christ." "Anyone may turn on you."

I have many lovely memories, but I recall, too, that there was no celebration of womanhood. Girls had two main goals – to be a wife and mother. Religion was about obligation. No one talked about spirituality. Security and safety were our elusive goals. We were Other – short, dark, hairy, loud, argumentative, ostentatious, foreign, strange, unwelcome. We were never at home anywhere, except maybe in Israel. Israel was important but in a precarious situation. Ultimately, our position was bleak. We were alone, disliked, scapegoated and in danger. Remember Egypt. Remember the Inquisition. Remember the Holocaust.

And then the '60s happened. A new consciousness was rising – we were equal human beings, members of the global village, who would transcend hate, bigotry and violence. This was the new language, but not one contemporary Jewry was speaking, as far as I could tell. I wanted to have an impact on the world unconstrained by gender or religion. I wanted meaning and purpose beyond baby making and suburbia. How could I bring children into a polluted, overpopulated, nuclear bomb-threatened world? How could I ignore jazz and rock 'n' roll, Marx and Jung, New York, Crete and Paris, Margaret Lawrence, Margaret Atwood, Germaine Greer, Gloria Steinem, Warhol, Bertolucci and…

What about Judaism? Well, it was entrenched, materialistic, legalistic, narrow and out of date – no, not Judaism, but the North American Jewish leadership and its middle class constituency. I was tired of a bagels and chicken soup culture. I wanted to embrace life, not hide from it.

I did not realize then that Judaism championed all that I cared about. It was not able to talk to me because it had been bound and repressed by clever, male guardians of the faith.

Shchinah, the feminine spirit of Judaism had been booted out of the culture. Oh, yes, every now and then she managed to break out. Then there would be a flurry of mystical revelation, artistic activity and cross-cultural relations. But all this would be too unwieldy for those who liked to control. They would therefore catch her again and haul her back down under, claiming that all she had wrought was sinful or silly. Sometimes, as a token, she would be trotted out by the keepers, chains carefully camouflaged, as an example of the life force controlled and correctly tamed. At those times, she would be dressed as the valorous wife, hardworking and obedient, or the pregnant mother, with little ones clinging to her knees or sucking at her breast.

The Tigress, the Creator, the Gracious and Merciful was forced to annul her union with the Great Judge and Mover of All Things. I did not know that she was hidden and dormant, and therefore, I did not know that she could be revealed and revived. My ignorance of the wisdom and beauty of my religion steered me away from my heritage.

As Rodger Kamenetz explains in his book The Jew In The Lotus, "The materialism of much of Jewish life today, the lack of spirituality in our synagogue life and the failure to communicate Judaism as a spiritual path have led, and will lead, many Jews to look elsewhere."

A number of Jews did turn away, but there were also those who discovered its force and depth. Feminists, social activists, theologians and poets, fortified by their contact with change and pluralism and unwilling to divorce themselves from their ethnicity, applied their querying minds to Jewish texts and traditions and discovered that our culture is about possibility, justice, healing and harmony. The disaffected could find common ground with Judaism if its gatekeepers would just open the door and invite them in for some tea with honey.

What is needed? Shchinah, the feminine, must be welcomed back into our house, not as a domestic, but as a respected partner. We are at a turning point, not just in Judaism, but in the story of humankind. Technology, consumerism and amorality have greatly affected our planet. We need Shchinah, not just because she is a healer and a nurturer, but because she is a warrior for justice and compassion. It is the feminine impulse which informs us that everyone is entitled to a life of dignity, that Law holds hands with Mercy and that Discipline dances with Joy.

When that door is opened, the deep healing that we Jews need to undertake will begin because we will perceive that God, our Father and Mother, is indeed everywhere. When we invite in a spirituality that recognizes the divine in each of us and the possibility of cooperatively creating a better world, we will no longer have to fret about "continuity." Instead, Judaism will be a compelling choice because it is a celebration of humanity and life. Emphasizing justice, ethics and a sense of sacredness it will provide the purpose and meaning we post-moderns crave.

In other times, Judaism survived by fencing itself off from destructive forces; today it can bloom by reaching out to the spiritual light of Shchinah.

Plugging the holes in Oslo accord

By Gerald Steinberg in Jerusalem

The government of Benjamin Netanyahu has made many mistakes, but it is not responsible for the impasse in the peace process. The lack of progress is the result of two critical factors beyond Netanyahu's control – continuing Palestinian terrorism and the fundamental weaknesses of the Oslo process itself.

In September 1993, Yitzhak Rabin signed the Declaration of Principles (DoP) negotiated in Oslo, taking Israel down the road he hoped would lead to peace. However, while the road was marked in detail, no destination was indicated. The DoP and subsequent agreements specified a series of Israeli military withdrawals and the transfer of territory to the control of the Palestinian Authority (PA), while the toughest issues, such as borders, settlements, the question of a Palestinian state, and the status of Jerusalem were left to "permanent status negotiations."

The Palestinians have a clear destination – an independent state in all of the West Bank (for the time being) with Jerusalem as its capital. In contrast, Rabin and Shimon Peres never specified Israeli goals and did not hold formal discussions on Israeli options. On these issues, Israeli society is totally divided, with strongly held views across the political spectrum.

Some support a Palestinian state in up to 90 percent of the land (and including most of the Arab population), and dismantling of many Jewish settlements in Judea and Samaria. At the other end of the scale, there is intense opposition to a Palestinian state, which many Israelis fear would be a base for terror against Israel and the West. While committing Israel to a series of interim withdrawals, Rabin and Peres never indicated where along this spectrum they expected permanent status to take Israel.

This is the situation that Netanyahu inherited, along with Arafat's continued calls for jihad and encouragement of terrorism. Nevertheless, Netanyahu did not renounce the DoP as a failed experiment. For 18 months, he avoided the subject with all of its complexities, treading water while looking for alternatives. Now, the Israeli government has finally started to tackle the permanent status issues and on this basis, will decide the details of the further withdrawals.

None of the options is attractive. If Israel turns over a large portion of the land to Arafat, this will allow the Palestinians to unilaterally declare independence. If the Palestinian Authority controls over half of the territory, with contiguity between the northern segment in the Nablus/Shechem area and the southern areas including Hebron, this state will gain wide recognition. Then the Palestinians can avoid the permanent status talks entirely, while waiting for international pressure or another more pliable Israeli government to expand their boundaries. There would be nothing left to negotiate, and Israel would be faced with a "fait accompli."

On the other hand, if Netanyahu limits Israeli withdrawal to relatively small and isolated segments of land, he will be condemned (wrongly) for the failure of the peace process, leading to open conflict with the United States. This would be very costly for Israel and a victory for Arafat.

Thus, the Palestinians are in a no-lose situation and can afford to wait for Israel to make the next move.

In response, Netanyahu has linked the decision on interim withdrawals to the prior establishment of a clear Israeli policy on permanent status. Once the outlines of Israel's permanent status objectives are determined, then the IDF can withdraw from areas that are not included within Israel's vital national interests, and if the PA declares a state, in violation of the Oslo agreement, Israel can live with the consequences.

This is the reason for the slowness of the process and the many maps of possible permanent status boundaries. The decisions will determine the future of Israeli security and the stability of the Middle East. A Palestinian State with control over most of the West Bank and a foothold in Jerusalem will also threaten King Hussein and the Hashemite regime in Jordan.

Perhaps, one day, the Palestinians will demonstrate an ability to live in peace with Israel without terror and hatred and become a constructive element in the region. This day has not arrived and until then, no Israeli government can afford to take decisions with irreversible implications for security and survival.

Oz outlines Jewish diversity

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut in Toronto

I have heard Amos Oz on several occasions and have read some of his books – though not the latest as yet. Whenever he comes to town, he draws a large and devoted audience. A recent evening at Holy Blossom Temple was no exception. Eleven hundred people jammed the synagogue and listened to the 58-year-old from Israel who is his country's best known writer.

He recounted the time when, as a 12-year-old, he had dreamed of blowing up Buckingham Palace in London, in order to protest against British Mideast policy that clearly was weighted in favor of Palestinian Arabs.

"There were a bunch of us" he said, "who had hatched a plan, but what we had in conviction, we lacked in expertise, and so the plan stayed in our minds." (These were not his exact words, but they constitute the essence.)

Oz is as severe a critic of himself as he is of his country. "I love Israel," he said, "even though I often cannot stand it."

His main theme was the essential diversity of the Jewish people – something that he claims existed from the very beginning of its history. He pictured the political spectrum of the early yishuvniks: one that reached from ultra-left to ultra-right and constituted a characteristic that could be found in every aspect of the nation's life. Oz called disagreement with one another the nature of Jewish life, and our ability to shout at each other an aspect of Israel's independence. "We don't have to worry about anybody else complaining about it, for we are not Diaspora Jews," he added.

But Israelis are not violent, he underscored, and the louder they shout the less likely they are to be violent. That is why the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin was such a devastating blow to everyone, whether people liked his policies or disliked them.

He bitterly criticized what he called historical Arab and Israeli stupidities. In 1947, the Arabs could have obtained statehood and much more territory than they are likely to get in any future settlement. Twenty years later, after the Six Day War, Israel had a chance to settle the conflict with a show of magnanimity, rather than being intoxicated by its victory. It too missed its golden opportunity.

He had a similar view of the current religious controversy. To him, there is only one solution in such conflicts and that is to arrive at a compromise. It may be disliked by all parties, but it alone will ultimately create stability.

People are people, he said, with their needs and with their pains, and national origin does not divide them from their common humanity. Arabs and Israelis suffer politically, socially and otherwise from common troubles and as long as we know that, we can arrive at a solution. "Long live our common indigestion!" he proclaimed in conclusion, to laughter and huge applause. It doesn't matter whether you agree with Amos Oz, but you recognize that he is unique in his ability to touch people, whoever they are.

By Robert Sarner in Jerusalem

Last Thursday, a group of English-speaking men converged on a long, rectangular building in Givat Shaul, a religious neighborhood in Jerusalem. After changing out of regular clothes, strapping on the shin pads, taping up sticks and putting the nets in place, they spent the better part of the evening chasing after a puck. Just after 11 p.m, the high-scoring affair was decided in the last minute of play with a deflection in front of the net.

My team's hard-fought 13-12 comeback victory was gratifying, but what I savored most was what draws me back there every week – the action of hockey and its life-affirming link to my childhood in Canada.

I might as well own up from the start that the above-mentioned is not the hockey practised in the winter by any self-respecting player in the "old country." We're talking here... floor hockey.

Before any of you hardened hockey aficionados turn up your nose, first consider the plight of hockey-starved residents in Jerusalem. Agreed, substituting a wooden floor for ice and sneakers for skates makes this a far cry from the hockey I grew up with. But this is as close as you can get to the real thing in the Holy City. Elsewhere in the country, ice hockey has slowly taken root over the past decade. Israel now boasts a national team and a half dozen rinks – just not one anywhere near Jerusalem.

As is the case with most boys growing up in Canada, hockey was an intrinsic part of my childhood. When I was a kid, winter meant only one thing to me – hockey and lots of it. Leaving Canada behind has meant contending with places far less hospitable to my favorite sport.

Before moving to Israel, I lived many years in Paris, not exactly a hockey haven. Yet while there, I played 11 seasons on an amateur team called the Paris Hockey Club (PHC), comprised of surprisingly die-hard French players, and expatriate Canadians and Scandinavians.

My PHC tenure maybe didn't rival being captain of my high school team in Toronto, but it did broaden my hockey horizons. Most memorable were some of our road trips – to Luxembourg for a game against their national team; to an army base in Lahr, Germany, for a game against Canadian soldiers; and to a mountaintop village in the French Alps for an open-air game against a local team.

In late 1990, a couple of months before moving to Israel, I heard that hockey had come to the Middle East. Suddenly my aliyah took on an added allure with the prospect of playing hockey in the Promised Land.

I eventually joined the fledgling Israeli league whose games were played near Tel Aviv in Bat Yam, more than an hour's drive from Jerusalem. Initially, the novelty of playing hockey in Israel inured me to the appalling conditions we had to endure. By North American standards, the rink was an abomination. Square in shape and tiny in size, the rink had woefully inadequate lighting, and ice best described as approximate. Imagine the brutal surprise of being checked heavily into boards that were actually cinder blocks covered with white vinyl sheeting.

To make matters worse, the referees were hopelessly incompetent, which wouldn't have been so bad had it not been for the dirty play that usually went unnoticed. After three seasons of aggravation and near injury, I'd had enough. I'd reached the end of my peripatetic hockey career. At age 40, the last vestige of my Canadian youth had expired and it hurt.

A short while later, I discovered floor hockey in Jerusalem as practised year-round by a group of Canadian, American and Russian immigrants ranging in age from 18 to 48. Although many of the players and much of their equipment may have seen better days, the games are intense – both the play and the frequent disputes made worse by an almost talmudic analysis of infractions, real and imagined. With nets, goalies, end-to-end rushes, dazzling playmaking, blistering shots from the point, and the unmistakable odor of sweating bodies, there is enough resemblance to real hockey for the spirit of the game to live on in this unlikely setting – a gymnasium in the heart of a haredi neighborhood.

I'm now hooked. It's like therapy, and in the heat of the game I almost forget that I'm in the Middle East, living on the lip of a volcano that could erupt at any time. Until it does, you'll know where to find me every Thursday night.

Jews do not control Hollywood

By Sheldon Kirshner

The question, permeated with intimations of anti-Semitism, has been posed ad nauseam: Do Jews control Hollywood?

Two years ago, the actor Marlon Brando declared, "Hollywood is run by Jews." Four years ago, writing in the Spectator, British reporter William Cash made the same point, only more crassly.

A knowing smile crept across Neal Gabler's face when he was asked this perennial question. He has heard it more often than he cares to remember, though he has enlivened the debate with newspaper and magazine pieces.

"You have to be nuanced when you address that question," cautioned Gabler, author of An Empire of Their Own: How the Jews Invented Hollywood, the standard text on the topic.

The short answer, he replied, is that Jews do not control Hollywood. The longer answer is slightly more complex.

Before World War II, the major studios were in the hands of Jewish moguls — the Warner brothers and Louis Mayer, for example — who had founded them. But since then, there have been considerable changes, spurred on by the process of economic globalization.

Today, most of the major studios are managed by Jews, but owned by non-Jews. Jewish-owned studios, however, are largely controlled by stockholders, explained Gabler, who was recently in Toronto to attend the premiere of Simcha Jacobovici's latest documentary, Hollywoodism: Jews, Movies and the American Dream, which is based on his book.

On the creative side of the business, though, Jews are disproportionately represented. This is a fact.

The canard that Jews own Hollywood, lock, stock and barrel, has been perpetrated by the right and the left. Both sides are galled by their inability to define national cultural values through the popular medium of mainstream movies.

"It's all about people on the 'out' who want 'in.' We'll be hearing about it in 100 years from now."

Gabler, who describes himself as an "American culturalist," has been a movie buff since childhood. He has taught film at the University of Michigan and Penn State University, and written film criticism. He wrote An Empire of Their Own, published in 1988, because the subject had never been exhaustively treated. Perhaps, he mused, there was a reluctance "to provide fodder for anti-Semites."

His second book, a biography of a renowned syndicated columnist and broadcaster, is entitled Walter Winchell: Gossip, Power and the Culture of Celebrity. It resembles An Empire of Their Own because it explores the career of an American Jew who was born on the margins of society.

Martin Scorsese, the director, has bought the rights to Walter Winchell, and Steve Zaillian (Schindler's List) has prepared a script.

Gabler, 47, has just finished Life the Movie, a book which illustrates the centrality of films in American culture, and he is currently working on a biography of Walt Disney.

He enjoyed Hollywoodism. "It's very different from the film I would have made," he observed, "but it's very effective and at times moving and affecting. I liked it enormously."

Philly Wohl revisited

At a Passover seder 21 years ago in New York City, Ira Wohl sat next to his mentally disabled cousin, Philly Wohl, whom he liked but had never really taken notice of.

"Shut up already," she said, unmindful of Philly's sensitivities.

The incident unsettled Wohl, a filmmaker who started his career as an editing-room assistant to Orson Welles.

"It struck me that Philly was a real person, and it made me wonder what would happen to him when his parents were gone," explained Wohl, now a psychotherapist practising in Los Angeles.

As he thought about Philly's future, Wohl decided that a movie about his quest for greater independence would be appealing to a mass audience. Hurriedly gathering together a crew to shoot the first scene, at Philly's doctor's office, Wohl embarked on a project which would culminate in Best Boy, his award-winning documentary.

Four years in the making, the heart-felt Best Boy won the 1980 Oscar for best feature documentary and captured first prize at festivals in Toronto, Miami, Houston, Chicago, New York and San Francisco. Best Boy, too, played theatrically and on television all over the world, including Israel.

After Best Boy, Wohl produced and directed a variety of TV shows, notably a series for teenagers on the Nickelodeon network. Last year, after a family visit to New York, Wohl began to think in terms of doing a sequel of Best Boy.

"I hadn't seen Philly in a while, and I was struck by how much his life had changed since Best Boy. He was a different person, much more self-confident. It made me want to know more."

And besides, he added, "people were still asking me about Philly, wondering whether he was alive."

Soon enough, Wohl was back documenting Philly, now 70, in Best Man: 'Best Boy' and All of Us Twenty Years Later, which had its premiere at the recent Toronto International Film Festival.

Funded by American, British and French TV networks, the 90-minute film charts Philly's progress in a group home, following the death of his parents, and documents his affecting relationship with his sister Frances, his surrogate mother. Best Man, which Wohl calls a film about "the value of family," climaxes with Philly's bar mitzvah in a New York City Conservative synagogue.

Touchingly, Wohl describes it as "a bar mitzvah for a son I never had."

Philly, he disclosed, delighted in making Best Boy and Best Man, which is likely to hit Canadian theatres in 1998. "It was never a problem getting him to cooperate," said Wohl. "He loved me and the crew to be around him. And he trusted the idea."

Wohl did not let him down. Philly liked Best Boy, if only because he associates it with a sense of camaraderie and the good food at the wrap party.

Philly has yet to see Best Man. But Wohl is confident he won't be disappointed. "I think he'll enjoy it. It was a good experience for him."

Considered by psychiatrists to be "very slow but normal," Philly has a " happy and full life," in Wohl's estimation. "He can live in the group home for as long as he lives. His life is set."

Philly's IQ is in the 30 to 40 range. "But his IQ doesn't tell you about his personality," adds Wohl. "He's a very highly socialized person."

Philly, as well, is quite aware of his Jewishness, though Wohl does not know how he filters it through his consciousness. "On an emotional level, he understands the concept of the bar mitzvah, maybe more than we all do."

Although he left the film business several years ago, after concluding he would be happier in psychotherapy, his first love, Wohl has not entirely jettisoned it. Two years ago, he combined both professions by making a documentary about psychological diagnosis. And now he is planning two new documentaries, the first about heroin and the second about the last Orthodox Jewish community in Mississippi.

Ontario farm helped train for life in Israel

By ERICA SIMMONS

If the Zionist youth training farm or hachsharah at Smithville, Ont., is not mentioned in the histories of Zionism, or even in accounts of Canadian Jewish history, it is not because Smithville is insignificant, but rather because it fits so seamlessly into the larger sweep of Zionist history.

The Hechalutz hachsharah at Smithville was one of a handful of such farms in North America and one of hundreds in the Diaspora that prepared young people for life as chalutzim (pioneers) in Palestine and the emergent State of Israel.

The concept of such training farms is thought to have originated with Joseph Trumpeldor, a Russian Jew who had joined a collective farming settlement (called a kvutzah) in the Galilee, but was deported by the Ottoman Turks in 1917.

The call was heeded by thousands of young people across Europe who joined the new movement (called Hechalutz, which means the pioneer). By 1919, the first graduates had arrived in Palestine; in 1921, the World Hechalutz organization was founded in Carlsbad, and by 1935, the movement claimed almost 100,000 members spread throughout Europe, North and South America, South Africa and Iraq.

What makes these farms interesting is not just their practical purpose (training young urban Jews for agricultural work), but their equally intense commitment to serving ideological goals. These young people were not only learning to be farmers but were also becoming pioneers and revolutionaries.

The future Jewish state was envisioned as a revolutionary, egalitarian workers' society with the kibbutz or communal agricultural settlement as its social foundation and ideological essence.

In 1944, Hashomer Hatzair bought a farm for this purpose. In 1946, the Canadian Zionist labor movement decided to open a hachsharah in Smithville, which would take in young people from all sections of the Labor Zionist movement.

The mandate of the Smithville hachsharah was to provide chalutzim with experience in agricultural and manual labor as well as in communal living; and ultimately to produce a garin (literally seed) or tightly knit group of people, each of which would form the nucleus of a kibbutz in the Jewish state. The motto on the hachsharah's letterhead, however, said only: "To provide Canadian youth with scientific agricultural training." Such practical skills, of course, would help the chalutzim to qualify for immigration certificates under British Mandatory policy.

An unsigned article in a 1950 newsletter, written by a young member, conveys the earnest fervor of these young Canadians as they strived to remake themselves in the service of a cause:

"Chalutziut is not a matter of temporary intoxication. It is...not so simple to dedicate one's entire life to something that may be prosaic, very arduous and perhaps unglamorous....Hechalutz is a movement which has taught that one's actions must be identical with one's thoughts and that no sort of artificial chasm should exist between the way a person lives and thinks."

The graduates of the Smithville hachsharah who arrived in Israel in the pre-state period or even after independence faced severe hardship: food was scarce, malaria and polio were a constant threat, and all settlers were on permanent guard against Arab attack. For some of the young people, meeting the survivors of the Holocaust and learning to take orders from already-established kibbutzniks came as a shock, as did the realization that kibbutz life was a little less utopian than they had imagined.

The Smithville chalutzim had been a relatively autonomous group, tightly-knit, from similar social and cultural backgrounds, enthusiastic and highly idealistic. For some, the difficulty of adjusting proved overwhelming, and they returned to Canada. But many stayed in Israel, and remain ardent kibbutzniks and Zionists to this day.

The essence of Moses

By RACHAEL TURKIENICZ

In the Torah readings this month we meet Moses. Most people are familiar with the circumstances of Moses' birth. To protect him from death in the Nile, Yochevet, his mother, builds a tiny ark and sets him among the reeds. Miriam, his sister, watches over him as the daughter of Pharaoh finds him and adopts him as her own by naming him.

Miriam suggests bringing a Jewish woman to nurse the infant and proceeds to bring Yochevet, his natural mother, as a nursemaid. In this way, Moses' natural mother becomes his foster mother and his adopted mother becomes his "natural" mother.

Moses' father figure is also replaced several times. Moses' natural father is supplanted by Pharaoh, who is later supplanted by Jethro, Moses' father-in-law.

In fact, attempting to map out Moses' family tree would immediately show the confusing twists and turns prevalent within the text. What results is identity confusion. Moses is born an Israelite, raised as an Egyptian who affiliates with a Midianite priest.

It is only when facing the burning bush that Moses fully understands who he is. When God explains to Moses that he is meeting his ancestral God, Moses fully realizes his own identity. One might say that upon being introduced to God, Moses is introduced to himself.

But the question remains, why would the text present such a confusing background for Moses? It almost appears as if Moses' early identity is erased through conflicting parental figures.

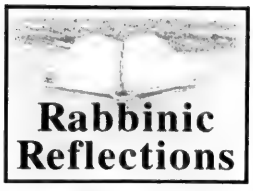
The answer might be found in the one instance of Moses' life in Egypt that the text describes in detail. One day Moses ventures outside the palace and sees an Egyptian beating an Israelite. We are not sure whether Moses is yet aware of his own Israelite identity, but we are told that he looked around and "upon seeing there was no person there," he attacked and killed the Egyptian.

If the earlier text has succeeded in erasing Moses' identity, the issue becomes clear. Moses is not reacting to the situation from a sense of nationality, since his nationality is blurred. Once we are severed from the external ties of identity that define us, what is left is our essence. Moses is confronting the situation as a person, with his essence. Yet if his core told him to defend the helpless, why did he look around to see that no one was there?

The rabbis say, "In a place where there is no human being, be a human being." This is not referring to a place physically devoid of people, rather to a place where people are so caught up by who they are and how they appear that they neglect to respond as human beings. Moses realized that "there was no one there," and he stepped forward to be a human being.

In our community, people are often identified by who they are or by the status they have achieved in their lives. Moses' confusing beginnings teach us what can happen if these external identifiers become the focus. We could be standing in a room, idly facing an injustice, and find that no person was there.

Jewish Life



The righteous person

By RABBI CHAIM STEINMETZ

Is being flawless good enough? At first glance, this seems to be a silly question. If someone avoids making mistakes, he is perfect! However, this issue is a serious one; it has been debated by many Jewish thinkers.

On his deathbed, Jacob addresses his 12 sons. He speaks to each son individually, mixing criticism, praise and prophecy. To his three oldest children, Reuben, Simon and Levi, Jacob offers a sharp rebuke for their past actions. The midrash (Bereshit 99:8) tells us that Jacob's fourth son, Judah, is worried that he will also be criticized for his treatment of Tamar. However, despite Judah's mistakes, Jacob sings Judah's praises.

Why isn't Judah criticized? To answer this, we must take a closer look at the story of Judah and Tamar. Tamar marries the eldest of Judah's sons, Er. Er dies and following the ancient custom, a family member (in this case his brother Onan) is responsible for marrying the childless widow in a levirate marriage. The children of this levirate marriage will be considered Er's children and will continue Er's bloodline. Onan refuses to have children with Tamar, and through coitus interruptus, avoids making her pregnant. Onan dies as well and Judah tells Tamar to go home and wait for a third son, Shelah, to get older, even though he has no intention of letting Shelah marry Tamar.

At this point, Tamar takes action. She dresses up as a prostitute and waits for Judah, who consorts with her. Because Tamar is heavily veiled, Judah does not know her identity. She takes his signet ring and staff as collateral for her fee and becomes pregnant from this union.

After Judah hears that Tamar is pregnant (violating her relationship with the males in his family), he insists that Tamar be given the death penalty. But when Tamar produces Judah's signet ring, Judah recognizes what has happened, publicly admits that he was wrong and hypocritical in his treatment of Tamar, and takes her as his wife.

The midrash points to Judah's final admission as the reason he is praised by Jacob. Judah's willingness to admit his own failure and to take responsibility is a form of repentance. In being a baal tshuvah (a repentant person), Judah has changed from a selfish, irresponsible person who consorts with a prostitute, to a man of responsibility who preserves Tamar's reputation by making an embarrassing admission in public.

In chassidic thought, Judah is seen as the paradigm of the baal tshuvah. There is a talmudic debate as to whether the baal tshuvah (repentant person) is superior to the tzaddic gamur (the perfectly righteous). The opinion that the baal tshuvah is superior is unusual. Why should the tzaddik gamur be penalized because he never sinned? How can repenting be superior to never sinning at all?

One answer to these questions is found in the writings of the 19th-century chassidic thinker Rav Tzaddok. There is a problem with being perfectly righteous only when such a person is afflicted with perfectionism. This type of righteous person is always acting defensively and is not flexible or dynamic. The ultimate perfection is to be a person who constantly improves, like the baal tshuvah. What Judah's actions teach us is that greatness lies in dynamism and personal growth, not in a lifeless perfection.

Radio, TV available

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

Before there was the World Wide Web or the Internet or e-mail or any of the high-tech communication we now take for granted, there was short wave radio. There was a special magic being able to turn on a radio, fiddle with the knobs and with some luck tune into a station from half-way across the world. Short wave radio, of course, still exists. But through the Internet, far more people can now listen to the world – easily and relatively cheaply.

Today, I'm going to begin to look at the history of radio in Israel and visit the numerous sites that let you listen to both pre-recorded and live radio and even watch television shows right on your computer.

First a few technical notes. Setting up your computer to receive these stations is easy. The majority of the radio sites in Israel (and around the world) make use of the free RealPlayer program which can be downloaded at [http://www.real.com/products/player/download_player.html]. Even if you already have RealPlayer installed, make sure you have the most recent version (currently 5.0). The radio stations will either play back within your Netscape or Explorer browser or will automatically open a separate RealPlayer program. Sound quality depends on the speed of your Internet connection and on the computer sending the programming. I have found the audio quality of many of the stations are somewhere between local AM and FM radio stations.

You can find a very good introduction to Israel's electronic media at [http://www.israel-mfa. gov.il/facts/culture/elecmed.html]. What started out as the Voice of Jerusalem in 1936 has expanded into a system that includes private, military and government radio, television and cable TV networks. And that doesn't include the various unauthorized offshore or "pirate" radio stations that have come and gone over the years.

Reshet Bet (Israel Radio's news network) has its main site at [http://bet.netvision.net.il/]. There you'll find links to the station's broadcast schedule, photos of their studios and the station's live radio site [http://www.netvision.net.il/reshet_bet/bet.ram]. I often like to start it up and just let in play in the background as I'm doing my work.

Most of what you'll hear from Israel is in Hebrew. However, you can listen to a half-hour English language newscast at [http://www.virtual.co.il/city_services/news/kolra.htm]. You can even have a transcript of the news e-mailed to you if you join the Kol News List [http://www.jer1.co.il/city_services/lists/kol-news/].

While at the Reshet Bet site, don't miss the link to their marvelous radio show, InterBet [http://www.netvision.net.il/interbet/]. InterBet is the station's weekly program focusing on Israel, the Arab world and the Internet. You can listen to the most recent two-hour program at [http://www.netvision.net.il/interbet/interbet.ram]. Or you can just browse the hundreds of links mentioned in previous programs [http:// nvfw.netvision.net.il/interbet/sites_.phtml].

By the way, Israel Radio's Reshet Gimmel [http://teletel.co.il/gimmel/] also has a small Web site but doesn't provide any online programming except for a few jingles.

Another very popular broadcaster is Galei Tzahal, operated by the IDF [http://dns.glz.co.il/~ofer/English/]. You can also listen in to the latest Hebrew newscast at [http://www. glz.co.il/~ofer/Hebrew/News/Thenews.ram]. And if you have Hebrew fonts installed you read the latest news at [http://www.giz.co.il/~ofer/Hebrew/News/newest.html]. For more information, see the Galei Tzahal Fan Site [http://www.geocities.com/South Beach/Marina/9843/].

Next week, we'll listen in to some private radio stations in Israel and look at the country's history with pirate radio stations.

Lubavitch launches new shul

By LEILA SPEISMAN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Jews in the developing Bathurst Street-Elgin Mills area of Richmond Hill no longer have to hike six kilometres to get to shul.

Chabad Lubavitch of Richmond Hill has held services in the area since shortly before this past Rosh Hashanah.

Over 100 people attended the Rosh Hashanah services held at MacKillop Public School. The average Shabbat attracts over 50 people, according to enthusiastic spiritual leader Rabbi Mendel Bernstein.

(Afficionados of The Radio Show on CJMR will recognize Rabbi Bernstein from his Friday divrei Torah. He is also director of Lubavitch Day Camp in Thornhill.)

Rabbi Bernstein told The CJN that the impetus for the new shul came from Lubavitch, which saw Elgin Mills as a fast-growing Jewish community.

"We investigated the area and found that there was no other shul [nearby] of any denomination."

Although the organization is still very informal, Shabbat is a going concern. Besides the main service, there is an optional service with a discussion group halfway through led by Toby Bernstein, two children's programs and a kiddush.

"It turns the whole house into a shul," Rabbi Bernstein said.

There was a Chanukah program and Rabbi Bernstein is planning a series of classes to be held in peoples' homes, on a variety of topics, such as modern technology and Torah, and mystical issues. He is also planning a Shabbaton.

"A lot of lay people are interested in volunteering – everyone feels a part of what is going on."

Rabbi Bernstein had special words of praise for his wife, who runs the children's programs, prepares the kiddush and copes with having her home turned into a shul every week.

"It's a lot of work, but it's very rewarding," he said.

Shul member Danny Klady said he enjoys the atmosphere and the good relationship between the rabbi and the congregation.

"You know everybody, and you have a chance to grow with the community," he said.

Lubavitch is also planning a new community centre, including a shul, near Bathurst and Highway 7, to serve the new community there, and "to provide additional space for its growing programs," notes Rabbi Aaron Grossbaum, director of Chabad Lubavitch of Southern Ontario.

It will be called The Ernest Manson Lubavitch Community Centre.

A hearing to determine when construction will begin is scheduled for Jan. 8, he said.

For more information about the new Richmond Hill shul, call Rabbi Bernstein, at 905-731-7000. That is also the number for Lubavitch activities in general.

Arditti remembered for helping those with MS

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Perla Arditti was compared to the lights of Chanukah at a memorial service held here recently for her shloshim (one-month anniversary of her death).

The lobby of the Leah Posluns Theatre was packed with over 200 people remembering the St. John, New Brunswick native who died suddenly of a pulmonary embolism on Nov. 6 after battling multiple sclerosis (MS) for 15 years.

"You light the menorah in the middle of winter – this little light that seems to dispel all the darkness...She was literally that little light," said her rabbi and longtime friend, Rabbi Mitch Mandel of Aish HaTorah.

Arditti, who was 38, was the executive director and driving force behind the MS Access Support Association, a multi-faceted resource she dreamed up to offer fitness programs, counselling, educational programs and life skills workshops in a Jewish context to people with MS. The association, with activities at the Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC), serves Jewish and non-Jewish members.

After moving here in 1982, Arditti worked as a youth adviser at Adath Israel Congregation and was active in United Jewish Appeal.

Her MS symptoms were alleviated temporarily in the early 1990s with the then experimental drug COP-1, which she received through Israel's Hadassah Hospital. In 1992, having progressed from a wheelchair to a cane, she was running two home-based businesses and freelancing as a mortgage broker.

Over 6,000 people in Toronto are known to have MS. Typical symptoms of the disease, which breaks down myelin (the substance that covers nerves), include weakness, visual disturbances, fatigue, poor balance and lack of coordination.

Gordon Wolfe, executive director, Jewish Family and Child Service (JF&CS), called Arditti's courage in the face of her illness "a shining example."

Wolfe met Arditti in 1993 when she approached him to discuss the MS Access Support Association. "Perla was one persistent woman. One could not help but be swept up by her enthusiasm and commitment," he said.

JF&CS, along with the BJC (then the Jewish Community Centre) co-sponsored the fledgling project, but Arditti herself raised seed money before funding from UJA Federation came through.

Arditti was always looking for ways to help those with MS, said Selwyn Janit of the York South Chapter of the MS Society of Canada's Ontario division.

Perla Arditti

"On every occasion I met with her, she demonstrated her wonderful zest for life...There were many lessons in living that Perla by being just Perla...had to teach us."

Avrum Rosensweig, who spoke briefly and led the program, had worked with Arditti on charity events. "All of us who knew Perla knew she had real holiness within her," he said.

Rosensweig told Renee and Dr. Joseph Arditti, who had travelled from New Brunswick, that their daughter "helped define real greatness." Arditti is also survived by a brother, Eliezer.

"Perla was the social worker, psychologist, rabbi, and priest for so many with MS," said Lorne Alter, president of the association, who organized the shloshim service. "She dispensed advice with confidence and insight, and listened with an open heart.

"I marvel at the way she managed a situation that would have overwhelmed someone of a lesser character," said Alter.

Rabbi Mandell called Arditti a "tzedekus – a righteous woman – in the truest sense...whatever was right, that's what she was committed to. Her moods didn't stop her. Her sickness didn't stop her. People didn't stop her."

The rabbi urged those in attendance to remember that Arditti's "light still shines, because the light of a soul never dies. We just need to take that light and without diminishing it, we need to light our own lights and our own potential."

The one-hour service also included two songs and a reading by the Alexander Singers, as well as tributes by association members Cheryl Kulback, Mindy Pearlman, Ronna Dash and Joan Jenkyn.

Community Matters

THE GREAT CAMPAIGN '98

It was history in the making at Thornhill's Sephardic Kehila Centre when more than 350 volunteers and supporters gathered to celebrate the closing of one of UJA Federation's most successful fundraising drives.

And there was much to celebrate as the 1998 campaign winds down toward a projected total of $36.5 million - $1million more than last year. More than 30,000 community members contributed to the 1998 campaign, which began last August. In the last two years, an additional 5,000 community members have become UJA Federation donors.

Funds raised by UJA Federation will help support programs and services for Jews living here in Toronto, in Israel and all over the world. Many UJA Federation funded agencies are counting more than ever on financial assistance to help meet the growing needs of the most vulnerable members of the community, especially the elderly and the poor.

In addition to a stronger economy and increased awareness about UJA Federation's work in the community, Campaign '98 Chair Leo Goldhar attributes the campaign's success to the more than 2,000 volunteers who pitched in over the last several months. "You're the best team a community could ever have," said Goldhar.

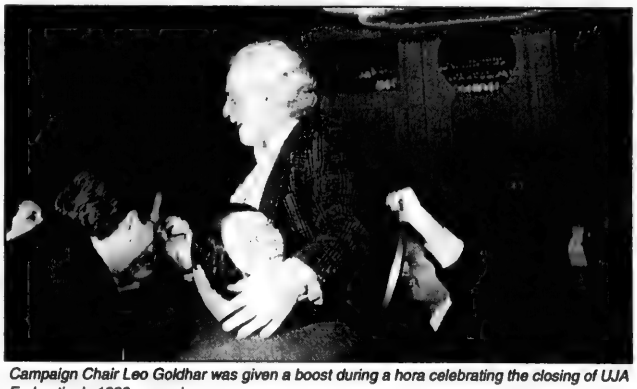
The campaign closing celebration was also the first time UJA Federation held a major event at the new Sephardic Kehila Centre. Maurice Benzacar and Esther Benquesus welcomed the crowd to the Centre. Benquesus, whose family was the primary force behind the new building, said "we look forward to hosting many more UJA Federation events."

Benzacar, a leader in the Sephardic community, recounted how the UJA Federation funded Jewish Immigrant Aid Service helped his family settle in Toronto after moving from Morocco 40 years ago and said the Kehila Centre is a "testament to the valuable contributions immigrants make to the Jewish community."

A performance by Canadian singer/songwriter Amy Sky and her husband, recording artist Marc Jordan, began the evening on just the right note before CBC television personality Ralph Benmergui took over as master of ceremonies, delivering his own Sephardic brand of Jewish humour.

"It felt like we were part of one big family celebrating a simcha," said Brenda Kaman, who attended the closing with her husband Norman. The Kamans, who became involved with UJA Federation after going on Mission 3000 in 1996, said they "can't wait to be back in Israel" celebrating the country's 50th anniversary as participants on Mission 98 in February.

Veteran UJA Federation campaigner Abe Zuckerman has been to many campaign closings but says he's never seen so many "new and young faces" in attendance. "It warmed my heart to see the next generation caring so much about their community," said 84 year old Zuckerman. "Am Yisrael Chai."



Campaign Chair Leo Goldhar was given a boost during a hora celebrating the closing of UJA Federation's 1998 campaign.

It was a busy year for everyone who worked on the 1998 UJA Federation campaign, but according to the foursome who led the fundraising effort, the hectic pace and jam packed days were all worthwhile.

Even before the August 25 launch, 1998 UJA Federation Campaign Chair Leo Goldhar, Vice-Chairs David Engel and Glennie Lindenberg, and Agi Mandel, Chair of Women's Campaign, were working hard behind the scenes to make sure all the ingredients for success were in place. Each brought their own unique style and objectives to UJA Federation and each say they got so much more from the experience than they put in.

Leo Goldhar, who spent endless hours meeting and talking with members of the local community, UJA Federation agency recipients and Jews in some of the most isolated communities in the world, said it was the people who made Campaign '98 a success. "I have met so many incredible people this past year," says Goldhar. "I can't thank them all enough for what they've done."

Goldhar, who will remain active with UJA Federation after his term, feels "honoured and priviledged to have led a world class fundraising drive."

Getting the message out about how UJA Federation dollars help improve the quality of life for hundreds of thousands was a priority for the 1998 campaign. "We've had a lot of success in delivering our message and we've increased UJA Federation's visibility and profile, not just in the Jewish community but beyond," says Glennie Lindenberg.

Lindenberg is also pleased about the growing involvement of past UJA Federation Chairmen. "Their experience and knowledge are a tremendous resource," she explains, "and they are truly committed to the betterment of our community."

Campaign highlights for David Engel include the Ottawa Fly-In, one of UJA Federation's newest programs, Super Sunday that raised $2.6 million, and the high quality of volunteers and campaign leadership. "We had some exceptionally innovative programs that drew overwhelming attendance," says Engel. "This year, UJA Federation became the place to be."

"I'm so proud to be a part of this incredibly generous community," says Agi Mandel, who headed up UJA Federation's $4 million Women's Campaign. "Working with such terrific people for such an important cause is tremendously rewarding."

Shaarei Shomayim gets new rabbi

By LEILA SPEISMAN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Rabbi Moshe Shulman, new rabbi of Shaarei Shomayim Congregation doesn't like labels, either for himself or for others.

"I pride myself that I am hard to put in a box. I take each issue on its own merit," the 32-year-old rabbi told The CJN, in a recent interview in his new office, chock-a-block with unpacked boxes.

The only exceptions he makes, are Zionist and Orthodox – he lived and studied for a time in Israel, and received smichah, rabbinic ordination, from the chief rabbinate of Jerusalem. He also received an undergraduate degree in computer science, and is currently working on his master's degree in education from Touro College in New York City.

That quality of openness stood him in good stead in his last position as the rabbi of House of Jacob-Mikveh Israel synagogue in Calgary. The only Orthodox rabbi in the city, he was able to work with both the non-Orthodox clergy and the outside community.

"There are issues on which you will see eye to eye, and some you won't. But it's important to have dialogue, as long as everyone understands that there will be areas where you just have to agree to disagree."

He left Calgary, he explained, because the day school education system only goes up until Grade 7. He and his Australian-born wife Baila have four children, Tziporah, Hadassah, Shmuel and Avital, who now attend Eitz Chaim.

He has always been interested in adult education, and in Calgary he established the Torah Learning Centre for just that purpose. Rabbi Shulman plans to continue teaching. "The very word rabbi means teacher," he says.

Contrary to some who say that Talmud is the only important subject for Jews to study, Rabbi Shulman especially enjoys teaching Tanach, Bible.

"Tanach is exciting and dynamic. I know it is an unfamiliar attitude, but at the end of the day everything is based on it."

But a rabbi must also, he believes, be an authority on Halachah, a spiritual mentor, a role model for the congregation in terms of religiosity and commitment, and a counsellor and advisor.

The son of a pulpit rabbi, Rabbi Shulman sees the rabbinate as "a wonderful way to grow in Yiddishkeit. You have the opportunity to fulfil your own growth in Torah and Judaism, and help others to do the same."

A rabbi can also touch people in special ways, he said, by showing care and comfort to the grieving, and by helping to celebrate the good times, such as weddings.

Rabbi Shulman has training in another field – he is a mohel.

"I was the only Orthodox mohel in Western Canada," he said, describing how he travelled to Saskatoon, Winnipeg and Vancouver in that capacity.

While he acknowledges that his main role in Toronto is to fulfil his responsibilities at Shaarei Shomayim, he says that he hopes to continue to work as a mohel when he can.

He also plans to become involved with the Vaad Harabonim, particularly in its kashrut responsibilities, a role he played in Calgary, where he was the rav hamachshur, supervising rabbi, for the city, including its four bakeries, a butcher, dairies, and a kosher restaurant.

Rabbi Shulman says that the danger in the Jewish world today comes from ignorance and apathy towards Judaism.

"We are losing a generation, and we have been for years," he said. "The only way to stem the tide is to reach out, open doors, and welcome everbody into the synagogue.

"We have to show that Judaism is vibrant and exciting – a strong force in peoples' lives. People want to feel that it [Judaism] is a constructive force, not a destructive one."

This can be done, he said, by promoting more and better education, and by making a concerted effort to bring everyone closer together.

Alleged war criminal dies

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The biological clock facing war crimes prosecutors has claimed another victim.

Alleged Nazi war criminal Erichs Tobiass died on New Year's Eve in Toronto without ever facing the charges against him. He is the third man of 14 facing deportation to have died before allegations of war crimes were weighed by a court. Others to have escaped a legal reckoning include Josef Nemsila of Oshawa and Anatanas Kenstavicius, of Hope, B.C. Kenstavicius died last year on the first day of his hearing.

Tobiass, who was 86, was one of three alleged war criminals whose cases have become bogged down in the courts over preliminary legal issues. Their cases reached the Supreme Court of Canada over allegations of government interference in judicial independence. Although the Supreme Court refused to stay the cases, they have been returned to the Federal Court where federal prosecutors are seeking directions on procedural issues.

Tobiass was alleged to have been a member of the Arajs Kommando, a Latvian auxiliary police unit that collaborated with the Nazis in rounding up and murdering tens of thousands of Jews.

A senior lieutenant in the unit, Konrads Kalejs, was deported recently from Canada for commanding the external guards at a concentration camp near Riga. Unlike Tobiass, Kalejs never became a Canadian citizen.

Irving Abella, chair of Canadian Jewish Congress' war crimes committee, said that even though Tobiass "beat the system by dying," he took comfort in knowing that "his last years in Canada were made more uncomfortable by having to face these charges."

Beth Tikvah committee reaches out to community

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Lou VanDelman makes himself available to fellow congregation members during the most difficult time of their lives.

He and a group of eight men from Beth Tikvah Synagogue take turns leading Kaddish services at shivah houses.

"They call me if they need me," VanDelman told The CJN. "This is something you don't turn down. It's a mega mitzvah to do it...You try to give the bereaved something — that's what the chesed committee is all about."

The committee provides a multi-pronged support system to bereaved congregation members: committee members make shivah calls and also operate a telephone help line to support families after the shivah period.

Working in a different capacity, another subgroup of the chesed committee is responsible for reaching out to visitors and congregations members by welcoming them at Shabbat and holiday services and special shul events.

The chesed committee program, which has also encompassed a lecture series on subjects such as stress, AIDS awareness and issues pertaining to intermarriage, recently netted Beth Tikvah the 1997 Gold Solomon Schechter (GSS) award in the category of unique programming.

Heather Shapero, president of Beth Tikvah said she was thrilled that the GSS award had been bestowed upon her synagogue for the chesed committee.

More than 900 Conservative congregations across North America, compete in various categories which include adult education, social action and Jewish music and drama, Shapero said. Beth Tikvah also won a GSS in the category of Israel/Masorti for its Jerusalem 3000 program, she added.

For Mona Brown, chair of the chesed committee, receiving the award "was the experience of a lifetime." But she was quick to give credit to the many committee members whose commitment has made the program such a success.

"We're trying to create a community in which congregation members can feel welcome and comfortable," she said.

"There's a lot of pain out there these days. Some people feel they don't need this support from an agency. To get this support from their synagogue makes the synagogue more like a community."

She said the chesed committee, which now has more than 130 members, was initiated by Rabbi Wayne Allen, Beth Tikvah's spiritual leader, roughly two years ago.

He came up with the idea because he felt that it was important for the congregation to reach out to members in their time of need. "We know that mourning doesn't end with shivah," he said.

Beth Tikvah is large shul with many needs that can't all be met by one rabbi, and so there was a need to enlist people to reach out to new members, new mothers, the bereaved and the homebound, he explained.

Cantor Efraim Sapir trained a group of men to lead services at the shivah houses, and shivah visits were organized with the cooperation of the sisterhood, Brown explained.

The synagogue office has received letters from members who wrote how much they appreciated the support, she said. "It was very moving."

Telecare, the telephone help line, is manned by volunteers trained in a six-part program by professionals, who have also volunteered their time, Brown noted. She said she has received many requests for the Telecare training manual, which was written by Bonita Greenbaum.

Because of the large size of the congregation there's "sometimes a danger" that members might "feel lost," but the chesed committee "bridges that gap in size" and meets some of the personal needs of members, Rabbi Allen said.

Doctors, shul help kibbutzim

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO —The Arava desert region of the Negev is better equipped than it has been to deal with heart attacks.

Thanks to a group of Toronto doctors and Temple Emanu-El, two semi-automatic heart defibrillators worth $10,000 each,'will serve the needs of two Reform kibbutzim, Yahel and Lotan and two other kibbutzim, Grofit and Yodvata

This fast-growing area is a 45-minute trip from the nearest medical help in Eilat.

A 10-year-old boy visiting from a Reform congregation in Cleveland might have been saved if the defibrillators had arrived at Kibbutz Yahel 48 hours earlier last June. He suffered a cardio-pulmonary arrest while swimming with friends in the kibbutz pool and could not be revived.

About 20 nurses, paramedics and ambulance attendants from the area were taught to use the defibrillators by Dr. Gary Mann, president, Toronto Graduates Club, Phi Delta Epsilon Medical Fraternity.

They were delivered to the kibbutz by Dr. Mann, his wife Sari, and their two children, on behalf of the doctors and Temple Emanu-El.

The donation was described as a "gift of life" by Dr. T. Shimoni of the Josephtal Hospital in Eilat.

Mann discussed the possibility of Canadian doctors coming to Israel to help train personnel in the Arava desert with Ido Znulun of the Eliot Regional Council.

A special relationship between Kibbutz Yahel, the flagship of Israel's Reform movement, and Temple Emanu-El, started 13 years ago. In 1985 the temple provided landscaping for the area above Yahel's bomb shelter, and built a children's playground.

The temple's teenagers visit Yahel frequently, and Yahel's shlichim keep in touch with people in Toronto.

A defibrillator delivers an electric shock to the heart if its rhythm becomes erratic, explained Mann, an emergency physician at Ajax and Pickering General Hospital.

It is called semi-automatic, he said, because it is capable of analyzing a patient's heart rhythm so that the operator can decide whether to deliver a "counter shock."

Community activist Freedhoff dies at 91

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Pearl Freedhoff, a well-known activist in the Toronto Jewish community, recently died at Baycrest Centre, where she had been a resident for five years. She was 91.

The funeral was held at Beth Tzedec Synagogue.

The Toronto-born Freedhoff graduated from the University of Toronto in 1926. She met her late husband, Samuel Freedhoff on the skating rink in the Varsity Arena when he was a dental student. The couple were married in 1927.

Freedhoff was a social worker, life insurance sales person, bridal counsellor and tour leader.

"She was one of Toronto's most sought-after bridal counsellors and she conducted her last wedding at the age of 80," said her daughter, Judith Golden.

Freedhoff led tours to Israel, Asia and Florida, and Golden said that her mother had travelled to Yugoslavia at the age of 84.

A longtime member of the Progressive Conservative party, Freedhoff was included in many Tory receptions and meetings.

She taught her family and friends to give back to the community and demonstrated this philosophy in her own life. She served on many executive committees and boards, including national and Toronto WIZO, the women's auxiliary of the Jewish Home for the Aged, Goel Tzedec and Beth Tzedec synagogues.

She was awarded the Ontario bicentennial medal in 1984.

She is survived by her daughter, a son, Stephen, and five grandchildren.

By LENN ZONDER
Connecticut Jewish Ledger

NEW HAVEN — A controversy has erupted at the University of New Haven after the student newspaper ran an ad from a Holocaust revisionist group.

The ad, which ran Nov. 11 in the Charger Bulletin, was an offer of $50,000 to anyone able to arrange for a major television network to air a Holocaust revisionist film.

The Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust (CODOH), a San Diego-based organization directed by well-known Holocaust denier Bradley Smith, paid for the ad.

The editor of the Charger Bulletin, Allyson Barrett, a junior from Milford, said nobody on her staff checked the two-column by 10-inch display ad before publication.

"We do not have enough resources to check every ad that comes into the paper," Barrett said. "To be honest, I wasn't sure what the ad was about."

Robert Leikind, Connecticut regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai Brith, said Barrett was naive for taking an ad she knew nothing about.

"We sent a letter to all the college newspapers in Connecticut warning them to be on the lookout for the advertisement," said Leikind.

"It's an editor's obligation to exercise discretion. I [don't mean to say] she has to agree with the material. She does need to check its source."

Leikind said he sent the warning letter to all campus newspapers in the state after learning other publications at Colgate, Cleveland State and Nebraska universities had printed the ad.

Barrett claims the Charger Bulletin never received Leikind's letter.

As of Dec. 4, the paper had only published one letter on the subject.

However, in a reply to that letter, Barrett noted that the ad had "offended some readers."

In the one letter to the editor that was printed, Prof. Steven Ross called the ad an "insidious attempt at dragging unsuspecting college students into an area of revisionist history that would be laughable if it were not such a serious matter.

"It should be our [university] policy not to accept ads that are directly connected with groups like the KKK, Aryan Brotherhood, White Resistance, or organizations that front for them. Free speech is not an issue when it comes to offensive 'paid for' advertising."

In a published response to the letter to the editor, Barrett said, "There was no proof that the CODOH is a front for any type of white supremacist group. Even if this ad blatantly promoted such social distortion, the Bulletin would still take the First Amendment into consideration when deciding whether or not to print it."

She went on to say that the advertisement "only opens students' eyes to the fact that some people believe that there is room for debate when discussing Holocaust history. The paper is an advocate of First Amendment rights, and newspapers are public forums for open debate in any form.

"This advertisement, by these standards, is a perfect example of how this belief can be applied," she added.

Taking issue with Barrett, Leikind said, "We asked her to publicly repudiate the ad. She didn't. She made it a free-speech issue, which it is not.

"I asked her if she would have published a similar ad from a racist organization claiming that the 300-year history of African-American slavery and segregation never happened or was just an attempt by the Africans to gain sympathy from their fellow Americans.

"She replied, she wouldn't have. What's the difference?"

The film referred to in the advertisement is called The Video of the Century. It was produced by CODOH and is a "documentary" about Auschwitz.

The film purports to be an interview between the "Jewish scholar," David Cole, and Dr. Franciszek Piper, curator of the Holocaust Museum at Auschwitz. According to the ad, the film "takes you inside the disputed Auschwitz 'gas chamber.'" (The words gas chamber are in quotes.)

It goes on to claim that the video has gained international recognition and then quotes several "sources," including a U.S. congresswoman; Rabbi Abraham Cooper, associate director of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre; and Yehuda Bauer, professor of Holocaust studies, Hebrew University, Tel Aviv.

Leikind said the quotes were taken out of context.

OTTAWA — The first night of Chanukah this year marked a double celebration around the world, as government leaders participated in Chanukah candlelighting ceremonies that also highlighted the beginning of the festivities for the 50th anniversary of Israel's independence.

In the nation's capital, close to 1,000 people, including leaders of both the local Jewish community and the national Jewish community, MPs, senators, diplomats from various countries, clergy, media representatives and other invited guests took part in an elaborate Chanukah party in the Hall of Honor on Parliament Hill. The elegant setting served as a backdrop for the large chanukiah waiting to be lit.

The evening was organized and hosted by Israel's ambassador to Canada David Sultan and his wife Adina, and by Senator E. Leo Kolber, the honorary chair of the national committee of Canadian Jewry for the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the State of Israel, and his wife Sandra.

While many people in the overflow crowd watched on large-screen televisions in adjoining rooms, Deputy Prime Minister Herb Gray opened the ceremony by leading the singing of O Canada and Hatikvah.

"We are marking the ancient miracle of Judah Maccabi and the oil which burned for eight days," Gray said. "We are also celebrating a modern miracle, the rededication of the land of Israel."

Prime Minister Jean Chrétien spoke of the friendship between Canada and Israel and said he was "honored to be with you this evening to light the first candle of Chanukah."

Speaker of the House, Gilbert Parent, also commented on the friendship between the two countries. "As we dedicate the first candle of Chanukah, I look forward to a strong and enduring friendship between Canada and Israel."

Rabbi Reuven Bulka of Congregation Machzikei Hadas said, "Our ancestors could never dream that we would celebrate Chanukah in the halls of government...and we rejoice in the good fortune we have to live in the world's greatest country."

In his bilingual remarks, Sultan spoke of the peace process. While emphasizing the myriad of accomplishments Israel has made in such a short time, he added, "We still face many challenges. One of the most important of them now is the completion of the peace process with our Palestinian and Arab neighbors. It is a difficult and agonizing process, but I have no doubt that eventually we will have a comprehensive peace. We all need peace, we all deserve peace, we all have no other alternative but peace."

The candles were lit by Benlolo, who was joined in the blessings and Chanukah songs by cantors David Aptowitzer, Stephen Chaiet and Yair Subar.

Ottawa bishop's sermon angers Jews

By DIANE KOVEN
Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA — Members of the Ottawa Jewish community are outraged by reports in the local media that the Anglican Bishop of Ottawa strongly criticized Israel in his midnight Christmas sermon.

According to an article in the Ottawa Citizen, Bishop John Baycroft spoke before some 1,000 worshippers about his distress over what he considers Israel's "evil, wickedness, cruelty and oppression" in its treatment of Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Bishop Baycroft based his opinions on observations he made during a pilgrimage to the Middle East in November, where, he said, he was dismayed to see "the restrictions of movement placed on Palestinians in those territories."

Although Bishop Baycroft referred to his sermon as "even-handed" and he is known to oppose anti-Semitism, reaction to it was swift and resulted in a second article the following day.

Reuben Friedman of B'nai Brith Canada expressed concern about Bishop Baycroft's apparent separation of anti-Israel and anti-Jewish feelings.

"Do people really make a distinction between Israelis and Jews?" Friedman said he feels that Bishop Baycroft's remarks were very one-sided, aimed only against Israel and that "unless he gives a balanced perspective, he is going to end up promoting hatred against Jews."

Friedman also pointed out that the charter of Hamas is not against Israelis or Zionists, but is clearly against Jews everywhere.

Rob Ritter, executive director of the Canada-Israel Committee, said Bishop Baycroft "has not had a full, comprehensive exposure and appreciation for what is going on over there."

Ritter has contacted Rabbi Reuven Bulka, who is on the Canadian Jewish Congress interfaith committee, and they have taken the initiative of attempting to arrange a meeting with Bishop Baycroft. Ritter said he feels that dialogue is important – and not necessarily in the media.

In fact, he said, the committee is already in the process of establishing meetings with different denominations in January for exactly that purpose.

Rabbi Bulka, who knows Bishop Baycroft and says he "generally has very high respect" for the bishop, feels that "in this instance, his use of the English language was unfortunate."

Although there is no doubt that conditions are far from ideal, Rabbi Bulka pointed out that the Arab countries have refused all opportunities to upgrade the Palestinian camps or to help the Palestinians, preferring to leave them in their misery, and point the finger at Israel.

"To vilify Israel when Israel should not be vilified for this, because it is not something that it did, is totally absurd and unwarranted," he said

This was echoed by Chen Ivri, consul at the Embassy of Israel and acting ambassador during the ambassador's absence from Ottawa.

"It must be understood," Ivri said, "that the Palestinian Authority now controls virtually most of the Palestinian population centres where the vast majority of the Palestinians reside. Therefore, any claims which are characterized as cruel or evil should be directed at the Palestinian Authority. It seems as though the bishop has forgotten that Israel, through the ongoing peace process, has seceded most of the Palestinian towns and villages to the Palestinian Authority."

"If the bishop wanted to be even-handed as he claims," Ivri added, "he would have discussed the hundreds of Israeli men, women and children that have been blown up by Palestinian terrorists. In addition, the bishop would have discussed the well-documented human rights abuses committed by the Palestinian Authority."

Referring to the Bishop's comments about restricting the movement of Palestinians, Ivri said that "every state has the right, and even more the obligation, to protect its citizens from acts of terrorism and violence. Therefore, a closure is only implemented to prevent the entrance into Israel of hostile elements that might commit acts of terrorism. Closures are not implemented to exact punishment on the Palestinian population, rather they are implemented to protect the lives of Israelis."

Efforts to contact Bishop Baycroft were unsuccessful as a recorded message advised that due to the impending storm, the church office was closed until the following day.

Selchen's a Rhodes scholar

By MYRON LOVE
Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — David Selchen, a 22-year-old B.Sc., has become the second member of his family to win a Rhodes Scholarship. His uncle, Daniel Selchen, now a doctor in Toronto, was also a Rhodes scholar.

"My zayde (Zalman Selchen) encouraged me to apply," says Selchen. "He was familiar with the competition, given that Daniel was a winner. He thought that I would be a good candidate. I took his advice and applied."

Selchen graduated last April from the University of Winnipeg. He was the gold medalist in biology and psychology and the silver medalist in science. To enter the Rhodes Scholarship competition, he had to provide six letters of reference and a personal statement.

He was taking this year off from formal education to decide on his future path.

"I am very excited about attending Oxford," he says. "I will be taking up residency there next October."

He plans to continue working in neuroscience, the area he specialized in as an undergraduate. He will be at Oxford for two years and possibly a third, depending on his program of study.

New memorandum in CJC-Q move

By DAVID LAZARUS
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The Quebec officers of Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) narrowly approved a "draft memorandum of understanding" recently with FEDERATION CJA on the terms of Congress' relocation to the Jewish community campus.

But still up in the air is the degree to which the relocation will be obstructed by opponents both within the region and at a national level.

The Quebec officers' vote took place in the wake of a CJC-Q executive committee motion that called for an expanded regional relocation committee involving more members of the Quebec and national executives.

The committee was indeed expanded, despite a legal opinion by honorary legal counsel Jeffrey Boro that the motion, introduced by Zave Ettinger, was ultra vires and contrary to Roberts Rules of Order.

According to that interpretation, all members of the executive involved in the previous motion supporting the relocation would have had to be notified prior to the meeting about the new motion.

However, the view contrary to Boro's is that Ettinger's motion did not "negate" the essence of the first, and therefore did not require the original voters to be notified in advance.

CJC-Q chair Reisa Teitelbaum said in an interview that a decision was made to enlarge the committee to accommodate the sentiment behind the motion, namely that there be more input by the Quebec and national executives on the written agreement between CJC-Q and FEDERATION CJA.

"It was done regardless of whether it [the motion] was legal or not," she said.

The new members of the CJC-Q relocation committee include CJC national treasurer Zave Climan, Quebec and national executive members Rivka Augenfeld and Rita Tannenbaum, and CJC-Q officer Robert Sasson.

Teitelbaum declined to reveal the breakdown of the Quebec officers' vote on the "memorandum of understanding."

But she continued to speak hopefully of there being "good faith on all sides" in respect to the relocation, especially since the decision to move had been previously approved both by CJC's national and Quebec officers and by the Quebec executive.

"We would like this to become a harmonious transition," Teitelbaum said. "Even if it has not been harmonious to date, people can choose it to be harmonious. We expect everybody to do their part."

At writing, however, Teitelbaum's wishful scenario seemed far from materializing.

High-ranking members within CJC Quebec and national, including CJC-Q chair Dorothy Zalcman Howard and president Goldie Hershon, continue to harbor serious reservations about the relocation, especially in respect to how the move will affect CJC-Q's autonomy and the future of CJC-national.

If opponents succeed in delaying the process until the next CJC Plenary Assembly in the spring, a new slate of CJC national officers could be in place. And they could conceivably reconsider the whole issue of relocating.

Teitelbaum, for her part, declined to address herself to that point, indicating only that the process will go forward according to schedule. The recent motion of the CJC-Q executive calling for an expanded committee report "within" 90 days pertains to a maximum number of days, but not a minimum, she said.

The resolution on the "memorandum of understanding" is also expected to come before the national officers this month, and before the CJC-Q executive on Jan. 21.

Stanley Plotnick, FEDERATION CJA's president, said in an interview that the situation is "extremely time-sensitive."

But, "far more important," he said, "is that for the betterment of the community, all parties have to work together and in good faith."

New complaint launched against Collins

VICTORIA — It's not over for retired newspaper columnist Doug Collins.

A human rights complaint filed against Collins by a Victoria man in 1994 is just beginning to wind its way through the system.

Harry Abrams, a businessman and west coast representative for B'nai Brith Canada, is pursuing the controversial Collins for inciting hatred against Jews and other groups.

Also named in the action are Collins' former employer, the North Shore News, and the now-defunct Daily Victorian, which carried his columns.

Last November, a British Columbia human rights tribunal found that a column by Collins which questioned the Holocaust and mocked the film Schindler's List was "nasty, insulting and anti-Semitic," but not hateful enough to warrant further action.

Abrams also began his complaint against Collins in 1994, only days after CJC filed its action.

The difference, Abrams told The CJN, is that his complaint involves the "cumulative" effect of about a dozen of Collins' columns, whereas CJC had complained about just one.

Abrams actually filed two complaints, one against Collins and the North Shore News, and another against the Daily Victorian, which folded in 1995 after about 18 months.

The city of Victoria even passed a bylaw banning the Daily Victorian from city hall, Abrams said.

Abrams charges that Collins' columns exposed Jews to hatred, as well as incited hatred against Sikhs, Iranians, Chinese and Japanese.

Legal aid is funding Abrams' case, which gets under way in the spring or summer.

Collins, 77, called the new complaint harassment.

Chanukah celebrations in Nova Scotia

By JOEL JACOBSON
Atlantic Correspondent

HALIFAX — Lieutenant Governor James Kinley and Her Honor Grace Kinley stood and watched, as Rabbi Mendel Feldman of the Atlantic Lubavitch Congregation said the blessings over the Chanukah candles and led the singing of Maoz Tzur.

It was the third year in succession the Queen's representative in Nova Scotia has invited members of the provincial Jewish community into his home to celebrate the Festival of Lights and if he has his way, he says his initiative will become a tradition that goes on for years to come.

"I hope you'll be back next year, for Chanukah comes once a year," he told almost 100 guests from Halifax, Wolfville, Springhill and London, Ont.

"It might be my last time here [Kinley is in the final year of his five-year term], but Chanukah will definitely be here again next year.

Organized by the Atlantic Jewish Council (AJC), the reception featured traditional latkes as well as other refreshments. But the warmth of the reception and of the welcome by their honors was evident during the two-hour affair on the seventh night of Chanukah.

Victor Goldberg, president of the AJC, thanked the lieutenant-governor and referred to his interest in the Jewish community. "You have visited Camp Kadimah on several occasions and always take an interest in our activities."

Rabbi David Ellis, formerly of Moncton, N.B., and newly appointed chaplain in service to the Atlantic Jewish Council explained the meaning of dedication in relation to the holiday. Members of the community who lit the seven candles included Dave Sherman, president of Shaar Shalom Congregation; Bob Wolman, president of Beth Israel Congregation; AJC past president Larry Freeman; Edith Schniederman, president of Masada seniors group; Arthur Saffron, chair of the Springhill (N.S.) Jewish community; Jim Spatz, volunteer campaign chair of UIA Atlantic Canada; and Goldberg.

Levy: 'Nothing on earth will make me stay'

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — A terse letter of resignation was dispatched by Foreign Minister David Levy to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at 7:40 last Sunday evening.

The resignation was to take effect Tuesday, 48 hours after its submission, and Levy declared that "nothing on earth" would make him change his mind.

Levy's letter made good his threat of last week.

Levy told reporters at a Tel Aviv press conference that "even an experienced politician, even someone to whom you all ascribe certain traits, can come to the point when he has had enough. I have come to that point. I have had enough."

Levy maintained that he had tried to work with the government, "but recent events have shown over and over that this partnership is not working. This government is incompatible with my views. At this point, the only honorable thing to do is to get up and leave... I cannot continue as this government's lightening rod and I cannot impose a policy on the others that they do not want. The partnership failed through no fault of Gesher's, but all that is behind us. We will now set out on a value-oriented struggle for the character of this society."

Levy strove to deny any connection with Labor or any premeditated plot on his part to topple Netanyahu.

His motives, he stressed were twin disappointments – with the government's socio-economic policy as reflected in the current budget row and with its handling of the redeployment issue. On both counts, he stressed, he had crossed his Rubicon. "There is no way back. There is nothing which the prime minister can now do to change the situation," he said.

He said he had received a letter over the weekend to the effect that NIS 350 million had been found to foot the bill for his demands. He did not say from whom the letter came, but he derided it.

"What hocus pocus! Where did they find it without hiking taxes or without breaching the budget framework? Where was all this money hidden thus far?... Even if they take back the entire budget bill, it will just trigger a free-for-all in the coalition... People now tell me I was right. Really? So what happened? Was it an accident?... A delayed reaction repairs nothing," Levy snapped.

"In the last elections, I was faced with my most difficult choice," he said. "I opted for the partnership because I judged that only the Likud could bring a peace which will be supported by most of the nation and not opposed by half of it, as was the case in the previous administration... but this did not work out as we hoped... I see how some of this coalition's components think in terms of 'let's win another week, another month.' They don't realize that later we will have to settle for far worse terms imposed on us against our will.

"The social justice aspirations we had are just not being implemented and the peace process is creaking... I refuse to impose anything on an unwilling coalition, and I can't pretend that I saw nothing and heard nothing and we will all now turn a new leaf. It doesn't work this way."

Levy would not say if he plans to run for prime minister.

Early election scenarios

By LIAT COLLINS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Under the Direct Elections Law, there are several ways to bring forward the elections.

Backgrounder

The first is a regular no-confidence motion in the prime minister, of the type Meretz filed Sunday, which requires a majority of 61 MKs to pass.

No-confidence motions are always heard on Mondays. If such a no-confidence motion passes, the Knesset must dissolve and new elections are held for both the prime minister and the Knesset. New elections must be held within 60 days of the motion passing.

There is also a possibility of ousting the prime minister and holding elections only for the premiership. This requires an 80 MK majority at the end of a set process. To reach this stage, 40 MKs must sign a request for such a move, which is then discussed by the Knesset House Committee.

If the committee approves it, the prime minister is invited to appear before its members to defend himself. If the committee does not accept his stand, the matter is forwarded to a plenum vote in which the premier has another chance to explain his policy before the vote on the motion.

The third possibility is for the prime minister himself, if he decides the government cannot continue to function properly, to ask the president to agree to new elections.

There is also a possibility of filing a bill calling for the dissolution of the Knesset, but this is not relevant at the moment because such a bill failed at the end of July and bills that fail cannot be resubmitted for six months, excluding the recess period. This means the bill cannot be raised again until March.

If the government does not succeed in passing the budget three months into the fiscal year, at the end of March, it automatically means new elections must be held.

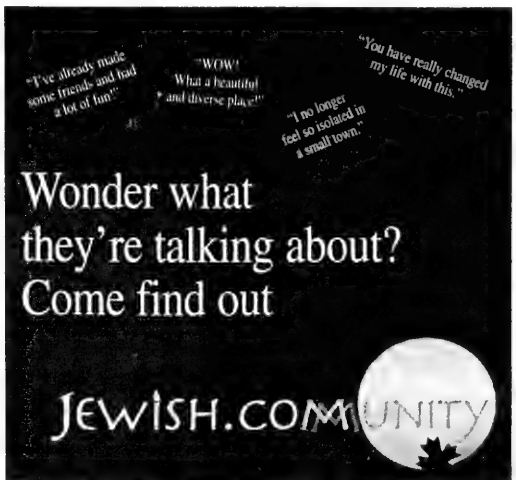
Even if Foreign Minister David Levy does not retract his resignation from the government in the 48 hours before it goes into effect, his Gesher faction would have to stay in the framework of the larger Likud-Gesher-Tsomet party to be eligible for party funding for elections.



"I've already made some friends and had a lot of fun."
"WOW! What a beautiful and diverse place!"
"You have really changed my life with this."
"I no longer feel so isolated in a small town."

Clinton invites Netanyahu, Arafat to White House

By JAY BUSHINSKY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — U.S. President Bill Clinton, ignoring the political wrangling and uncertain outcome of Israel's current crisis over the state budget, has invited Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to the White House on Jan. 20.

Clinton is also to meet with Palestinian Authority (PA) Chairman Yasser Arafat at the White House on Jan. 22, Arafat's spokesperson said.

Netanyahu's invitation was conveyed by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright during a telephone conversation, in which she also informed him of peace envoy Dennis Ross' impending arrival for talks with him and other senior government officials.

Ross is expected to begin his mission by conferring with Arafat and then to meet with Israeli officials.

The second redeployment of IDF forces in the West Bank will dominate his discussions with both Arafat and Netanyahu. However, the precise areas from which the troops will be withdrawn will not be specified by the prime minister.

National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon, who has played an active role in defining the topographical and strategic problems inherent in any further redeployment, doubts the cabinet will agree on a pullback map in time for Netanyahu's White House meeting.

"He will not be able to pinpoint anything," Sharon said.

Government officials reportedly sought to delay Ross's arrival by several days, to allow time for Netanyahu to work out his problems with Foreign Minister David Levy, which would keep him at his post and retain the Gesher faction's membership in the coalition. They also wanted more time to assure passage of the amended budget. But the State Department insisted that Ross would keep to his original timetable.

The possibility that Levy may reject the prime minister's overtures could pose a serious diplomatic problem for Ross. It would deprive him of the government's most influential advocate of moderation on the "land for peace" issue.

On the other hand, the Clinton administration may be more realistic and pragmatic than some Israeli observers tend to believe.

Congress ends its winter recess 10 days later. This will prevent Netanyahu from explaining his peace policy to the senators and representatives and sharing his intelligence data on Iran's buildup of conventional and unconventional weaponry.

On the other hand, the presidential invitation is of substantial political value to him in the domestic arena. It refutes charges by the opposition that he has become persona non grata in the White House and that the chief executive has lost patience with him.

Close analysis of the Palestinian news media and especially careful reading of statements made by key PA leaders, indicate that the cabinet's map debate is virtually irrelevant from their standpoint.

A week ago, Arafat said, "The only map we recognize is the map of Palestine registered in the United Nations."

At the weekly Palestinian cabinet meeting held in Jericho on last Friday, Arafat blamed Israel for the freeze in the peace process during 1997.

Arafat charged that the United States had failed in its attempts to revive the peace process, saying, "The Israeli government's position has not changed despite visits by U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and U.S. envoy Dennis Ross."

Arafat said the PA is demanding that the United States put more pressure on Israel and impose a timetable regarding the proposed redeployment stages, adding that it has been 18 months since the first one.

Arafat reiterated his request to deploy international troops in the West Bank along the 1967 borders, charging that such a presence would maintain stability on both sides. All the issues, he said, will be raised in his meeting with Ross.

Israel accepts Lebanon resolution, but attaches its own conditions

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — In a surprise move, Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai stated over the weekend that Israel would accept UN Security Council Resolution 425 calling for Israel to withdraw from southern Lebanon.

It was the first time a senior Israeli official has specifically said Jerusalem would accept the resolution since it was passed nearly 20 years ago. But in an interview with the London-based Arabic newspaper Al-Watan al-Arabi, Mordechai stressed that Israel conditions its withdrawal on the small print, which calls for Lebanon to assert its sovereignty and ensure peace and security.

"I am not frightened by the words 'UN Security Council Resolution 425.' These are not words which are unacceptable to me, and I declare that Israel is prepared to implement this decision in its entirety," Mordechai was quoted as saying.

Mordechai also proposed reaching an "interim security agreement" with Lebanon, in which he envisioned an IDF withdrawal from south Lebanon and its replacement by the Lebanese Army and possibly international forces.

In the past, then defence minister Yitzhak Rabin repeatedly stated that Israel was in favor of a de facto acceptance of Resolution 425, but conditioned it on a solution for the militiamen of the South Lebanese Army and the disarming of anti-Israel guerrillas.

While Mordechai's position hardly differs from Rabin's, it comes amid a heavy public debate on the continued IDF presence in the security zone and from mounting pressure for a unilateral withdrawal.

Defence sources insist that Mordechai's statements did not mean that Israel has decided to change its security concept there and that the IDF would remain in Lebanon. Mordechai's statement, they said, was putting the ball into the court of Lebanon and Syria which have consistently demanded Israel abide by Resolution 425.

"The first part of Resolution 425 does call for an IDF withdrawal from territory it was in following [the 1978] Litani Operation, but further on it speaks of establishing UNIFIL, whose purpose is 'restoring international peace and security and assisting the government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area,'" Mordechai said.

Mordechai said that without effective Lebanese control in south Lebanon, a unilateral Israeli withdrawal is unlikely. "For the IDF to get out of Lebanon, peace and security have to be restored as [the resolution] states, and I know of only one way to do so: by halting terror and violence, preventing attacks against Israel from Lebanese territory, creating normalized, good relations on both sides of the border, and cooperation between the IDF and Lebanese Army," Mordechai said.

Labor MK Yossi Beilin, who recently helped set up the Movement for a Peaceful Departure from Lebanon, praised Mordechai's "courageous" stance. But in a statement released Saturday night, Beilin noted the significance of Resolution 425 is that it is unconditional.

This past year has been particularly vicious for the IDF. Thirty-nine soldiers were killed in action in Lebanon, nearly 50 percent more than in the previous three years. This does not include the 73 servicemen killed in the collision of two helicopters ferrying troops to Lebanon last February. In contrast, 60 Hezbollah guerrillas have been killed by the IDF and IAF. In the previous three years an average of 95 had been killed.

Still, Mordechai stressed that, for the moment, there is no better solution for protecting the north than the present arrangement.

Mordechai criticized Syria for its cynical policy of encouraging Lebanon to demand the implementation of 425 "while at the same time forbidding it from taking practical steps to restore peace and security called for in the resolution."

By DAVID LANDAU
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The commander of Israeli troops that unified Jerusalem during the 1967 Six Day War has died at the age of 72.

Reserve Maj.-Gen. Uzi Narkiss, who died in Jerusalem late last month, had an army career that dated back to the days of the Palmach, the elite commando units of the Haganah, which was the precursor to the IDF.

His photograph, striding along beside defence minister Moshe Dayan and IDF chief of staff Yitzhak Rabin as they entered the Old City of Jerusalem through the Jaffa Gate on June 7, 1967, has become one of Israel's best-known images.

Born in 1925, Narkiss enlisted in the Palmach in 1941 and rose through its ranks to serve as a commander during the Israeli War of Independence, when he fought to defend Jerusalem.

In 1958, he was appointed military attache to Western Europe.

Narkiss subsequently founded the Israeli National Defence College and served as its first commander.

His distinguished career in the IDF reached its zenith during the Six Day War, when he was head of the Central Command, whose forces restored Jerusalem to Israeli control.

After retiring from the IDF, Narkiss served as director of the Immigration and Absorption Department of the Jewish Agency for Israel.

While at the Jewish Agency, he contributed both his prestige and his organizational ability to enhancing and absorbing the wave of olim from the West that followed the Six Day War.

During the 1970s and 1980s, he was chair of the Information Department of the World Zionist Organization (WZO). In that position, he worked to rescind the UN resolution that equated Zionism with racism.

He served as head of the WZO's North American delegation until 1994, when he returned to Israel to serve as chair of the Israel Government Coins and Medals Corp.

Narkiss was the author of two books, The Liberation of Jerusalem and A Soldier of Jerusalem.

Narkiss is survived by his wife, Esther; a son, Tzachi; two daughters, Ruthy and Tamy; and nine grandchildren.

Consensus missing on pluralism resolution at WZC

religion or to prevent its observance by the other side is anti-democratic and is liable to undermine respect toward Judaism."

It also calls on Jewish leaders everywhere to "ensure the success" of Israel's Ne'eman Committee, which has until Jan. 31 to hammer out a deal to accommodate non-Orthodox Jews.

If the Ne'eman Committee fails to find a compromise with Israel's Orthodox establishment, the resolution calls on the Israeli government not to allow any changes in the Law of Return and not to pass the controversial conversion bill, which would invalidate all non-Orthodox conversions.

The document states that the Zionist movement "is a pluralistic Jewish movement" and "respects, both in theory and practice, the inclusion of the various interpretations of Judaism."

Canadian Zionist Federation (CZF) president Kurt Rothschild, who is also world chair of Mizrachi, played down the differences between the resolution that prevailed, and the failed Orthodox version.

Differences "were not extreme," Rothschild said, and the congress was "pretty subdued" and "conciliatory."

But "the [section on] religious pluralism was not approved by Mizrachi. We felt it went beyond the lines of demarcation," Rothschild told The CJN. He stressed that it calls for Israel to be religiously pluralistic with which Orthodox delegates could not agree.

A sharper tone was sounded by Orthodox Rabbi Reuven Poupko of Montreal, who represented Herut-Likud Canada at the congress. The whole debate on religious pluralism, tolerance and conversions was, he said, "completely irrelevant. What [they] have to do with Zionism is beyond anyone's comprehension. It simply is not a Zionist issue."

Rabbi Poupko implied that the issue was made a priority and politicized by American Reform and Conservative Jews, who together made up a majority of the United States' 145 delegates.

"They knew the Orthodox and Likud would say no [to the resolution]. They needed a no. They got their no," Rabbi Poupko told The CJN.

He said the whole conversion issue is fraught with hypocrisy, as Conservative rabbis do not recognize Reform conversions any more than do the Orthodox.

Norm Stern, president of Mercaz Canada, the Conservative movement's Zionist arm, called the resolution on pluralism "a fair compromise. We were looking for more but we didn't get it." He said he understands the Orthodox position.

Anshan said he hopes the Ne'eman Committee is emboldened by the passage of the resolution, and will arrive at a conclusion that reflects its spirit.

Coalition in doubt

Netanyahu predicted that his coalition would not disintegrate because its "members do not want to see the left take over, Israel reduced to the 1967 lines, to the shores of the Kinneret in the North and to the outskirts of Kfar Sava in the centre."

This was regarded as a not-so-veiled warning to coalition renegades about the possible consequences of a failure to maintain discipline.

"Our own policy is clear. We will not return to the headlong reckless rush to borders within which we cannot continue to exist, and any move we make will hinge on the other side curbing terrorism. The era in which Israel alone makes concessions is over, and I will tell this to my American interlocutors," Netanyahu declared.

Sources close to Netanyahu acknowledged that coalition unruliness could surface in future votes, but they noted that a plurality would not be enough to pass a no-confidence motion, which must be approved by an absolute majority of 61. This means that the government could survive at least until Netanyahu picks a time when he might want to call elections.

Text of resolution on pluralism

Whereas religious and secular pluralism in Israel is a subject of concern for Zionists in the Diaspora, the Congress calls on all the political parties in Israel to recognize the fact that:

A. In a democratic society, the expression of Judaism must be pluralistic.

B. Secular and religious Jews, of all the streams, have equal democratic rights to observe their faith and lifestyles their own way.

C. An attempt by any entity to impose religion or to prevent its observance by the other side, is anti-democratic and is liable to undermine respect toward Judaism.

With concern and criticism in Israel and abroad regarding the reality as it has developed since then within the Jewish world.

With deep apprehension for the unity of the Jewish people, the Congress calls on the leadership of the religious streams in Israel and abroad to work in cooperation with the Israeli government to ensure the success of the Ne'eman Committee's work, in its efforts to solve the painful issues on the agenda of the Jewish people, among them issues within the area of personal status and the possibility of operating in Israel.

If, G-d forbid, this cooperation is not successful, the Congress calls on the movement's management and institutions to take all the appropriate steps in order to continue calling on the Israeli government:

1. Not to allow any change in the Law of Return, which is one of the foundations for the identification of the Jewish people with the State of Israel in all the Jewish communities throughout the world.

2. To refrain from any legislative changes, or new religious legislation, unless it is done through broad consensus and consideration of all the sectors of the people in Israel and abroad.

3. To maintain open and frank dialogue with all the sectors of the Jewish people about the challenges, the opportunities and the dangers that the Jewish people face, and about reinforcing its spiritual strength.

The Zionist Congress condemns the recent violent and sacrilegious acts, among them the arson burning of a preschool, aimed at individuals and religious and educational institutions in Israel.

The Congress calls on all involved public figures to avoid hurtful and degrading statements, which call for the banning of sectors of the Jewish people due to their different interpretations of Judaism and its sources.

The Zionist movement is a pluralistic Jewish movement, which holds of supreme importance the maintaining of the wholeness of the Jewish people, which is being variegated and enriched thanks to the great number of its views and the many positions of its members.

The Zionist movement respects, both in theory and in practicality, the inclusion of the various interpretations of Judaism and its tradition in the spirit of pluralism in Judaism. The Zionist movement is unique in as much as it is the singular volunteer, democratic movement within the Jewish people. [It is] a movement that maintains cooperation among all sectors of the Jewish people with equality and mutual respect.

The Zionist Congress instructs the Zionist management to call on the Israeli government to adopt and implement the spirit of this resolution, followed by the Congress Resolution No. 94, namely: "Equal Rights for all Streams in Judaism."

The Zionist movement will continue to seek and to work for the establishment of mutual appreciation among all the streams and ideologies within Judaism in accordance with these values.

If, G-d forbid, the efforts of the Ne'eman Committee are not concluded successfully, the Congress calls on the government, in accordance with the proposal made by the Labor-Meretz faction, the New faction, The Centre [faction] and others, to refrain from passing the Conversion law. The Congress puts on the record the position held by Hamizrachi, Likud, Tsomet, Moledet and others, which oppose this stance for religious and conscientious reasons.

Shas courts Arab MKs

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The Shas party has been wooing Arab members of the Israeli Knesset to vote for a controversial conversion bill, according to an Israeli newspaper.

Israeli Arab and Shas sources cited by Ha'aretz on Sunday both confirmed that secret contacts were being held, but that no final understanding had been reached.

The Arab sources said that in exchange for the Knesset members support or abstention on the bill, which would codify the Orthodox monopoly over Jewish conversions in Israel, Shas would agree to support legislation that would benefit the Israeli Arab community.

Action on the bill has been postponed as an interdenominational committee seeks a solution that would be acceptable to Judaism's three main streams. The Conservative and Reform movements want to win legal recognition for conversions performed by their rabbis in Israel.

But if the committee does not meet its latest deadline of Jan. 31, Shas and other Orthodox parties in the governing coalition may push for passage of the bill – and the 11 Arab votes in the Knesset could become critical.

Ha'aretz said the three Arab Knesset members in the Labor and Meretz factions would likely vote in accordance with their parties' positions.

Opinions were split within the two Arab-based parties – Hadash and the Arab Democratic party-United Arab List.

Hadash Knesset member Hashem Mahameed said he would support the bill. "If passage of the law deepens the rift between American Jewry and Israel, and reduces the number of Jews moving here, I would not regret the bill's approval."

Hebron tensions mount

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Tensions between Israeli and Palestinian residents of Hebron are flaring again.

Some 30 Jewish settlers temporarily moved into empty buildings in the West Bank town of Hebron on Sunday to protest Palestinian violence in the city's Jewish quarter.

Israeli security forces later asked the settlers to leave the site, and most did so voluntarily.

The settlers said the action was intended to draw attention to what they view as inadequate security measures for them, and called for Israeli soldiers to be stationed in the city's market, which abuts the Jewish area.

Last week, two pipe bombs were thrown at a kindergarten in the Avraham Avinu complex. No one was hurt, but the action sparked clashes between the city's Jewish and Palestinian residents.

In Hebron, tensions have been high with the onset of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan – Palestinian residents have complained about the large presence of Israeli troops, especially near the Tomb of the Patriarchs.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu told the cabinet Sunday that security must be stepped up in the city to prevent confrontation.

Mr. Fixit helps repair the world

By LEILA SPEISMAN
Staff Reporter

Sometimes even adults have trouble learning that there are things that no matter how hard you try, you just can't fix.

Tikun Olam; fixing the world, written and illustrated by Anne Lobock-Fenton, (Brookline Books, 1997) is a touching and beautiful story about two men who liked to fix things – Mr. Mitzvah Fixit, who could fix just about anything that was broken, and Dr. Mender, his good friend, who "was very good at fixing people."

Both men were truly good people. Mr. Fixit not only did repairs, but was friendly and always offered to help people. Dr. Mender could make people feel better just by talking to them – he was patient and gentle. Fenton explains that neither of them carried a grudge, and never waited to be asked to help.

The problem came when Dr. Mender got sick. He couldn't help himself get better, and Mr. Fixit, no matter how hard he tried to help, couldn't fix him either.

The book shows how Mr. Fixit came to realize that a broken heart could be healed by helping others.

The book may sound sad, and in some parts it is. But the lesson it teaches, that kindness and caring can make the world right, even when it seems that everything is going wrong, can give hope to all of us, children and adults alike.

The author's husband was the model for Dr. Mender. You will enjoy knowing that just a little while ago, Fenton (Mrs. Mender) married Mr. Mitzvah Fixit. So there is a happy ending after all.

Tikun Olam ends with an explanation of the Jewish belief in mitzvot, tzedakah (charity), and in kindness bringing holiness into the world.

TORONTO — Two 9-year-olds from the Toronto area landed their first professional acting jobs not long ago.

Dylan Rosenthal, a Grade 4 student at Bialik Hebrew Day School, starred as Jacob Two-Two in Jacob Two-Two's First Spy Case at Young Peoples Theatre; and Tali Lewin, a Grade 4 student at York Hill Public School, was in the cast and chorus of Show Boat, which ran from Nov. 22 until Jan. 4 at the Ford Centre for the Performing Arts. She was also the understudy for young Kim.

Dylan Rosenthal

Tali Lewin

"It's excellent," said Dylan of his first professional acting experience. He got the part after his parents bid on a walk-on role for him at an auction. He has studied voice and keyboard for three years and is a member of the Charactors Theatre Troupe.

Dylan appeared in four shows a week (Matthew Burns played Jacob in the four other weekly performances) from Nov. 8 to Jan. 4. Dylan said that to make up for the school he missed, his English and Hebrew teachers helped him a lot. "It's hard, but I can manage it."

When he's not acting or at school, one of the things Dylan enjoys is cooking. His specialty is scrambled eggs. "I would whip them up any second of the day. I like to eat them every day, but I'm not allowed to."

If he doesn't become a professional actor and singer when he grows up, Dylan would like to be a cook.

"I'm just a normal kid," he told The CJN. "I play games, watch TV, read books, do homework."

You can see Dylan on the new TVOntario kids' show called Stuff. His segment will run Feb. 19 at 6:30 p.m. and will be rebroadcast Mar. 29 at 10:30 a.m. and April 7 at 6:30 p.m.

Tali, a student at TNT Danceforce in Thornhill, has studied dance for five years, but she had never acted before.

She got the job after her mother, Francine, was looking in the movie section of the newspaper and happened to see an ad about an audition. Tali met all the requirements.

Tali had seen Show Boat when she was six. "I didn't really understand it that much, but I liked it," she said. She never imagined that she would be in it one day.

Her 11-year-old sister, Tamar, is in Charactors, and Tali had wanted to join also, but her parents thought it would be too much along with her dance commitments, her mom said.

Tali's parents were impressed that she kept up with her school work while performing eight times a week. "I like school," Tali said. Her favorite parts are "writing stories and reading and gym and lunch and recess."

Sometimes Tali did schoolwork backstage, but only if she had already changed into her next costume.

"It's like going to work every night," said Francine.

13 Engagements In 12 Months, Singles Registry Leads The Way

Mazel Tov was the operative word at the Jewish Singles Registry's office in Toronto in recent weeks, reports owner and director Rob Singer. "We've just had five more couples recently announce their intentions to get married" he stated. "They couldn't be happier and neither could we. It's the best feeling in the world. The look on their faces and the sound of their voices say it all. The J.S.R. is definitely Toronto's foremost and best way for Toronto Jewish singles to meet one another."

Business has been extremely busy lately, with engagements occurring on a more regular basis than ever before. The service prides itself on its success rate, not only in the engagement/marriage department but also in relation to the number of phone numbers given out each week. That's what makes the JSR so special. As a member you are able to come in, view hundreds of profiles of other Jewish singles, see their photographs, listen to recorded voice messages and put in your request. Your selections will then be called (usually that very same day), invited to come in to view who selected them, and when both parties say yes, phone numbers are given out. IT'S THAT SIMPLE!!

In just a few days over 30 Jewish singles from Toronto, as well as Montreal and Vancouver will be heading south to Cancun Mexico to soak up a few rays. This trip should prove to be one of the largest Jewish singles gatherings at this popular vacation resort. More than 100 Jewish singles from the USA will be there that week as well.

Unlimited Membership A Big Hit

Response to the JSR's new unlimited membership program has been overwhelming. Members now pay a one time low registration fee and can remain a member of the service for as long as they want. One of the positive aspects of this development is that members can select as many people as they want to go out with, be selected by as many people that want to meet them, or a combination of both. Because the membership is unlimited, everyone can take their time to really get to know each other without feeling the pressure to go on as many dates as they can throughout the year. The savings to members is tremendous, both in time and money, making the Jewish Singles Registry the best value for your dollar than any other dating service in the city.

Jewish Continuity Is Our Business

While others talk about the problem of Jewish continuity, the JSR is taking action. Averaging an engagement every four weeks, and setting up hundreds of dates each and every month, the JSR accepts the challenge of being Toronto's number one Jewish dating service, and continues to play a large role in the Toronto Jewish community. Whether you are looking to meet someone for friendship, a relationship or even marriage, now is the time to sign up with the Jewish Singles Registry of Toronto. If you would like more information about the service, as well as a listing of Jewish singles events you can check out their website at www.total.net/~jsreg. They can also be reached at 416-483-4151 or E-mailed at jsreg@total.net

KISS BLIND DATING GOOD-BYE

The Jewish Singles Registry offers you an unlimited number of introductions, that you select from an extensive Bio/Photo/Voice library. It's a great way for you to connect with people you would normally never get a chance to meet. So if you are looking for an attractive, fun, and simple way to meet other Jewish Singles, call the Jewish Singles Registry today.

Unwanted hair? Erase Care!

Do you suffer from unwanted facial or other hair? Have you spent time searching for treatments which can bring out your beauty, without damaging skin or causing unneeded pain? For a hair treatment which combines gentleness with long-term efficacy, call Erase Care.

Erase Care treats unwanted hair with SoftLight a low-energy laser, combined with a carbon lotion rubbed onto the skin and into the hair follicle. Laser and lotion together disable the follicle: they slow its growth without destroying it, or unduly irritating your skin.

Treatment is cumulative, with number and frequency of visits tailored to your personal needs. In time, it decreases to about once every 5-8 months. From here on, as with a manicure or facelift, you need only maintenance.

Facial hair is harder to treat than other hair. Being hormonally triggered, it keeps growing back; moreover, facial pores are smaller, and harder for the lotion to enter. SoftLight's propulsion method, done once only on hormonally triggered hair, propels lotion deep into the follicle to make the laser more effective. Propulsion requires follow-up treatment 6-7 weeks later; this is free.

Concern with hair removal is ageless. In Cleopatra's day, women removed hair by sugaring, a method somewhat like waxing. In Europe in the 1700's, threading was common; this resembles tweezing, and may date from ancient China. Like tweezing, these methods not only hurt the skin: they defeat their aim, strengthening the hair follicle by tugging on it. It is best to avoid such harsh treatments.

Though Erase Care's treatment is effective for a wide range of problems, it was invented mainly to serve hirsute women: those with male-patterned hair growth. The laser, made by Thermolase, is designed for use on all skin types, with no burning or scarring. At the manufacturer's insistence, it is always used under the auspices of a doctor, who is consulted whenever medical input is called for.

Erase Care is in Dr. Michael Bederman's Centre for Cosmetic Surgery. Treatments start at $350 and go up; consultations are free. There are packages of several treatments, but it is possible you will need more or fewer; if fewer, you can use the extra treatments for maintenance. If you learn about Erase Care by reading this article, you qualify for a discount. Call 416-440-8444; ask for Wendy.

Poetry collection commemorates victims of Holocaust

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — It has been said that after the Holocaust, poetry is impossible. Jason Sommer's Other People's Troubles (University of Chicago Press) embodies the contrary view: poetry is one way to commemorate the dead and make their lives meaningful to us, the living.

"After much coming and going," writes Sommer, "a life begins to fill …but now there is/ no place for a shadow to fall/ that doesn't have shadows/ or people in it."

How, living in the present, do we make room for the past? This question touches each of us, Holocaust survivor or not, and the reflections in this book speak to us all.

We pay homage to universal values, but we take something to heart only if we see how it affects us personally.

Sommer recreates black-and-white images from old photos, stories told by members of his family and events from his own life. He connects all these in ways that say, "This concerns me – and you."

"Before the astounding/ cruelties are the ordinary ones,/ …the cruelties of sons and fathers,/cruelties which may be partially redeemed/ by forgiveness, and therefore for which/ forgiveness is seldom sought," he writes.

Sommer documents the loss of many of his own kin, the destruction of their entire eastern European community, and the fortunes of those who survived. In so doing, he imparts new meaning to an old truth: lives are lost, but life is stronger.

The present builds on the past, he says. The title poem, Other People's Troubles, conveys complementary truths: we prefer our own troubles to those of others, but as our lives interlace, other people's troubles affect us. It is others' lives that give ours their context; we live in the present, for ourselves, but our lives are nourished by those who went before.

The poems shift back and forth from history to biography, past to present. They confront the Holocaust by linking it to personal traumas like an unexpected childhood beating, yet they also recognize that not all suffering can be linked to the Holocaust.

These poems are essentially narrative. Single moments are often replayed in slow motion for us to contemplate more easily, but there are no still shots such as those found in some lyric poetry where time seems to stop. Descriptive passages are moments in a process.

At the end of the sequence, the lines lengthen markedly, as if to set them apart from the rest of the book. Elsewhere, Sommer favors short to medium-length lines. He can write good iambic pentameter, as in pieces such as For Whoever Reads my Book in Solitude and The Find. The sestina Joining the Story shows his formal ambition; The Wound and Islanded with Children are full of inventive rhymes.

Other People's Troubles has its faults, however. At times, Sommer's control of rhythm slips – not as if what he is telling us bursts through formal bonds, but as if he forgets to listen to how the lines sound.

That said, this book is worth reading. Sommer gives us glimpses of lives which otherwise might be lost to memory; and he makes us want to keep the memory alive.

Music Together program an alternative teaching method

By CINDY WAXER
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Helen Bauer, director for the Greater Toronto Area of Music Together, a music program for parents/caregivers and their preschool children, teaches her young students how to sing and dance to the beat of their own drum.

Originally created in New Jersey in 1987, Music Together grew from an educational project at the Centre for Music and Young Children into a program that is currently being taught across North America.

Bauer discovered Music Together in Philadelphia after giving up a career as a paralegal to study at the city's Jewish Renewal Life Centre. "Initially, when I went to Philadelphia, it was with the intent of doing a six month community leadership program, and I ended up staying there for [over] two years. In that time, I found out about the Centre for Music and Young Children in New Jersey," she says.

After earning a license to teach Music Together, Bauer returned to her native Toronto and launched the first-ever Canadian branch. "It was just a marvellous experience...and I wanted to bring the concept here," she says.

For the 19 families currently enrolled in the program, the concept behind Music Together is a refreshing surprise. Whereas music courses traditionally stress the importance of scales and theory, Music Together emphasizes actual musical experiences.

Through the use of rudimentary tools such as scarves, sticks and egg shakers, preschool children and their parents sing songs, echo rhythmic and tonal patterns, chant, move, dance and explore musical instruments.

The program also facilitates vital interaction between young children and adults who value the importance of quality time.

"You're basically teaching on two levels. You're teaching the parent or caregiver and you're teaching the child. I encourage adults to really participate because they are their child's best role model," says Bauer.

In an era of cutbacks to the arts, where television threatens to replace a child's music teacher, Music Together also provides children with an exceedingly more animate and interactive alternative. "Human interaction is, I think, one of the bases for learning."

Bauer holds certificates in voice from the Royal Conservatory of Music and has sung professionally with choruses in Canada, the United States and in Israel for the Jerusalem 3000 celebrations.

For more information about the program call 416-789-4822.

SPIELBERG ATTACKED BY JOURNALIST

William Cash, a British journalist based in Los Angeles, generated a heap of controversy three years ago by writing a magazine article asserting that Hollywood is run by a "cabal" of Jewish kingpins, including David Geffen, Jeffrey Katzenberg, Mike Ovitz and Steven Spielberg, who systematically exclude non-Jews from the upper echelons of the film industry.

Cash, who wrote the piece for the British magazine the Spectator, was brazen enough to assert that the media do not expose the alleged conspiracy because they are part of it. The cabal's "official mouthpiece is the New York Times," he wrote.

Not surprisingly, the article was denounced as a mean-spirited anti-Semitic diatribe filled with unjustified generalizations and unwarranted stereotypes.

A group of Hollywood bigwigs, including Spielberg, wrote a letter to the Spectator, complaining that Cash's article contained "hateful scapegoating" and promulgated a "racist creed."

Now Cash comes bouncing back, like a bad cheque, with another poison pen article about – can't you guess? – Steven Spielberg and his latest film Amistad. In essence, the piece, which appeared in the Spectator and the Globe and Mail (Dec. 20), characterized Spielberg as a money-hungry, Oscar-hungry, racist filmmaker, who has no moral right to tell a story about black slavery.

Cash infers that Spielberg is taking "blood money" by not earmarking profits from Amistad for black foundations in the way that he donated profits from Schindler's List to Jewish causes. He also faults Spielberg for "drawing comparisons between Nazi concentration camps and the slave horrors" of the American black experience, though Spielberg does nothing of the kind.

Spielberg's acclaimed film The Color Purple was nothing more than "a self-aggrandizing and dishonest attempt both to win an Oscar and to apologize for the white supremacism of his earlier films," according to Cash.

"Spielberg knows well that making movies has never been purely about education and moral uplift," he writes. "They are about entertainment and, more important, making money."

Cash also infers that Spielberg's company, Dreamworks, is guilty of plagiarism, as one lawsuit has alleged, though that's clearly a matter for the courts to decide. It's astonishing to see how readily Cash abandons that great principle of democratic fairness, the presumption of innocence, along with other social niceties.

Should we be surprised that Cash paints a stereotypical portrait of a clamoring, gold-hungry Jew, whom he then proceeds to mock and delegitimize? Does the leopard change its spots?

More alarming, perhaps, is the Globe's decision to print such a shallow, vindictive critique under the seemingly supportive heading, "Amistad floundering in the wake of bad publicity." Those are the kinds of editorial choices that can give a newspaper a bad name.

Post-Holocaust Drama: The Puppetmaster of Lodz, by Gilles Segal and translated by Sara O'Connor, garnered high accolades in Europe and the United States in the 1950s. The story concerns a Jew who refuses to believe that the Holocaust is over and continues to hide in his room, rehearsing a new puppet show about his life.

Debbie Friedman in Concert: Singer-songwriter Debbie Friedman, whose prayer songs have become standards in numerous Reform temples, has become popular both in the Reform movement, where she began 25 years ago, and in the Jewish mainstream. Radio show explores faith and religion

CBC Radio One is kicking off a new season of Tapestry. In the coming months listeners will hear two kinds of Tapestry programs. Magazine-style shows that will present stories on faith and religion and hour long documentaries exploring a single theme.

The programs will weave together debate, reflection and celebrations in the personal journeys of people who are wrestling with their beliefs, traditional or otherwise.

This Sunday (Jan.11, 2 p.m. Eastern, Atlantic and Central), the topic will be Prayer and Medicine. A panel of Christian, Jewish and Muslim doctors who pray with their patients will be on hand to explore the ethics of a spiritual approach to healthcare.

A Jewish Wedding is a charming confection

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
Staff Reporter

She's Jewish, and he isn't. But by the time A Jewish Wedding comes to a graceful close, he has converted, they have been married and all is right with the world.

A charming confection to be broadcast on Vision TV on Jan. 13, 1998 at 9 p.m., A Jewish Wedding is a one-hour British film that borrows liberally from two forms – the documentary and the drama. That is to say, it is both factual and free floating in nature. In terms of structure, it is also quite unusual, non-linear rather than chronological.

The film, which moves along at a brisk clip to the sprightly strains of klezmer music, turns on Michaela, a city girl, and Steve, a country boy. They met at work, and now they are madly in love.

After their parents have seen to all the wedding arrangements, only two obstacles remain: Steve's impending surgical circumcision and the oral exam he must pass in order to halachically qualify as a Jew.

Structured around these events, A Jewish Wedding begins when Michaela and Steve, already man and wife, casually reminisce about the recent past. However, important roles are reserved for the parents of the bride, Barbara and Colin, and of the groom, Bob and Doris.

Barbara and Colin are fond of Steve, an amiable fellow who has appropriated Jewish words and colloquialisms into his vocabulary and who has a yen for chicken soup.

Bob and Doris, having never known Jews before, are looking forward to the wedding, which, they are sure, will be "something different."

Despite its generally mirthful tone, A Jewish Wedding is not without its moments of tension. In one relatively graphic scene, Steve gamely submits to the circumcision. And in another one, he takes his test of Judaic knowledge at the rabbinical court. He knows the wedding will have to be postponed if he cannot surmount this hurdle.

As the wedding date approaches, the overweight caterer appears, Colin is fitted for a tuxedo and top hat, and Michaela tries on wedding dresses for size, her mother being the final arbiter.

The traditional wedding takes place, and to the rhythmic beat of Hava Nagila, the reception unfolds. It is not quite as "glitzy" as Doris imagined it would be. Michaela and Steve are deliriously happy. A match made in heaven?

In a post-mortem, Colin justifies the expense of the wedding, while Barbara regrets the speed at which it happened. We empathize with her sentiment. Like the wedding itself, the film ends all too quickly.

L'CHAIM!

An exhibit of kiddush cups

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

SAN FRANCISCO — My late grandfather used to tell a story about a New York relative's visit to Toronto during the American prohibition years. On his return home, anxious to let our family know he'd succeeded in smuggling a bottle of legally-bought Canadian whiskey across the border, Cousin Philip sent a cryptic telegram: "Arrived safely. L'Chaim!"

What would this relative have thought, I wonder, about L'Chaim!, A Kiddush Cup Invitational, the current exhibit at San Francisco's Jewish Museum?

Doubtless my long-gone cousin, with his creative turn of mind and appreciation for the finer things in life, would have been intrigued.

The over 160 items in the exhibit include a few historical kiddush cups for context, but most are modern-day interpretations – some irreverent, some poignant, all symbolic. The latter, created especially for the exhibit in a variety of media by Jewish and non-Jewish artists in the United States and Israel, are all for sale.

Among the older items is an art deco-style three-handled wedding cup wrought of ruby glass and silver, on loan from the Judah Magnes Museum in Berkeley. Two handles bear the bride's and groom's initials respectively; the third has both monograms combined.

A silver gilt chevrah kadishah goblet from Augsburg, Germany, circa 1600, and at least one silver kiddush cup with a Toronto-San Francisco connection likewise offer contrast.

But in his wildest dreams, could Phil have imagined a Wild West glass resting in a carved wood base shaped like a cowboy on a bucking bronco?

Well, maybe, but I suspect he would have shaken his head in disbelief at the anatomically correct man and woman depicted in a blown glass, enamel paint and gold leaf interpretation in the Sukkot section of the exhibit.

Los Angeles artist Victor Raphael based the latter work on "the notion that Jews in every country and era have synthesized traditional and local elements to produce unique hybrids," he wrote.

The artists' statements – an integral part of the exhibit – provide telling commentary on modern-day Jewish issues.

Pamela Dernham Merory of Oakland, Calif., an artist whose two grandfathers were Jewish, created a multi-hued half-cup to reflect her thoughts on her dual heritage.

Other recurring themes include weddings, family, the role of women in Judaism and, to a lesser extent, Israel. The exhibit includes a number of Miriam cups, which hold water instead of wine, to honor the biblical Miriam.

Three contemporary items will be of particular note to visiting Canadians: A display of 16 shotglasses submitted by Ottawa-born Harley Swedler, now of Great Neck, N.Y., is one. Each glass bears a sandblasted word beginning with the letters "re" and alludes to a different aspect of making kiddush

Brother Thomas, an Erie, Pa., clergyman who designed a glazed porcelain "celebration cup" and plate, also has a Canadian connection – he was raised in Halifax.

And Toronto-born San Franciscan Dean Mermell designed a simple round-bottom glass set in a dramatic, curvilinear holder. Mermell's creation, entitled Ruach (Wind), symbolizes "the winds of change that have blown the Jews all about the world."

The museum is located at 121 Steuart St., in the Jewish Community Federation building. For further information, call 415-543-8880.

The Serruya Bros.

Meet the kings of frozen yogurt

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

MARKHAM, Ont. — Don't tell anybody, but as young teenagers, Michael and Aaron Serruya would set up shop outside concert locales and peddle bootleg T-shirts they'd printed themselves. "We've learned to respect trademarks since then, to say the least," said Aaron, using considerable understatement in a recent interview.

The oldest of four brothers, Michael, now 33, and Aaron, 31, have not only fine-tuned their business savvy, they've built a franchising empire from scratch in little more than a decade.

Relying mainly on chutzpah and sound instincts, they opened a frozen yogurt outlet in Thornhill's newly built Promenade shopping mall in 1986. They called it Yogen Früz, a made-up name to suggest frozen, fresh fruit and European élan.

Today Yogen Früz World-Wide Inc. is a publicly traded company registered in 126 countries, with sales of over $550 million. It has almost 4,000 outlets in places like Saudi Arabia, Indonesia, Israel, Malta, Poland, Taiwan and Argentina.

The company was ranked third in Entrepreneur magazine's "Franchise 500" for 1997, after McDonald's and Subway, and won a special citation in International Franchising as well as a Young Entrepreneur Ontario award in the 1997 Entrepreneur of the Year awards.

These days, instead of having their "office" at a nearby fast food table at the Promenade, Michael, Aaron and their brother Simon, 27, who joined the business after high school, run the company from a plush 6,600-square-foot office on the fifth floor of the Yogen Früz building on Woodbine Avenue in Markham.

Before Yogen Früz, Aaron, then 18 and fresh out of Thornlea Secondary School, spent a year in Miami Beach running his uncle's bagel shop. "It was a great learning experience," he recalled, ensconced behind the large desk in his spacious office. "I got to learn the food business. I learned what it is to talk about waste factors. You want to serve fresh product; you end up throwing things away."

When a frozen yogurt outlet opened next door to the bagel shop, Aaron realized the potential for bringing the concept to Canada. "Here I was with about 6,000 square feet, and this little yogurt shop next to me with 300 square feet was doing double the business. Then another yogurt shop opened down the road, and it was as busy as the first one. That's when I called Mike [then a graphic arts student working in the computer typesetting business their father Sam established after emigrating from Morocco in 1965] and said, 'You've got to get down here. You've got to see what's going on. We should see if we can get the rights for Canada.'"

The Serruyas tried in vain to obtain Canadian rights for I Can't Believe It's Yogurt – which they now own – and The Country's Best Yogurt (TCBY). They learned the American companies were not about to expand into the Canadian market just yet and decided to start their own business.

After six months of planning and with $38,000 in savings, along with a $68,000 loan from their father, they were ready. Within six months, they had repaid him, and a year after opening, they launched their first franchise in London, Ont.

Their 10-year goal was to have 50 stores. Within 2½ years, they did.

In the course of an hour-long interview in which Simon also took part (Michael was lecturing to business students at Ryerson Polytechnic University), Aaron managed to field a few phone calls and input information into his computer, balance a cigarette and somehow answer CJN questions articulately, barely slowing the pace of the interview.

Doubtless his high energy level had something to do with Yogen Früz's rapid expansion. "I think sleeping is a waste of time," he admitted.

Each brother has his own area of expertise. Michael, president and CEO of Yogen Früz World-Wide Inc., handles acquisitions, public relations and the stock market part of the business; Aaron, president and CEO of Yogen Früz Canada and executive vice-president of YF World-Wide is responsible for sales and marketing; and Simon, also an executive vice-president, is in charge of operations. Their father, Sam, who sold his business in 1990 to join them, deals with trademark issues. He is, said Aaron, a perfectionist, and with trademarks, "you can't have mistakes."

"We really complement each other," said Aaron. "We respect each other's area of expertise. I couldn't imagine not working with my brothers. Every night we sit around for one to two hours, so we know what we're all working on." Family dinners on Friday night also end up as informal business meetings.

A fourth brother, Jack, is 20 and the door is open for him, said Aaron.

"The way we work together is very positive," said Simon. "When one or two of us leave, we know everything is well taken care of."

After high school, he registered for university but decided to work with his brothers for six months. He's been there ever since.

Although none of them has formal business training, they've "learned a lot through trial and error," Simon said.

While the errors were sometimes costly, acknowledged Aaron, the company has remained debt-free since the brothers repaid the original loan, as well as a second one (to get the franchising started) from their father.

For the first year, Michael and Aaron concentrated on running their one outlet. "You have to know the business inside and out to do franchising. It gives you a better likelihood of surviving."

Master franchisees, who hold rights for geographic areas, spend a month in training – two weeks here and two weeks in their own country.

International expansion began in Indonesia, simply because "that's who came to us first," said Aaron. Yogen Früz has an office in Barbados that runs international operations.

One of their most promising locations is the Middle East, in large part due to the hot climate. "We've got stores there we've never seen," said Aaron, who has visited a couple of the locations in Arab countries. A single master franchisee has Yogen Früz rights for Israel, the Palestinian territory, Jordan, Lebanon and Egypt.

The Yogen Früz concept – in which a premeasured block of frozen yogurt is mixed with fruit while the customer waits – travels well, say the brothers. "What you see in Thornhill, you're going to see in Indonesia," said Aaron.

And although the toppings may not all be kosher, the yogurt itself is low fat and kosher under the supervision of the Kashruth Council of Toronto (COR).

The fruit may vary, however, to cater to local tastes. In Thailand, the best-selling flavor is lichee. Here, it's strawberry – even in December, Yogen Früz's busiest month in Canada, when mall traffic is high and indoor temperatures are considerably higher than those outdoors.

"It's a simple concept. Everyone loves a treat," said Simon.

In fact, Yogen Früz pretty well breezed through recessionary times, in part because customers would still treat themselves to a frozen yogurt while cutting back on big-ticket items, and in part because of an increased interest in purchasing franchises on the part of newly unemployed entrepreneurs who had experienced downsizing.

In addition to increasing its number of franchises, Yogen Früz has expanded dramatically with several acquisitions, starting with Yogurty's in 1991. It added ice cream company Bresler's Industries in 1995 and, most recently, Integrated Brands Inc., which distributes frozen foods under labels like Tropicana and Yoplait.

New directions for Yogen Früz here include opening new outlets in "non-traditional" locations such as the one the company donated to the Hospital for Sick Children (their corporate "charity of choice" for the next three years), and further "co-branding," by selling their product within a larger, complementary outlet like Country Style Donuts, where they initiated the concept in 1992.

"We still want to open up several thousand more stores," said Aaron. Chile, for example, has 13 Yogen Früz outlets. "We should have 40 at the end of the day.

"The key for us is, as long as the opportunity is there and as long as we keep enjoying it, why not grow?"

Is your medicine making you sick?

TORONTO — For the past year, 68-year-old Mrs. S. has been taking a drug called naprosyn to ease the aches and pains caused by her osteoarthritis. During her last two office visits, her doctor noted that her blood pressure was high, so he started her on anti-hypertensive therapy.

TO YOUR HEALTH

The diagnosis of hypertension upset Mrs. S. and she also began to experience unpleasant side effects from the diuretic drug prescribed to control her high blood pressure.

What Mrs. S. and her doctor should have known was that, besides easing pain and inflammation, naprosyn and other anti-inflammatory drugs can cause blood pressure to rise to abnormal levels in many older people.

"This type of situation – which we refer to as the 'prescribing cascade' – is all too common among older people," says Dr. Paula Rochon, a geriatrician and researcher at Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care. "Older patients are more likely to have one or more medical conditions that require drug treatment, and creating optimal drug regimens that meet their needs requires careful planning."

Rochon and Dr. Jerry H. Gurwitz, a geriatrician and director of the Meyers Primary Care Institute in Worcester, Mass., recently published an article on the prescribing cascade in the British Medical Journal.

According to Rochon and Gurwitz, studies show that 28 percent of elderly people admitted to U.S. hospitals are there because of drug-related problems – most commonly adverse reactions to prescription medication.

The prescribing cascade occurs when an adverse drug reaction (in Mrs. S.'s case, a rise in her blood pressure) is misinterpreted by the physician as a new medical condition. The doctor then prescribes a second drug to treat the original drug reaction, which may lead to more unwanted and often unnecessary side effects.

Instead of treating her drug-induced hypertension with another drug, says Rochon, Mrs. S.'s doctor should have linked the blood pressure rise to her use of the anti-inflammatory drug naprosyn and then explored safer alternatives to relieve her arthritis pain.

Known side effect

For example, another type of pain reliever such as acetaminophen might have been just as effective. Or else Mrs. S. could have been advised to try other methods to reduce her pain – for example, gentle exercises or weight reduction. Or the doctor might have suggested that she continue to use naprosyn, but take it less often and at a lower dose.

There are other common scenarios involving the prescribing cascade that patients and their doctors should know about, says Rochon.

Mr. P., age 78, had been taking a diuretic drug for several years to control his high blood pressure. After he started to experience pain in his toe joints, his doctor ordered a blood test, which revealed that he was suffering from gout – a condition caused by a build-up of uric acid and uric salts in the bloodstream. Accordingly, Mr. P.'s doctor prescribed another drug to treat his gout.

In fact, this build-up of uric acid in the blood, called hyperuricemia, is a known side effect of certain types of diuretic drugs, says Rochon. Instead of prescribing a new drug to treat Mr. P.'s gout, his doctor should have tried switching him to another kind of diuretic that might have controlled his high blood pressure without causing gout.

Mrs. F., age 86, had recently started taking a drug to treat heartburn caused by a condition that causes stomach contents to flow back into the esophagus. A few months later, her daughter noticed that Mrs. F. had developed some stiffness, so Mrs. F. was started on another medication to treat what her doctor believed were early signs of Parkinson's disease.

In fact, stiffness is a known side effect of the drug prescribed for Mrs. F.'s heartburn. One study found that patients taking it were three times more likely to be started on anti-Parkinson's drugs, because doctors mistakenly diagnosed the side effects as early symptoms of Parkinson's disease.

Rochon believes the risks of the so-called prescribing cascade are largely preventable.

Strategies to reduce risk could include using non-drug treatment to manage the original medical condition, lowering the dose of the implicated drug to the lowest possible dose that's effective and considering alternative medication that might be safer in terms of their adverse effects on older patients.

CJN Purim Art Contest

It's time again for our fourth annual Purim Art Contest and we are looking for drawings about Purim from students in elementary school.

Who can enter: Children from grades 1 to 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes: The judges will choose one drawing from two different students in each grade. These "winning" drawings will be published in The CJN on March 12. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a cheque for $25.

How to enter: You may submit as many drawings as you want. However, they should not be too small or too large. Please paint, draw, or color bright, bold, colorful pictures. You may use markers, crayons, paint or pencils. And you can even give them a title. Please send us your name, address, phone number, school and grade along with your drawings.

You may mail or deliver your drawings to: CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 1500 Don Mills Road, Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 27, 1998. We will undoubtedly receive many wonderful submissions from children all across the country. But only 12 of the drawings will be chosen for publication as "winners." The judges will base their decision on a number of factors such as: the use of color, the imaginative quality of the drawing and the way it tells an aspect of the story of Purim. The judges' decisions will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and quality of submissions received.

How the Winner will be announced: The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of Shabbat on Friday, March 6, 1998.

When the prizes will be awarded: The "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN of March 12, 1998. Have fun and good luck.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Régie des Loteries et courses du Québec.

Cemetery desecrated

Argentine police blamed

By SERGIO KIERNAN
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

Exactly one week later, 22 tombstones were destroyed at a Jewish cemetery located in a suburb of Buenos Aires.

Luis Lugones, a lawyer who was recently appointed to reform the capital's notoriously corrupt police force, said the point of the attacks was to "cause chaos and instability in the force."

"The attackers will be found and punished," he said.

"We believe that former policemen or people hired by policemen carried out both attacks against our cemeteries," Beraja said.

Members of Buenos Aires' police force have been suspected of involvement in the 1994 bombing of the AMIA Jewish community centre, which killed 86 people. But no suspects have been charged and the crime remains unsolved.

After years of investigation of corruption, the province's governor took a number of steps in early December to reform the force, including the dismissal of 300 precinct lieutenants.

The newspaper Pagina 12 recently quoted a former lieutenant who announced "reprisals" to protest the changes in the force.

"Former cops will not lay down. They shall hit. They will rob banks and attack Jews," the unnamed lieutenant told the paper.

Police sources said in an interview that the group, the Buenos Aires Movement, is directed by some of the former lieutenants.

"They are out now, but they have friends still in the force that will protect them, that will look the other way," the source said.

Murder conviction ends Jackal's terror career

By DOUGLAS DAVIS
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

LONDON — For more than two decades, "Carlos the Jackal" was the symbol of international terrorism.

This high-living killer-for-hire, who had sown fear around the world, had inspired authors and a genre of movies, the latest being the recently released film "The Assignment."

But when the fabled terrorist, whose real name is Illich Ramirez Sanchez, was recently convicted of murder, it was clear that the mystique was gone.

Indeed, it was a slightly comical, pathetic figure of a debauched and overweight 48-year-old playboy who emerged from a Paris court to start serving a life sentence for killing two French secret service agents and their Lebanese accomplice in a Paris apartment on June 27, 1975.

Those charges reflected a mere token of the killings attributed to the Venezuelan-born doctrinaire Marxist, who is estimated to have taken at least 80 lives on behalf of his Palestinian and other masters.

France still expects to try Carlos for his alleged role in a series of bomb attacks that claimed 17 lives in France between 1979 and 1982.

He is also wanted in Germany for allegedly bombing Berlin's French cultural centre, and in Austria for his most spectacular raid – the kidnapping of 11 OPEC oil ministers in Vienna in 1975.

The trial of Carlos marked the official end of his terrorist career, but he had already been supplanted by international terrorists of a different ilk.

Carlos has little in common with the shadowy Islamic terrorists of the 1990s, who specialize in indiscriminate mass murder as they pursue jihad, holy war, against the godless West with the promise of paradise-to-come.

Their austere regime of faith bears no resemblance to the lifestyle of Carlos, which was dedicated to the pursuit of pleasures: fast women, fine wines and chunky Cuban cigars by night; spy videos, business magazines and cafe culture by day.

The generation of terror that gave birth to Carlos was centered around a charismatic leader who was well paid and well connected, with networks that extended across Europe and into Asia – the Irish Republican Army in Britain, the Red Brigades in Italy, the Baader-Meinhof gang in Germany and the Japanese Red Army.

The personality cult remains a potent element for today's terrorists, but the object of adoration and obedience is not the romantic, university-educated, middle-class suburbanite with trademark beard and designer sunglasses who is propelled down a frenzied path toward revolutionary fervor and high explosives.

Instead, Islamic terrorist groups tend to be centered around religious leaders, such as the blind Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman, who inspired the attempt to blow up the World Trade Centre in New York, and the quadriplegic Sheik Ahmed Yassin, founder of Hamas and champion of the Palestinian suicide bomber.

And unlike the tight, cellular structures created by their predecessors, the modern Middle East terrorist group is more likely to be "project-driven," based on custom-built units designed for specific operations, drawing on battle-trained specialists from such theatres as Afghanistan, Bosnia, Chechnya, Algeria, Azerbaijan, Egypt and Sudan.

These informal, decentralized terrorist structures of the 1990s are fluid, mobile and dynamic, posing a significantly greater challenge to counter-terrorism experts than the operations of the past.

Some of today's terrorists live in hospitable Middle Eastern environments under the protection of Iran, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Libya or Sudan. But many more exploit the democratic freedoms of the West to preach their doctrine of religious extremism, to recruit followers, raise funds, plan operations, organize logistics and issue orders.

The modern terrorists are able to blend into their pluralistic Western environments, but they despise what they perceive as the liberal decadence of the West and remain uncompromising opponents of its accompanying materialist, secularist culture.

Born in Venezuela in 1949, he is one of three sons of a wealthy Marxist lawyer, Jose Altagarcia Ramirez Navas. His brothers are Vladimir and Lenin, who was named for the first leader of the Soviet Union.

At age 17, Carlos travelled to London to study chemistry – "I'm great at making explosives," he said at his trial – and two years later, in 1968, enrolled at Moscow's Patrice Lumumba University, though Soviet authorities expelled him for participating in an unauthorized demonstration.

Having drunk deeply from the well of revolutionary thought, he emerged into the world in 1971 ready to put belief into practice.

He travelled to the Middle East and chose the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine – a militant, Marxist vehicle for promoting the Palestinian cause – to launch his career as an international terrorist.

One of his first acts, in 1973, was to brazenly walk through the front door of the London home of Edward Sieff, then a prominent Zionist leader and head of the British chain store Marks and Spencer, and coolly shoot him in the face.

Sieff survived, but the Jackal's career was launched.

By the end of the 1980s, however, the world in which Carlos thrived was changing.

After the Cold War ended and Middle Eastern governments began peacemaking efforts, Carlos was abandoned by the very states – east European and Arab – that had supported his actions.

In 1991, Syria suggested that Carlos – who had established a comfortable life in a Damascus suburb under the cover of a Mexican businessman with his German wife and fellow terrorist, Magdalena Kopp, and two children – find a home elsewhere.

Refused shelter by Iraq and Libya, he finally found refuge in the Sudanese capital of Khartoum in August 1993.

By all accounts, Carlos spent his final year of freedom indulging in the pleasures of the flesh rather than revolutionary fervor.

He had shed his family and arrived in Sudan with a glamorous Lebanese belly dancer. Soon after, he acquired an attractive Sudanese companion. The trio became regulars in the Cypriot and Armenian clubs where bootleg alcohol is available at spectacular prices.

What Carlos did not know was that once in Khartoum, he was tracked day and night by an American spy satellite, which is capable of monitoring objects as small as 6 inches.

On Aug. 13, 1996, Carlos finally let his guard down when he checked into Khartoum's Ibu Khalmud hospital for minor surgery. That evening, plainclothes Sudanese state security agents persuaded him to transfer to a military hospital for his own security.

In the wee hours of Aug. 14, still groggy from the effects of the anesthetic, Sudanese security officials handed him over to French intelligence agents who swiftly injected him with a powerful sedative, handcuffed and hooded him, before bundling him into a sack and whisking him off to a nearby airfield.

Seven hours later, the French government aircraft touched down outside Paris. When Carlos came to, he was under arrest.

Now, unless his vowed appeal is successful, he will spend the rest of his life in jail.

Neilson returning to Metulla hockey camp

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Why tinker with a winning formula?

Last year's edition of the Roger Neilson hockey camp proved such a runaway success that the program will be returning to the Canada Centre recreational complex in Metulla for a repeat performance.

From Aug. 9 to 23, Canadian high school kids and their Israeli counterparts will lace up their Tacks and Bauers and take to the Olympic-size ice surface at Canada Centre for hockey instruction from Neilson and other professional instructors. Two NHL players are expected to participate in the unique venture, which is a joint project of the United Israel Appeal (UIA) of Canada, Canada Centre and the Canada Israel Experience Centre. Partnership 2000, a program subsided by the Jewish Agency, will partly fund the project, while Roots is the camp's corporate sponsor.

In its second year, the program will be bigger and better than ever, promises Eli Rubenstein, director of young leadership development for the UIA. Canadian participation is expected to be double over last summer's numbers when 15 young Canucks from coast to coast helped launch the camp. They were joined by 35 very excited Israeli teens who were thrilled to get expert instruction from an NHL coach and an NHL player, Bill Lindsay of the Florida Panthers, Rubenstein said.

Two NHLers are expected to participate in 1998, along with goalie instructor Marshall Starkman, other members of Neilson's Peterborough-area hockey school, and Jeff Budd, the Kitchener-Waterloo native who served for three years as coordinator of volunteer services at Canada Centre.

Budd said last year's camp "made interest in hockey jump a hundredfold. The kids who were in it had their mouths open with excitement," he said.

The camp, along with the high level hockey exhibition put on by the Canadian and American teams at the Maccabiah Games in July, gave the sport a lot more exposure in the area. Many Israelis came out to see the tournament's two best teams lock horns and "when the United States and Canada really thumped it up, the Israelis ate it up," he said.

Budd said the hockey camp, which followed the Maccabiah games by about a month, gave the instructors a taste of life in Israel's northernmost community.

"In Metulla you hear booms all the time. Mostly it's Israeli outgoing artillery" heading to Lebanon. But once last summer, a Katyusha rocket attack was aimed at Metulla and the campers headed down to bomb shelters. Next thing they knew, Neilson and Lindsay were down in the shelter playing in a ping pong tournament with the kids.

"It really touched them to see what the kids in the north have to go through to play hockey," Budd said.

"All of the kids were really keen," Neilson agreed. "The hockey people were all impressed with how hard they worked."

Neilson is already looking forward to next summer's camp and a return visit to the Holy Land. He had toured Israel twice before last summer and believes "Israel is one of the best countries in the world to visit. The group [of hockey people] had a great time," he said, adding they weren't dissuaded by the visit to the bomb shelter. Most Israelis will tell you there's more danger from drivers on Israel's highways, he said.

Neilson said Lindsay had expressed some interest in returning, but at this stage, it's unclear which two pros will round out the camp's staff. Last year, Lindsay was joined by Mike Brewer, Carl's son, as an on-ice instructor.

For organizers, the camp is more than just an example of hockey culture coming to Israel. Its main raison d'etre is to link Diaspora teens with their counterparts in Israel, Budd said.

"Hockey is not the end goal of the project," Rubinstein stated. "It's the means to an end. It creates a living bridge between Canadian and Israeli kids and it creates a love for Israel."

The UIA is involved because Canada Centre was constructed largely with Canadian funds, Rubenstein continued. In addition, the Canada Israel Experience Centre, a UIA agency, operates youth programs in Israel. Hockey was seen as a natural means to bring the two countries together.

Although the program is partially subsidized, the program's fee is $995, which includes the hockey camp, as well as touring Israel's north and a Shabbat in Jerusalem. For an additional $895, participants can opt for an extra eight-day Israel experience to follow the camp, with more touring and other activities, Rubenstein said.

Program representatives have been appointed in most large Canadian centres. For more information, call: in Toronto, 416-398-6931; in Montreal: 514-345-6449; in Vancouver, 604-257-5140; in Ottawa, 613-789-5010; and in the rest of Canada, call 1-800-567-4772.

TORONTO — York University will present a taste of the Orient as part of the Excalibur Volleyball Classic on Jan. 9, 10 and 11 at the Tait Athletic Centre.

This year's tournament features the participation of a top-ranked team from the University of Tsukuba in Japan.

Their involvement marks the first time in the 19-year history of the tournament that a team from outside North America will compete. It is also the first time that a Japanese men's team has ever played in Ontario.

The University of Tsukuba will enter the tournament as the top seed. The school has dominated their Kanto-area league in 1997 and placed third in the All-Japan Inter-College Volleyball Tournament. Three of their players are members of both the 1997 Japanese Universiade and national teams.

The Japanese volleyballers will face tough Canadian competition, including the defending tournament champions, the University of Sherbrooke. They are rated fourth in the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union (CIAU). Seventh-ranked York Yeomen, the University of Laval, eighth in CIAU rankings, the University of Toronto, ninth in the CIAU, Western Ontario and Waterloo round out the event.

York will kick off the tournament with a match against Tsukuba on Friday afternoon, with the final to be held at 3 p.m. on Sunday, Jan. 11.

Jewish posters a treasure

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Jerry Faivish knows the power of the image.

And when the image is linked with words, the message can be explosive, seductive, tweaking or just plain informative. Sometimes, its politically incorrect, by today's standards anyway.

Faivish ought to know. It's fair to say he has one of the largest private collections of Jewish-themed posters in the country, each unique in its message.

Rolled up in the basement of his Toronto home are nearly 2,000 posters and poster-sized broadsheets, on subjects ranging from Zionism, Soviet Jewry, Hollywood, travel to Israel, local rallies and information meetings. Some are pure propaganda; others examples of the most malicious anti-Semitism imaginable.

But each is its own treasure – neat units of color and text, combining to illuminate, shock, edify or even tickle the funny bone.

Faivish, 44, knows he would have to quit his day job – he's a lawyer – to properly look after and catalogue the collection. Failing that, he photographs each poster for placement in an album, and regularly lectures, most recently during Holocaust Education Week, on the power of the poster.

"Posters are a reflection of history," he says. "They're a great teaching tool."

He divides the collection into three major themes, corresponding to the seminal events in 20th century Jewish history: the Holocaust, Israel and the struggle for Soviet Jewry. The largest bloc deals with Israel and Zionism. Most are in English, but some are in Yiddish, French, Hebrew and other languages.

He began his hobby about 15 years ago, and picks up posters anywhere he can, from organizations, dealers, private individuals and sometimes at auctions.

Faivish got hooked when he noticed that in Israel, posters in public view were routinely plastered over with more posters. His initial efforts were geared toward saving the posters, each of which reflected a rich slice of Israeli cultural and political life.

The oldest poster in his collection is about 100 years old, and the most Faivish has paid for one is $1,000, but he won't say for which.

A small sampling has the remarkable power to twig memories. The section on Soviet Jewry and another on the Palestine Liberation Organization take the viewer right back to the 1970s and early '80s.

Culture aficionados would appreciate Faivish's impressive collection of posters touting Yiddish theatre, concerts, art shows, film festivals and Hollywood movies with Jewish themes.

Posters from both world war eras invite Canadian Jews to buy war bonds, attend rallies and even to sign up for service.

But perhaps no chunk of Faivish's collection evokes more emotion than those which attack Jews.

"Posters had a big effect on mass psychology," Faivish explains. "They played a big role in whipping up anti-Semitic feelings in Europe."

APPLE PIE "PIZZA"

Crust:
2 cups flour	2 tblsp. granulated sugar 1 tsp. salt	2 tblsp. milk 2/3 cup canola oil
Filling:
4-6 apples, peeled, cores removed (about 4 cups sliced apples)		1/2 cup granulated sugar 1 tsp. cinnamon 1/4 tsp. nutmeg
Topping:
3 tblsp. hard butter		1/4 cup flour 3 tblsp. brown sugar

Combine dry crust ingredients in medium bowl. Stir milk into oil and pour over dry ingredients. Stir liquid and dry ingredients together until mixture almost - but not quite - sticks together. Empty into a 12" pizza pan sprayed with nonstick vegetable oil spray and, using your hands, press mixture evenly into pan so it covers the entire surface to form the crust. Cut apples in slices and arrange over top of crust in overlapping, circular rows. Mix remaining filling ingredients together and sprinkle over apples. Cut topping ingredients together with pastry blender until crumbly (like tiny peas). Sprinkle over filling. Bake in preheated 400°F oven 10 minutes, then reduce heat to 350°F (without removing pie from oven) and continue to bake for an additional 10-15 minutes or until apples are soft when pierced with fork. Serve topped with whipped cream, ice cream or slices of aged Cheddar cheese. Serves 10-12 .

About Life

Dear Ella,

I'm writing to you for advice about my husband. Believe me, I love Jack dearly, however, it seems that since we've gotten married he has lost the ability to think for himself.

He consults with me about everything. Anything from important matters like changes in his job, to small things like what he should eat or wear. As far as helping with the kids, he's willing to do anything, as long as I tell him what it is. The baby needs to eat, Jack; he feeds the baby, let the dog out, Jack; he lets the dog out. I have two kids to make decisions for. It's almost like having a third.

The man I married was strong in body mind and soul. He would never wait for me to tell him it's cold outside and he should wear a heavy coat.

What's happened to my independent pillar?

Give Me A Break

Dear Give Me A Break

It sounds like Jack has gotten used to you making all the decisions. As a responsible mother and wife you probably do make a lot of decisions and possibly in your busy hectic schedule you don't have time to think who you are making them for. You are in that mode and you do what you have to do to get things done and get through the day.

Try being conscious of what you say to Jack and don't tell him to put his coat on when it's cold out. What do you think will happen? He will either do it for himself, or freeze and do it for himself next time.

As far as helping with the kids, that's a more difficult issue because he is now accustomed to and comfortable with letting you make the decisions about everything.

Try going out one evening and leaving Jack alone with the kids before you've fed them, bathed them and laid out their pj's. What would happen? Would they go hungry? Would he put them to bed in dirty diapers, in their street clothes? Probably not. But you are afraid to try because you haven't seen him do it on his own. Maybe that's because by the time you find him and instruct him, you could have done it yourself.

Try giving him duties that are his alone. Ease him back into taking initiative and not depending on you for everything. Let go a little and be more tolerant of things not being done exactly as you would do them. Eventually it might all fall back into place.

Like the tides that surge and recede by dint of beckoning forces, our lives too are shaped by energies and currents that we mostly feel, but can neither see nor understand.

However, during the first 10 days of Tishrei, the days of introspection and of self-assessment, the passage of our years becomes somehow clearer to us. For religious and irreligious alike, Rosh Hashanah reminds us of time's constant melancholy tug upon the forward momentum of our lives.

Time – and the awareness of it – are ever present factors that shape human life. And how we relate to time is an ever present factor that shapes individual lives.

The late Rabbi Joseph B. Soloveitchik wrote that consciousness of time, along with consciousness of place, were the two fundamental dimensions of kedushah, of holiness. But he pointed out there were two categories of time-consciousness: qualitative and quantitative. Only the former, qualitative time-consciousness, he emphasized, was the means to a life of higher meaning and purpose, of commitment and creativity.

Editorial

Qualitative time-consciousness, he wrote, was "the appreciation of the enormous implications inherent in the fleeting moments of the present. No fraction of time, however infinite, should slip through the fingers, left unexploited; for eternity may depend upon the brief moment."

The contrast between the timeless, innocent, endearing little boy and the timeless, ancient craggy stones of the Wall enables us to see and helps us to understand what we usually can only feel, what Rabbi Soloveitchik referred to as the "enormous implications in the fleeting moments of the present."

The page of the calendar turns to 5758 and we will pray that no longer will infinite fractions of time slip through our fingers.

Bibi speaks to The CJN

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu gave a Rosh Hashanah interview in his Jerusalem office to Edgar Asher, The CJN's Israel correspondent. The conversation covered many of the present political, social and economic issues that affect the Jewish people in Israel and in the Diaspora.

CJN: Mr Netanyahu, would you give your views concerning the crisis over the occupation of the house in Ras Al Amud, following the Sept. 18 agreement with U.S. millionaire Irving Moskowitz, which resulted in the three families leaving his east Jerusalem property.

NETANYAHU: Israelis have the right to live anywhere within the sovereign territory of Israel. But in the case of Jerusalem we tend to build neighborhoods in particular places. There will be a new neighborhood in Har Choma, thousands of houses for both Jews and Arabs. Har Choma is empty and very large. It is government policy to permit private contractors to build at Har Choma — we haven't decided to build in Ras Al Amud.

The question of the law of eviction and protection of property is clear, but the law is not so clear about national security risks and this we have to consider also. We want to defuse the tension and preserve the unity and rights of the people. It is a complicated equation, but I think it is achievable.

By JANICE ARNOLD
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Bialik High School principal Paul Shaviv was awakened at 5 a.m. Shabbat morning by the city of Cote St. Luc telling him his school had to be opened immediately as an emergency shelter and infirmary.

The King David Residence, a home for frail elderly, had lost power and had to be evacuated. In addition to its own residents, the King David has been housing residents for the Waldorf, another seniors residence that had earlier lost power.

Shaviv made a request by radio for volunteers and within two hours, some 100 students were available to assist the professionals leading Montreal's emergency services. That Saturday night, 200 slept in the school. By Sunday, 400 had found refuge at at Bialik.

The school itself lost power briefly, but thankfully has its own generator. Food was being prepared at nearby Mount Sinai Hospital. By Monday, Shaviv's biggest concern was finding enough towels for many who had not had a shower in days.

"Everybody, Jewish and non-Jewish, has been absolutely outstanding, especially the young people," he said.

The Tifereth Beth David Jerusalem Synagogue in Cote St. Luc was Montreal's first kosher shelter, accommodating, feeding and caring for hundreds. Many caterers and other food suppliers donated food.

Not all who came were elderly; when contacted, organizers were preparing for the arrival of a young mother who had just given birth by Caesarean section and was being released from the hospital. They were planning to put her in the bridal room.

Congregation Shaar Hashomayim in Westmount was a shelter, with 130 sleeping on cots in its posh smaller reception hall Sunday night, and some families in classrooms of adjoining Akiva School.

The Shaar itself provided food, cooking it on the premises. On Monday, an order had gone out for another 120 cots for the expected newcomers, and the main Metcalfe Hall was to be opened up as well.

France remembers Dreyfus and Zola

By DOUGLAS DAVIS
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

LONDON — French leaders are finally ready to pay homage to Capt. Alfred Dreyfus.

Exactly 100 years after Emile Zola penned his famous "J'accuse" in defence of Dreyfus, French officials gathered this week to commemorate the writer and the wrongly convicted Jewish officer.

The Jan. 13 ceremony recalling one of the most shameful episodes in French history was to be attended by French President Jacques Chirac, Prime Minister Lionel Jospin, Justice Minister Elisabeth Guigou and Defence Minister Alain Richard.

It was not until the mid-1970s that the Dreyfus Affair could even be mentioned on French state radio and television.

And it was not until 1995 – 101 years after Dreyfus was convicted – that Gen. Jean-Louis Mourrut, head of the army's historical service, publicly admitted that the army had made a mistake after all.

The attendance of the French president and his most senior ministers at this week's tribute to Dreyfus and Zola suggests that France is

ISRAEL

Israel Releases Prisoners

JERUSALEM — Israel has released 23 Palestinian prisoners as part of a goodwill gesture for the Muslim holy month of Ramadan.

Among the prisoners released was a Palestinian woman held without charge since October, who had become a symbol of resistance to many Palestinians.

Itaf Alayan, 35, an activist with the militant Islamic Jihad movement, had staged a 40-day hunger strike that ended last month, when she reportedly received assurances from Israeli officials that her case would be reviewed.

She had been held in administrative detention under military laws that enable Israeli officials to hold people considered security risks indefinitely without charging them or bringing them to trial.

Conservatives Get Grant

JERUSALEM — A New York foundation has given a boost to the Conservative movement's plan to expand its Jerusalem headquarters.

The $5-million grant from the Fuchsberg Family Foundation comes amid the Conservative movement's campaign to raise $18 million for the facility.

Conservative movement delegates who were attending the recent World Zionist Congress gathered here at the Centre for Conservative Judaism last month to formally dedicate the beginning of the centre's expansion.

WORLD

WASHINGTON — A record 8,734 hate crimes were reported to the FBI in 1996, U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno announced last week.

Of the 1,400 religion-motivated hate crimes, more than 1,100 – or nearly 80 percent – were anti-Jewish. Overall, hate crimes against Jews accounted for nearly 13 percent of all hate activity.

Up from about 8,000 reported incidents in 1995, the overall increase in hate crimes reflects a record number of law enforcement agencies reporting such incidents, and not necessarily an increase in hate activity.

N.Y. Law To Help Agunot

NEW YORK — New York State's get law, which is seen as helping agunot, or "chained wives," obtain a religious divorce has survived a constitutional challenge – basically due to a technicality.

But the future of the controversial 1992 law, which authorizes judges to take into consideration the circumstances of the agunot when ruling on property division during divorce cases, will remain on the front burner for several Orthodox groups who sharply disagree with it.

Swiss Bank Helped Nazis

NEW YORK — At least one Swiss bank was involved in transferring money for high-ranking Nazi officials from Germany to Switzerland at the end of World War II, according to a document found in the Swiss Federal Archives.

The document – a letter written by a Swiss army officer at the end of the war – was released last week by U.S. Senate Banking Committee chair Alfonse D'Amato, who has been one of Switzerland's harshest critics.

Israel Series Cancelled

WASHINGTON — The Smithsonian Institution has cancelled a controversial Israel at 50 series that was slated to take a critical look at the Jewish state.

Bowing to pressure from some American Jewish groups and threats of congressional hearings, the Smithsonian pulled the plug on a seven-week speaker series scheduled for this spring.

Instead, the Smithsonian Associates, the museum's research and outreach arm, will run its own program in the late spring or early summer.

Web Address Tangle

NEW YORK — A legal battle may be brewing between a messianic group and an anti-missionary activist over similar Web site addresses.

Steven Brodsky, a lawyer, has established a new Web site aimed at countering the activities of Jews for Jesus. The address is [www.jewsforjesus.org].

Jews for Jesus, which operates its site at [www.jews-for-jesus.org], has warned Brodsky to change his address or face legal action for trademark infringement.

Feminism and Orthodoxy

NEW YORK — Women committed to Orthodox Judaism will hold the Second Annual International Conference on Feminism and Orthodoxy Feb. 15 and 16 at the Grand Hyatt Hotel in Manhattan. For more information call 1-800-550-6614.

Jews in Labor Camps

LONDON — Some of Switzerland's most famous ski resorts were the sites of forced labor camps for Jewish refugees during World War II.

This latest revelation – unveiled in a British television documentary last week – is likely to further tarnish the pristine reputation of neutrality that the Swiss had nurtured over the past half-century.

Switzerland has always denied that any of the approximately 25,000 Jewish refugees who were permitted to enter the country during the war, along with other non-Swiss Jews – some of whom had lived in Switzerland for years – were subjected to forced labor.

But the mounting body of evidence, supported by recently released official documents and backed by victims' statements, has swept away any lingering doubts.

Community welcomes Sephardi chief rabbi

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

THORNHILL — The Sephardi chief rabbi of Israel takes a hard line religiously, but his political stance is more moderate, as evidenced by recent interfaith meetings.

"We must do everything in our power to achieve peace. If we have to do surgery, that hurts, but if we're sure that this is for real peace, we must do this," said Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron in an interview Saturday night following his address to almost 600 people at Sephardic Kehila Centre. He questioned, however, whether concessions would bring peace closer or would endanger Israel's peace and security.

Following last year's bombing in Machane Yehuda, Rabbi Bakshi-Doron contacted Sheikh Tantawi of Egypt's main Islamic seminary, El-Ezhar, he told The CJN. Sheikh Tantawi acceded to his request to issue a religious decree saying suicide is not allowed. The mufti of Gaza, Sheikh Yassin, however, still publicly endorses terrorism, the rabbi noted.

Rabbi Bakshi-Doron said he also arranged a joint Jewish-Muslim anti-terror resolution. His future plans include continuing work toward a meeting with the mufti in Syria. "That's much more difficult.

"We have come to the conclusion that peace is not only made between politicians and statesmen," said the chief rabbi. "Some of the most horrible terrorist attacks were in the name of religion.

"Anyone who does not condemn terror ultimately sees it in their own backyard," he warned.

Within the Jewish community, he said, the resolution endorsing pluralism that was passed at the recent World Zionist Congress obligates neither the Jewish state nor the rabbinate. "This [endorsement] is something that will change with time.

"The people of Israel, in order to preserve itself over thousands of years, has maintained its tradition. This is not a question of one congress or another," Rabbi Bakshi-Doron stated in the interview.

Visited Montreal

The rabbi declined to comment on the Ne'eman Committee, to which he sent an envoy several weeks ago. He said only that he heard following his arrival in Canada that there was a "crisis" in the committee. (The rabbi spent three days visiting the Jewish community in Montreal last week as a guest of the Grand Rabbinat du Québec before coming to Toronto, where he spent three days as a guest of the Sephardic Kehila Centre.)

Rabbi Bakshi-Doron was the subject of controversy in July 1996, when it was reported that remarks he had made were interpreted by some people as condoning the murder of Reform Jewish leaders. Given the opportunity to set the record straight, the rabbi stuck to his assertion that Reform "knows how to do propaganda," but emphasized that killing is not even allowed.

Media reports at the time indicated the rabbi had said it is sometimes necessary to take extreme action. He offered no clarification Saturday night as to what he meant by that.

In his lecture, the quiet-spoken rabbi, who was born in Jerusalem in 1941, praised the Sephardic Kehila Centre, which opened in September, as a structure worthy of being carried to Jerusalem once the Mashiach arrives, particularly because it includes a school (Or HaEmet Sephardic School).

He said he found it heartwarming to see the concern of Jews here for Israel. He acknowledged the seriousness of Israel's economic and security problems, but said a more serious problem is the spiritual state of the Jewish nation.

He noted that Israel's economy and security problems are "still better than in past years

"[G-d] will take care of us…and indeed we should continue to pray."

He believes it is up to Israel to be "the guiding light for the Diaspora…Jewish numbers in the Diaspora are declining through assimilation and intermarriage. This is a great concern.

"For the last 50 years, you, the Jews of the Diaspora, have helped us sustain ourselves. It is now time for us to pay you back," he said. Israel, with its five million-strong Jewish population, is expected to become the largest Jewish centre in the world very shortly, he noted.

Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron

While Israel still needs financial support from the Diaspora, he said, he feels it's Israel's duty to stop assimilation by ensuring there is "proper Jewish education" in all Diaspora communities.

The chief rabbi spoke entirely in Hebrew, with Rabbi Amram Assayag, spiritual leader of the synagogue, translating for the lecture, and Moshe Ronen, chair of Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, translating for the interview.

Audience respect for the Rishon Lezion (chief rabbi) and his affection for the Sephardi community here was evident. The congregation stood as he ceremoniously entered the sanctuary, dressed in a traditional black caftan embroidered in gold and a navy turban adorned with metallic threads.

A five-man choir welcomed him with piyyutim (liturgical poetry) set to traditional Sephardic melodies. Rabbi Assayag introduced Rabbi Bakshi-Doron as "a man of great humility, modest in all his actions [who] spent his entire life at the service of the community…a man of peace, a man of understanding and a man who could build bridges."

Following the lecture, the chief rabbi unveiled a cornerstone of the building – made of Jerusalem stone – inscribed to commemorate his visit, which also included a Shabbat morning address.

A former chief rabbi of Bat Yam and later Haifa, Rabbi Bakshi-Doron founded yeshivot in both cities and in 1970 founded a kollel, which still exists, in an underprivileged area of Tel Aviv. He has written three prize-winning books of responsa and one of commentary.

IF ONLY ONE IDEA, COULD CHANGE YOUR FINANCIAL FUTURE ...

One intelligent investment idea can make the difference between a comfortable retirement or an uncertain one.

Do you have a financial plan to guarantee your future?

For sound financial advice, Call (416) 565-2732.

RRSP'S -- TO BORROW OR NOT TO BORROW: WHAT KIND OF RETIREMENT DO YOU ENVISION?

One of the best strategies to achieve a financially secure retirement, is to maximize your RRSP contribution every year throughout your working life ... but then again, let's be realistic, the vast majority of Canadians don't take advantage of the annual $13,500 RRSP contribution limit. In fact, only 24 per cent of Canadians actually made the maximum RRSP contribution in 1996.

It's unfortunate that most people don't have the funds to maximize their allowable contributions ... because with the compounding of interest over time, what we are really talking about ... is a considerable sum of money.

➤ While you may want to assess the value of taking on "bad" debt (i.e., borrowing for consumer purchases), you should carefully consider "good" debt (i.e., debt you use to invest for the future).

➤ Take a careful look at the average returns for funds over the past 5 or 10 years, you'll notice in the vast majority of cases, their growth significantly exceeds the current cost of borrowing (despite the fact that in recent weeks we've seen interest rates spike upwards - but then again, they were at 30 year lows, so they had room to move up and still remain comparatively low).

➤ Psychologically speaking, most people have a phobia about borrowing, period, let alone for an investment that will realize it's dividend in the distant future ... however, it's not true that RRSP's are just for the future. I personally counsel my clients to consider their RRSP a 'live with,' use and grow with investment'. Prospects for peace

The organizers of the conference of the International Jewish Media, which I attended last month in Jerusalem, provided participants with an agenda that included up-to-the-minute current topics and featured authoritative speakers of every ideological and political loyalty.

One of the sessions was entitled What Prospects for the Peace Process? The speakers were Faisal Husseini, Dr. Uzi Landau and Nissim Zvilli. There could not have been a greater contrast either in styles or in substance among the three men.

Each of them spoke to us for 15 minutes, fielded questions and then left. They were never on the dais together.

His presentation was emotionless, almost perfunctory, delivered as if he were on automatic pilot, without detail or elaboration.

He began his remarks on a positive footing. "I believe peace is coming. There is no other way. In the long run, there is no way for us but to reach a full peace between Israelis and Palestinians."

But he quickly spent some of that positive coin with muddled statements and poorly reasoned argument. For example, to drive home the inevitability of an eventual, new Middle East map, he compared the Israeli-Palestinian conflict to other major conflicts of this century – World War I, World War II and the Cold War – after each of which was resolved, new regional maps resulted.

His proposal for Jerusalem is completely at odds with the stated positions of both the Likud and the Labor parties.

"In Jerusalem, the solution must be two capitals in one open, free-access city. It would not be a unified city, but there would be free access between the two. The line of 1967 will be the line between the capitals. Perhaps there would be a joint police force.

"We are asking Israelis to withdraw from east Jerusalem. We have rights and property claims on the western side. To give up these rights we will be happy with east Jerusalem."

Landau is the chair of the Knesset's influential security and foreign affairs committee. He is a member of the Likud party, a proponent and an adherent of pure, undiluted, Herut ideology. He is highly skeptical of the present peace process with the Palestinians and challenges the underlying assumptions of the Oslo accords.

"The Oslo process was flawed from the outset, a tragedy for Israel. We can only continue on one condition: reciprocity. Israel will give to the Palestinians to the extent that it receives from them."

Landau believes the PLO has not changed its strategic objective of annihilating Israel.

He states with total sincerity and with the flame of unshakable conviction burning from his dark brown eyes, that the Oslo process will lead to a Palestinian state and that a Palestinian state will endanger Israel.

Landau's solution is straightforward: "We should reassess the situation and stop the process."

Zvilli is the former secretary-general of the Labor party. No less sincere than the previous speaker, his proposals are diametric opposites.

Zvilli identified three principles on which the Labor party's peace proposals with the Palestinians are based. He said,

- "we do not want to rule another people;
- we do not want to transform Israel into a binational state;
- we want Israel to remain a democratic society.

"Therefore, a solution to the problem will be found in the framework of separation from the Palestinians."

But there were certain red lines Zvilli pointed out, that his party would not cross to achieve peace. "There would be no return to the borders of 1967; Jordan will serve as a security border; and Jerusalem will remain united under Israeli sovereignty."

Some journalists who viewed Zvilli's proposals as being too "dovish" challenged him. They questioned him about Hamas terror, PA violations of the accords, Arafat's trustworthiness and the threat of a PLO army next door to Israel. He responded energetically, if at times even angrily, to their questions.

"The extremists should not be able to set the agenda. I will not surrender to Hamas or to the Kahanists.

"There are failures on both sides. Is that a reason to stop the process?

"I personally give less weight to the words of the speeches given by Arab leaders to their own people.

"Do we believe we are strong enough to make peace? Can 30,000 rifles endanger the existence of Israel? We must not panic our nation with old ways of thinking. We live in the midst of 200 million Arabs. This fact should lead us to the conclusion that only peace can guarantee our survival."

After the session, there was no confusing the policies of the three spokespersons. Clear demarcations divided them. The last question which hung in the air, unasked, was whether a path would eventually be found among the divides. MBD

In a story from the category of "life goes on," the wedding of Lynn Garfinkle and Kenny Etinson went ahead Saturday night with dinner for 300 in the Metcalfe Hall, while the neighboring room was a shelter.

Touring the shelters was Israeli Consul General Daniel Gal offering his encouragement.

The crisis was deemed to be so severe that FEDERATION CJA called an extraordinary meeting of the heads of social service agencies on Saturday morning, overriding religious proscription. The federation's Cummings House had been closed since Tuesday (as was the YM-YMHA across the street) because it had no power, hampering its ability to coordinate emergency services.

Nevertheless, staff, including those at the highest management level, and volunteers quickly went into action. On Friday, about 110 residents of the Harry Bronfman Squares and the Pollack Residence, low-rent apartments for independent seniors, were evacuated to the Jewish General Hospital (JGH). Fortunately, they were able to return home on Sunday.

"Many were reluctant to leave," said federation spokesperson Anne Ungar. "They said they survived the war so they can survive this."

Le Mercaz, the community's emergency resource centre, was itself out of power until Monday. Then it began offering non-perishable food and clothing, a real need for incontinent people who need frequent changing.

Federation executive-director Danyael Cantor said he was pleased with the efficiency and goodwill with which the federation was able to serve the most vulnerable of the community: the old, mentally ill, the poor and recent immigrants. The appropriate agencies kept close tabs on clients around the clock, despite the blackout at their offices and, for many, their homes. "The province's infrastructure collapsed, but the Jewish community's did not."

The JGH, already overcrowded like most hospitals, set up shelter in any space it could find: the auditorium, atrium, emergency department, even closed operating rooms. It had over 200 one night, many of them frail elderly from the foster homes and old age residences connected to the hospital. The JGH sent out a call for volunteer help from retired nurses and orderlies, and was overwhelmed by the response.

Although Cummings House was out, Hydro-Quebec restored power on Sunday to the neighboring Golden Age Association (GAA), designating it as an urgently needed facility. The GAA kitchen was serving meals all day, and staff and volunteers were delivering meals to shelters and isolated seniors.

Mixed reviews for proposals on immigration

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Radical changes proposed last week to Canada's immigration and refugee policy met with mixed reviews in Jewish circles.

The proposals suggested by a federal government advisory panel amount to a complete overhaul that would effectively scrap current policies and build a new framework.

The report recommends separating immigration and refugee policies into two new, distinct federal statutes.

The three-member panel, which included Susan Davis, a former national director of Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS), also suggests replacing the current Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB) with a new agency run by civil servants to handle all refugee claims.

Among the other major reforms recommended to Ottawa in the 168-page report:

• Instituting annual quotas for some immigrant programs instead of using current target levels.

• Requiring landed immigrants to demonstrate their "active participation in Canadian society" by working, attending school, volunteering or caring for a loved one.

• Permitting landed immigrants to sponsor same-sex partners, common-law spouses and even close friends, but not grandparents, unless their own parents are dead. The recommendations also raise the age of a dependent, unmarried child to 22.

• Requiring basic English or French from all immigrants, and requiring skilled workers, investors and entrepreneurs to take language proficiency tests.

• Not turning away economic immigrants, especially professionals, because of suspicions they would not be able to practise in their field.

• Denying refugee status to those who could have sought protection in a safe third country on their way to Canada.

Immigration and Citizenship Minister Lucienne Robillard said she would consider all the recommendations during a five-city public consultation. Hearings are scheduled to take place in Toronto on March 3 and in Montreal on March 6. JIAS is expected to make a submission.

But Toronto immigration lawyer Guidy Mamann, a member of the board at JIAS, said there isn't time for the agency to respond adequately to the report.

He said the section that calls for a dramatic reduction in the time it takes to process a refugee claim is problematic.

The proposals call for a refugee case to be determined within six weeks. "That's not nearly enough time to prepare a case," Mamann told The CJN. "That's very dangerous. Documents have to be gathered and a lawyer hired."

Scrapping the current IRB is "dangerous and arbitrary." Substituting civil servants "who may have no background in law or the issues could be even worse," Mamann said.

Especially upsetting to Mamann is the proposal on appeals of unsuccessful claims, which calls for "a paper review, based on the merits." Mamann fears that could mean removing appeals from the courts, where they are public, and restricting them to behind closed doors.

"That's playing with people's lives," he said.

Davis, who spent a year preparing the report with her fellow panel members, called the recommendations "stricter but surer" than the current system.

She defended the calls for accelerating refugee claims. "We have to speed up the process before people get too comfortable [in Canada]. It's not the answer a lot of people want, but it is humane."

She said the proposals will do little to counter Russian Jews' refugee claims against Israel because once a claim is made, the third country – in this case, Israel – ceases to be considered safe.

She said the language requirements shouldn't affect Jewish immigrants to Canada too much, as most of them have good English, and in some cases, French.

Michael Schelew, a former deputy chair of the IRB and now an immigration lawyer, said there are few recommendations on refugee matters he likes.

He said the Jewish community has every right to be wary of the IRB because of its continued acceptance of Russian Jews claiming asylum by accusing Israel of persecution.

But handing the IRB over to civil servants is "misguided and can to lead to unfair results" because of a tendency by western governments to politicize the issue of refugees, said Schelew, who also advises B'nai Brith Canada on immigration matters.

"Those who need Canada's protection should get it. Handing [the IRB] to civil servants is like handing the criminal justice system over to the police."

Eric Vernon of Canadian Jewish Congress described the proposals as "a mixed bag" and praised some aspects, especially the suggestion to separate immigration and refugee policy.

But he fears that the focus on language requirements, especially getting prospective immigrants to pay for their own language training, may prove a disincentive.

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

Pat Alpert

TORONTO — The national president of Hadassah-WIZO has spent much of her time recently representing the Canadian organization at three international meetings.

"I kept thinking how lucky I was being Jewish in Canada," Pat Alpert told The CJN in an interview at her home following her return from Israel, where she attended World WIZO's annual meeting and the World Zionist Congress. Prior to that, she had participated in the presidents' advisory council meetings of the Hadassah International Medical Relief Association, Ltd. in Paris, France.

"[In Canada] we can say what we want, do what we want, raise money for what we want, send it out of the country, and do it at our discretion," she said.

In Cuba's impoverished Jewish community, where Hadassah was established only within the past decade, one of the organization's functions is distributing pharmaceuticals locally, she said. "They have critical economic problems. They really try to keep the spirit of Judaism alive. That is part of their mandate."

In many countries – particularly South America – Hadassah focuses exclusively on education, teaching locals about Israel and about the work of Hadassah, she added.

Canadian Hadassah-WIZO, a unique hybrid affiliated with both Hadassah and WIZO internationally, includes among its projects the support of Hadassah Hospital research on the use of umbilical cord blood to help certain cancer patients. "It's quite remarkable," said Alpert, who has visited the Israeli lab. "The potential, I think, is unlimited."

Hadassah Hospital "does wonderful things for humanity," Alpert said. Among the hospital's international projects has been treatment of war refugees in Rwanda.

Prof. Mordechai Sela, head of Hadassah's department of Maxillofacial Rehabilitation, updated delegates from about a dozen countries at the Paris conference on facial reconstruction done at the hospital. "It's absolutely miraculous," said Alpert.

At the WIZO meeting in Israel, attended by about 25 delegates from places like eastern and western Europe, South America and South Africa, concerns were raised about Israel's economic situation, said Alpert. Despite appearances of prosperity, a significant percentage of Israelis live under the poverty line, she noted.

"WIZO, which looks after much of the social and educational needs of the poor, is very concerned."

Among them, noted Alpert, is a day care centre the Canadian organization has supported since the centre's inception. Over the years local demographics have changed and the children in the once-Jewish neighborhood are now virtually all Arab.

There was some question in Israel as to whether the Canadians would want to continue to support the school, but Alpert said her executive agreed unanimously. "These are Israeli children. We want to make sure they're well looked after."

While at the World WIZO conference, Alpert introduced a statement newly drafted by Hadassah-WIZO regarding "with dismay" Israel's proposed conversion bill which would invalidate all non-Orthodox conversions. To her pleasure, the international organization drew up a resolution based on the Canadian document.

"Although Hadassah-WIZO is in no way political – that is not our agenda at all – I felt it really was beyond politics and religion."

The Canadian statement read in part, "We support the position of the World Zionist Organization and the Jewish Agency for Israel who state that this is not only an issue affecting conversions in Israel, but also it will certainly lead to a feeling of delegitimization among non-Orthodox Jews and an overall distancing in relations between Israel and the Diaspora."

Former Markham councillor new chair of York Region

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

NEWMARKET — It's been a smooth climb for Bill Fisch, the newly elected chair of York Region.

The former Markham councillor and regional councillor now presides over the sprawling region north of Toronto, Canada's fastest growing area – so fast, in fact, that the region has challenges before it that will keep Fisch and his planners busy for years.

Projections say York Region's current population of 675,000 will double over the next 20 years.

That will sorely test every aspect of the infrastructure, from housing, and transit to emergency services.

The communities north of Steeles Avenue are also home to a booming Jewish population and the accompanying synagogues and communal buildings.

For now, Fisch, 48, is still

finding his sea-legs, after winning the chairmanship last month with 10 votes from the region's nine mayors and 10 councillors.

"I'm settling in," he told The CJN in an interview at the region's Newmarket headquarters. "So far, it's been a lot of meetings."

Fisch, a lawyer by training, is a member of Toronto's Reconstructionist Darchei Noam Congregation and is active in B'nai Brith Canada.

A product of the downtown Brunswick Street Talmud Torah and the Markham Street shul, he attended Harbord Collegiate, Queen's University, where he earned a commerce degree, and Osgoode Hall.

The affable Fisch has set his most immediate sights on improving two areas: coordinating transit, and merging the region's fire departments into one.

Housing will also be a priority, in order to accommodate the region's population boom.

"We're in the middle of the growth cycle," Fisch said. "We're not in bad shape but there will be growing pains."

Unlike provincial downloading, which has become an issue in Mayor Mel Lastman's Toronto, the regions are more affected by the pooling of costs for housing, welfare and services.

The regions have charged that pooling is unfair because they pay into services they don't get.

For example, York Region, Fisch noted, pays 11 percent of GO transit costs, but reaps only about four percent of the service.

Fisch was first elected a Markham ward councillor in 1988. In 1994, he became a regional councillor.

He was born in Germany in a displaced persons camp. Both of his parents were born in Poland and survived World War II in a Siberian labor camp.

Fisch put himself forward for the demanding job of chair because "I felt I had the right skills, given my legal and financial background, to deal with the whole range of change before us."

Corrections

TORONTO — An incorrect number was given for inquiries to the Canadian Jewish Book of Remembrance in a CJN story, Dec. 25, 1997. The correct number is 416-225-4276.

The picture accompanying the article "Cohen helps to create Jewish centre in Dharmsala" (Dec. 25, 1997) incorrectly identified the service being conducted by Michi Yesifi as a kiddush service. It was, in fact, a havdalah service. The CJN regrets the error.

Ice

"But one winter the winds were harder and colder than they had ever been... The lake had frozen in one night, which meant that a harsh winter was due. Just how difficult it would get could be forecast by the smoothness of the ice. The finer it was, the harder would be the succeeding months...

"It [the lake] lay there almost laughing at its own perfection. There was not a ripple, streak, or bubble to be seen. The terrible wind and the incessant castellations of foam had been banished and leveled by the fast freeze of heavy blue water. Not a flake of snow skidded across the endless glass, which was as perfect as an astronomer's mirror.

" 'The monsters must be sealed in tight,' Mrs. Gamely said. Then she grew silent in contemplation of the winter to come. The ice was airless, smooth and dark."

Helprin's tale was fiction. But fiction has now become fact.

And in the wake of a storm that battered unceasingly for days, that fact last week became a nightmare for millions of people in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes. The nightmare was most frightening, however, for the people in and around Montreal. The storms knocked down an entire grid of hydro-electric power. And without that hydro-electric power, people lost first their shelter, then their food and finally, their safety. At least 14 individuals lost their lives.

Too often we gloat. We think our machines and our technology are invincible. Thus deluded, we are distracted from higher truths and merely expose our own vulnerability.

This editorial is written in the warmth and shelter of a home in an area untouched by last week's storms. Were it not for the images carried in newspapers or on television showing the suffering and the damage, the devastation would have been unimaginable to most of us.

Our hearts reach out to the people trapped or hurt by the ice. We commend every level of government, every agency, organization, the Armed Forces and every individual who has attempted to help relieve the suffering of our fellow Canadians.

It would merely add vanity to delusion to compare the force of the human spirit to that of nature, irrepressible both. But it is no small comfort to see the human spirit resisting all storms, fighting against the rising tide of adversity and tending with compassion and care to the sorrows of fellow human beings.

Too early for accolades

Iran's President Mohammed Khatami last week was interviewed by CNN. During the interview, he proclaimed his interest in a dialogue with the United States based on respect for mutual values. He also deigned not to rule out the Middle East peace process. Immediately, pundits and editorialists hailed Khatami's message as a potential turning point in relations between Iran and the West. Many called for a quick rapprochement between the two countries. This is not a bandwagon onto whose creaky carriage The CJN will rush to jump. To be sure, the governments of the West, including Canada and Israel, ought to explore the opportunities, if any, that lie hidden in Khatami's words.

But let us remind people that Khatami's message was hardly a Nobel Prize candidate. Nor was it even friendly towards Israel. Israel was "a racist regime which does not even have the backing of the Jewish people," the president expectorated. He also defended Hezbollah and Islamic Jihad in their violent campaign against Israel.

Hours before Khatami's interview, the National Council of Resistance of Iran announced in Washington that Iran had successfully tested the first Iranian-produced missile capable of reaching Israel.

Congress has its own role to play

I have had the honor of serving on the executive of Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region, for some years. At a recent special session, concerns were expressed about the difficulty in obtaining grants for Congress from the United Jewish Appeal.

Why is the Canadian Jewish Congress dependent on grants from the United Jewish Appeal? Isn't Congress the overall representative of the Jews of Canada?

Congress should be supported on the basis of a system of taxation. All Jewish events and activities, from cradle to grave and including the United Jewish Appeal, should provide support to Congress.

I suggest that the upcoming Congress plenary, to be held in Winnipeg in May, be used as an opportunity to discuss problems that are fundamental to the way in which the Canadian Jewish Congress operates, including its role in encouraging Jewish unity.

Apart from the legal and passionate implications of the Latimer case (CJN editorial, Dec. 11, 1997) allow me to relate it in a deeper and more personal Jewish perspective. In my limited knowledge, I believe that there is no debate about the sanctity of the individual. We are all created in G-d's image and laws governing our daily lives should reflect this basic tenet.

These special children are not only daughters or sons but also members of a community. In our vibrant Jewish community we have many families such as the Latimer family. We have pockets of parents who face similar daily challenges of emotional and physical battles. They are overburdened and exhausted. Often, there is little support in the essential form of respite. It seems unthinkable that in this thriving, caring city, there is not one respite/group home for children under 18 that keeps Shabbat and kashrut. It is more than desperately needed.

A series of letters pertaining to human soap, which appeared in The CJN over a period of several weeks, provide needless ammunition to Shoah deniers.

Yad Vashem, the Israel Holocaust memorial authority, has always held the position that the Nazis did not produce soap from human fat. (See note)

Eiron Harris
Montreal

Editor's Note: The official policy of Yad Vashem is that there is no proof that humans were used in making soap, because DNA testing cannot be done, according to Marilyn Somers, executive director, Toronto branch.

Nazi companies made phony soap

Issac Wahlen reported his 1946 find of two boxes of "RIF" soap, which he understood to be soap made by the Nazis from human remains in concentration camps (CJN, Dec. 18, 1997). As with a number of previous reports, his reading was wrong: The letter "I" in RIF cannot stand for "Jewish," as it would have been spelled with the letter "J" in German.

E. Kertesz and A. Flesch (CJN, Dec. 25, 1997) seem to have misread the letters on the so-called soap in that they reproduced them as "RJA." They described the cakes of soap correctly but did not mention their heavy weight and stonehard consistency. The fact that these three gentlemen truthfully reported their observations is no proof that their conclusion as to the content of the soap is correct. I obtained some cakes of that soap in the spring of 1945 and threw them out because they were absolutely useless.

The Nazis perpetrated the most heinous crimes the history of mankind has ever known; there is no need to charge them with a crime they forgot to commit. They were anxious to conceal their crimes from the world; so it would have been foolish to advertise a crime on their soap. In my opinion, the letters RIF are the trademark of one of the numerous shady Nazi companies who manufactured worthless products in huge quantities to the detriment of their own compatriots.

Resnick helped free Prisoners of Zion

I noted with sadness the passing of Samuel Resnick in Netanya (CJN, Dec. 25, 1997). Many of us had close contact with him in the '70s, as he was the dedicated professional on staff at the Toronto Jewish Congress when seeking the freedom of Russian Jews was our greatest priority.

Together with an excellent executive of tireless volunteers, we organized rallies in Toronto and Ottawa, countless letters and petitions to Russian and Canadian government officials, sent letters and parcels to Prisoners of Zion and families of "refuseniks" and distributed medallions imprinted with the names of the most known Jewish prisoners of conscience.

Sam Resnick contributed to and implemented all our ideas and efforts. We were in touch with him on an almost daily basis. In concert with activism and protests from all over the world, we witnessed the opening of the iron gates, and Soviet Jews were allowed their freedom.

Letters are welcome if they are brief, in English or French, typewritten with lines double spaced, and of interest to our reading public. Readers are cautioned not to make sweeping claims against persons or institutions which they cannot verify, as libel laws are very stringent. We reserve the right to edit and condense letters, which must bear the sender's address, phone number and both handwritten and typed signatures.

How to effectively pursue Nazi criminals

By ARNOLD FRADKIN

There are a considerable number of Nazi war criminals in Canada, and they have been laughing at us all the time they have been here. At one time, they laughed because there was denial of their very presence in this country – that is no longer so. And at another time, they laughed because official legal opinion was that no successful action could be taken against them – that too is no longer so. Now they are laughing because after all the time, energy and money expended upon them over the last 20 years, after all the lobbying and the cries in the media for action in the late 1970s, after the Deschenes Commission hearings (and report) in 1985-1986, and then after the more than 10 years of subsequent Justice Department and RCMP operations, there has been to date only one successful trial of a Nazi war criminal living in Canada. And that was in 1988, when denaturalization proceedings were instituted against Jacob Luitjens and he was subsequently stripped of his citizenship and deported after a precedent breaking judgment by the Federal Court. Aside from that, there have been two successful cases before immigration boards keeping Nazi criminals from entering Canada.

In 1987 when the federal program began, the average age of the suspects and witnesses was 70 years. Now it is 80 and time has almost run out. Soon there won't be any suspects or witnesses left, and those remaining will be too ill to undergo a trial. So they laugh because they know they will have gotten away with it, that they will have won the race against the clock without having been brought before the bar of justice. After all the concentrated activity over the last 20 years, they will have succeeded in living out their lives in Canada in relative serenity while their victims perished or, along with their families, lived lives marred by psychological wounds and scars.

In February 1985, the Deschenes Commission of Inquiry was set up to investigate the presence of Nazi war criminals in Canada and make recommendations. It first set out to determine who and how many persons it would investigate. It rejected Nazis who were only "collaborators" and restricted its inquiry to the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity as defined by international law. From the many names it started with, it drew up three lists – a master list of 774 names, an addendum list of 38 names and a list of 71 German scientists.

The commission delivered its report to the government on Dec. 30, 1986. It specifically highlighted at that time 20 cases from its master list where, in its own words, it found that "the seriousness and the availability of evidence warranted special attention." It recommended that denaturalization proceedings be instituted in 10 of those cases, seven of which were to include deportation, and emphasized that "urgent attention should be given to implementing these recommendations." The commission also recommended further investigation of about 224 individual cases. This included 55 of the 71 German scientists and the 38 suspects in the addendum list. And this is where matters stood at the beginning of 1987.

In the following 10 years between 1987 and 1997, 19 proceedings were instituted in Canada. Of these, 14 (75 percent) were denaturalization and deportation proceedings instituted since 1995. (Only five proceedings were instituted during the previous eight years, and no cases were brought forward at all in 1991, 1993 and 1994.) The first denaturalization case, that of Luitjens, was commenced in January 1988. Between that time and January 1995 (i.e. the next seven years), there were no further denaturalization proceedings, although there were four criminal cases instituted. Only one of the criminal cases went to trial (Imre Finta's) and it was unsuccessful. The rest were stopped for reasons including the death or ill health of the accused and witnesses.

The status of these 19 cases is presently as follows: three trials have taken place so far (one successful, one lost and one awaiting judgment); one trial is presently proceeding; five cases were stopped before trial for various reasons such as the prior death or illness of the suspects and/or witnesses; five cases have no trial dates set; four cases are scheduled for trial; one suspect voluntarily relinquished his citizenship and left Canada.

It is not the purpose of this article to discuss the small number of cases which have actually gone to trial since 1987. That has been repeatedly commented upon by many organizations as well as by the media. It has also been referred to by those actively involved in the pursuit of Nazi war criminals. The purpose of this article is to consider whether there are any further steps that could increase the likelihood of success in pursuing Nazi criminals. The best place to begin is with a brief examination of one of the most successful operations in the world – the United States, its "Holtzman amendment" and the Office of Special Investigations (OSI).

It is readily acknowledged by everyone that the United States has had an outstanding success in dealing with Nazi criminals. Prior to the OSI's creation in 1979, the federal government's efforts were handled by the Immigration Service and by the U.S. Attorney's Office. In the 34 years between the end of World War II and 1979, only one Nazi persecutor was denaturalized, and she and just one other person were removed from the United States. The activity was so inept that an investigation was specifically ordered and was carried out by an arm of the U.S. Congress which found that what had taken place with respect to Nazi criminals was deficient, perfunctory and unsuccessful.

The OSI was subsequently created to do the job. Its past two directors have been Jewish; its first director, who wasn't, raised the question of whether, since he wasn't Jewish, he should even take the job. Given the past record in the United States, he felt there was a need to demonstrate to the Jewish community that the U.S. government meant business. Jewish professionals are and have been active in the OSI, not simply as prosecutors or advisors, but at the very highest level of the management and direction of the work. That does not guarantee greater success before the courts, but it certainly goes a long way in building trust. The Toronto Star observed that in the United States, "the Jewish community is one of the OSI's strongest allies," whereas "Canada's Jewish community has always been suspicious of federal bureaucrats, often accusing them of lacking the determination to get the job done."

Also in 1979, the U.S. Congress amended their immigration and citizenship acts by passing the "Holtzman amendment." Before that time, the legal requirements for denaturalization of war criminals in the United States were the same as those presently required in Canada, namely proof of fraud or concealment of material circumstances in obtaining citizenship. As the Deschenes Commission pointed out, such proof is difficult to establish, especially in Canada, where the immigration forms that would contain such fraud had been destroyed – although the Luitjens case proved it could be done.

The Holtzman amendment permitted denaturalization and deportation of any aliens who had "persecuted" any person on the basis of race or religion, even if proof of fraud was not made. Deschenes gave the Holtzman amendment a ringing endorsement, indicating that it contained objective criteria, which, while retaining the basic fairness required by our system of law, lightened to some extent the burden of the prosecutor in these types of cases. The commission went on to say that such an amendment was appropriate since "persecution" was one facet of crimes against humanity and war crimes. It recommended that Canada pass similar legislation, but that has not happened.

Since the passing of the Holtzman amendment and the formation of the OSI 18 years ago, the U.S. government has succeeded in denaturalizing nearly 60 Nazi persecutors and removing 50 such persons from the United States. There are 16 cases in litigation in the United States this year alone. The OSI has been called "the most effective and aggressive Nazi-hunting outfit in the world." The U.S. method serves as an excellent model for any country that wants to effectively pursue Nazi war criminals.

Neil Sher, former head of the U.S. Nazi prosecution unit who has recently been retained by the Canadian government as a "special advisor," has stated that the "elements" required to effectively pursue Nazi criminals require "imaginative law enforcement techniques, aggressive tactics and a fire in the belly." He also urged that "every tool" at the disposal of the authorities should be used. Are there any such tools which could increase the likelihood of success? I suggest that the starting point for any such determination is the adage that nothing succeeds like success. Thus I have endeavored to identify items which have proven successful in the pursuit of Nazi criminals and have set them out below as items or ingredients which can collectively be called a recipe for success.

> Can be called a recipe for success

• A Holtzman-type amendment, as indicated by the Deschenes Commission. This could permit an increase in both the number of proceedings taken against suspected Nazi war criminals and the likelihood of successful outcomes. Such an amendment would have to be passed quickly, no later than six months from now. There isn't much point pursuing legislation if by the time it becomes law or can be used, the suspects have died out.

• The creation of an OSI-type of organization in Canada that combines investigative and prosecutorial authority in one unit. The Deschenes Commission expressly stated that such a unit presented "undeniable advantages" that included not only the centralization of decisions, but also the "streamlining of the whole process from denunciation to conviction." The commission recommended against its creation, not because it wasn't the most effective tool, but because it felt that the formation of such a unit would somehow threaten internal peace between Jewish and eastern European communities, and that the greater priority was to prevent such divisions. Whatever the merit in that argument may have been, it is suggested, with respect, that given the limited time left, the priority today is to proceed as effectively as possible.

• The use of trial lawyers who have achieved success so far in Nazi criminal cases in Canada.

There is just enough time left for one last big push. I have tried to identify the most effective tools or techniques solely on the basis of their proven success and have set them out above. There may be more.

Arnold Fradkin acted as deputy director of the Justice Department's Nazi War Crimes Unit and as a lead prosecutor in the cases against Stephan Reistetter and against Jacob Luitjens before returning to his litigation practice, which he carries on as a senior counsel with the Justice Department.

Opinions

Chilling the good guys

The year 1997 will be remembered as the year of the trials, although only one has so far grabbed the headlines: the Human Rights Tribunal hearing of columnist Doug Collins, accused of exposing Jewish people to hatred and contempt. But make no mistake. The less publicized trial held recently in Victoria, a civil action against David Lethbridge, will eventually overtake the Collins flurry – especially if the judgment goes against Lethbridge and awards damages to the plaintiffs.

By Jean M. Gerber in Vancouver

Just what is going on in Lotusland and why should Canadian Jews (and all other vulnerable minorities) care?

In March 1994, Collins, long known for his Jew-baiting and prejudices, wrote a column on "Swindlers' List," maintaining that the film version of the book Schindler's List was a propaganda exercise by Jewish-controlled Hollywood, that it was "hate literature in the form of films" made for the twin purpose of making money and encouraging hatred of Germans. A complaint was made to the Human Rights Commission of British Columbia, which sent it to a tribunal to be considered under the provincial Human Rights Code. That tribunal recently found that although the column was anti-Semitic, it could not be considered racist within the meaning of the code. The good news? The statute stands, although a chill has been placed on other groups pursuing the remedy offered by the code.

The media sprang to Collins' defence, asserting the absolute right of free speech, no matter how disgusting. You would have thought we lived south of the 49th parallel and were governed by the American Bill of Rights, to hear the howls of media dismay – another example of cross-border shopping for misunderstood ideas. Canada, last I looked, was a different country with its own laws governing civil amity. The effect of this exercise has been to make our Human Rights Code nearly unusable. Collins must be cracking open the champagne.

The second trial has had virtually no publicity. Lethbridge, a professor in Salmon Arm, B.C., turned over a rock and out crept the Council on Public Affairs, a group of free speech advocates of alternative opinions, but also a front for vicious anti-Semitic and racist material culled from a host of right-wing lunatic writers. Its publication features writers who accuse the Jews of drinking the blood of Christians and controlling the world's financial and governmental systems, among other weirdness.

Lethbridge exposed the group to public scrutiny, revealing its support for Jim Keegstra, Ernst Zundel and Malcolm Ross, and its links to U.S.-based racist groups. After a television broadcast, its leader, Eileen Pressler, sued Lethbridge and the television station for libel. Thus did the good guys become the accused.

Final arguments in the trial will be held in March. And where are the free speech advocates on behalf of Lethbridge? Nowhere. Not on the horizon. Suddenly free speech belongs to the racists, but rebuttal is libel.

Should the court find that Lethbridge did indeed libel Pressler, the chill felt after the Collins decision will become a deep freeze. Our rights as Jewish citizens of Canada to be protected against hateful speech and its proponents will not be protected. Speech, as Americans are finding out to their sorrow, is often accompanied by action. (Can you say Oklahoma City?)

In the Collins case, while the tribunal found what he wrote to be despicable, they refused to use the statute to find him guilty of bringing Jews into contempt. In the Lethbidge case, should the suit be allowed, anyone attempting to battle the extreme right-wing stands in jeopardy of legal action. Even reporting in the media on such activities could be suppressed. Frighteningly, when the lawyer for the plaintiff, Doug Christie, (are you surprised?) asked the head of the TV station if he would broadcast the accusatory segment again, he replied that, given the cost in time and money, he would likely not cover Lethbridge's attempt to expose the council. Talk about suppressing free speech in the media!

Where do we stand? Collins, a relentless blabbermouth, has retired from his paper feeling vindicated by a government tribunal that should protect the victims of his malice. Racists may be preparing to muzzle any attempt to expose them. Should Lethbridge lose, the ungodly can and will use the weapon of libel to silence their opposition. The effects of these decisions will reverberate for a long time, not only for Jews, but for any group in Canada that endures hatred and contempt.

To feel that the organs of society that I expect to protect me – the press, the government, the advocates of liberty and responsibility – are on the other side of the courtroom and may abandon the fight against evil altogether, scares me. It leaves us exposed to the open expression of hatred, to words as sharp as swords, and to the actions they may produce to harm us all.

Next month: What the Council on Public Affairs Digest says.

Racism is older than the Nazis

Historians generally trace the racial policies of the German Reich to 19th-century writers and agitators. They laid the groundwork, so it is said, for ruminations that turned to racial ravings.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut in Toronto

These assumptions have now been proven erroneous by Christina Meissner. Her article appeared in a little magazine, entitled Freiburger Rundbrief, which primarily features Roman Catholic theologians. It is their purpose to publicize the "past history of Christians and non-Christians who were inimical to Jews, with special emphasis on Germany." Their objective is to "deepen the friendship with the Jewish people."

Meissner's article traces the origins of racial anti-Semitism to the Spanish Inquisition, after the Jews had been driven out of Spain in 1492. The attention of the Church was directed to the Conversos, Jews who had converted to Christianity and were therefore allowed to stay in the country. But this privilege was strictly circumscribed – if not by law then certainly by practice. A new concept came into being which was called Limpieza de Sangre, literally "the purity of blood." Thus, in Toledo, Conversos and their descendants were banned from serving the state or obtaining public office of any kind, even though they were officially Christians. A distinction was being made between "old-Christians" and the Conversos. The person who wanted to enter a career in any government office had to prove his "pure" ancestry, to be established during the time prior to the expulsion of the Jews.

This, says the author of the article, was the beginning of racial anti-Semitism, which was soon incorporated in many religious and political edicts and writings. Being a Jew became more and more a matter of Jewish descent, and increasingly writers pointed out the "dangers to the Christian faith because of Jewish blood."

How was a Jew defined – even a Jew who too all intents and purposes had become a Christian? In 1673, it was said that one Jewish parent sufficed; thereafter a quarter Jew was all that was needed, and then even one-eighth Jewish ancestry sufficed to bar a Spanish Christian from public office.

Furthermore, also in the 17th century, a writer named Quevedo "discovered" a worldwide conspiracy of Jews against Spain and spoke of the Jews' immeasurable wealth by which they influenced world policy.

The interesting aspect of Meissner's article is that it finds the origins of racial anti-Semitism in the bosom of the medieval Roman Catholic Church, rather than in the writings of 19th century historians and such latter-day scribblers as Houston Stewart Chamberlain and Alfred Rosenberg.

The magazine in which the article appeared is one aspect of the widespread self-examination that for the last two decades has taken place in Germany, and in which the Roman Catholic Church now plays a leading role. Its development is both fascinating and path-breaking, and it underscores the absence of such self-evaluation by the papacy itself. It is for the highest instance of the Church to do what members in its lower ranks are now accomplishing with scholarship and honesty.

In 1954, the West German government issued a stamp to honor Bertha Pappenheim (1859-1936) with the inscription, Helfer Der Menschheit – helper of humanity. In her adult life, she founded the Juedischer Frauenbund, the forerunner of the National Council of Jewish Women, ran an orphanage and spent much of her time and energy fighting against white slavery. She later founded an institute to house prostitutes, unwed mothers and delinquent women.

By Shel Krakofsky in London

A writer as well, Pappenheim translated into German the memoirs of her ancestor, Glueckel of Hameln, under the pen name of Paul Berthold. (Note the reversal of first initials.)

She is much better known today, particularly in academic and psychiatric circles, as the famous Anna O., the first case that Sigmund Freud subjected to his version of psychoanalysis in the book by Freud and Joseph Breuer, Studies in Hysteria (1883-1895). Her case study pseudonym used the initials preceding her actual ones, the original case of psychiatric regression!

Because Bertha Pappenheim's case is pivotal in the history of psychoanalysis, it is under extreme scrutiny these days, as more evidence accumulates that Freud fudged events, interviews and interpretations.

In the recent book by Mikkel Borch-Jacobsen, Remembering Anna O., the author states, "Everyone knows perfectly well that the cure of Anna O. is a myth and yet everyone hastens to forget this when the theoretical, practical, institutional and medico-legal consequences come into play."

The maxim, "When you're a hammer, everything is a nail," describes the dilemma of searching for the truth. For if the therapist and the patient believe in such concepts as recovered memory and multiple personality disorder, every new story must confirm and justify the model.

Pappenheim was treated for two years (1880-82) by Breuer, an Austrian internist and neurophysiologist, for symptoms that included headaches, double vision, hallucinations, intermittent paralysis and inability to speak German, plus rapid mood swings. Breuer continued his "talking cure" (Bertha's description of the process. She also called it "chimney sweeping.") under hypnosis for an estimated 1,000 hours, after which he declared her cured.

Archival material has revealed that after her "cure," Pappenheim was institutionalized for a recurrence and extension of her symptoms, which included several suicide attempts. She required institutional care four more times until 1887. None of this is mentioned in the Freud/Breuer collaboration.

Borch-Jacobsen calls their publication an "advertising campaign." He contends that Pappenheim essentially told Breuer what she expected him to hear – go along, get along – and Freud (who never met Anna O.) interpreted it all to fit and justify his own theories about hysteria, a term that today is unpopular in practice and diagnostic classification.

In his new edition of The Analysis of Hysteria, Harold Merskey, the eminent Canadian psychiatrist, researcher and historian, makes a provocative and reasoned argument that Anna O. in fact suffered from a severe depressive illness. Her hysterical symptoms, that is, physical symptoms without an organic basis, were part of that depressed state and were complicated by the administration of high doses of chloral hydrate and morphine.

In Mersky's view, selective attention, shaped by motivation, may be a better approach to understanding repression than previous theories. He warns against the exclusive reliance on repression's effect on what he calls, "long-past memory." Otherwise, implausible past and ultimately false memories will proliferate.

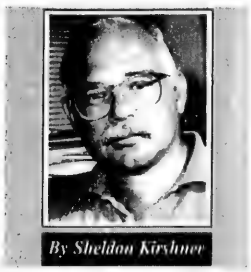
Borch-Jacobsen feels that Breuer, under Freud's undue influence, retrospectively made the Pappenheim case dovetail with Freud's own case studies on hysteria. Borch-Jacobsen accuses Breuer of trying to please Freud by systematically converting his patient's "fantasies" into "remembrances" 13 years after her treatment.

Good friends, it was Breuer, a member of Vienna's chevrah kadishah, who discouraged Freud from a Protestant conversion, a threat Freud made to avoid his Jewish wedding ceremony.

Breuer's treatment of Anna O. laid the foundation for Freud's development of psychoanalytic theory and method. In fact, Breuer ultimately rejected Freud's emphasis on psychosexual development. He never collaborated with Freud again.

The Kirshner File

The spy who came in from the cold



By Sheldon Kirshner

In the annals of espionage, Markus Wolf stands head and shoulders above his contemporaries. For more than three decades, during the Cold War, he headed East Germany's foreign intelligence service, one of the most efficient and effective in the world. Wolf, who was of Jewish ancestry, retired in the mid-1980s, before the fall of the Berlin Wall, the demise of East Germany and the reunification of Germany.

Now he has written his autobiography, Man Without A Face (Random House), and it is a humdinger of a book, the confessional narrative of a spymaster whose visage was unknown to Western intelligence agencies for 20 years.

Wolf, who helped bring down West German Chancellor Willy Brandt, was a rare bird, a Jew in the upper echelons of the Soviet bloc intelligence apparatus. To be precise, he was half-Jewish, but Jewish enough to have been persecuted by the Nazis under the Nuremberg racial laws.

He was born in Hechingen, in southwestern Germany, in 1923. His father, Friedrich, was a doctor, playwright and fervent Communist. His mother, Else, broke with her family when she married a Jew.

Wolf became aware of his Jewishness in 1933, when Nazi thugs invaded his family's home in Stuttgart. Several months later, they left Germany, reaching Moscow by way of Switzerland and France. Wolf and his brother, Koni, who was to be a film director, were raised in the Soviet Union, steeped in Russian culture.

With the collapse of the Third Reich, Wolf, still a student, was sent to Germany by the German Communist party to work for Berlin Radio. In his capacity as a reporter, he covered the Nuremberg war crimes trial, where the full extent of the Holocaust became apparent to him.

In 1949, following the emergence of the German Democratic Republic, Wolf moved back to Moscow as a diplomat in the new East German embassy there. No sooner had he settled down in the job than he was transferred to the Institute for Economic Scientific Research, East Germany's embryonic intelligence network.

Within a year, he succeeded his boss, who fell from favor after an adulterous affair. "The reasons for my selection...are unclear to me even now," he writes. But Wolf speculates that his upbringing in the Soviet Union, East Germany's watchful big brother, was probably a factor in the equation.

In a book marked by frankness, Wolf admits that the building of the Berlin Wall in 1961 was as much of a surprise to him as anyone else. And he confesses that his supposedly greatest triumph — the unseating of Willy Brandt — was in fact his biggest defeat.

Wolf acknowledges that the Ministry of State Security, of which the foreign intelligence department was a component, supported groups involved in politically motivated terrorism. But he claims that he was never personally involved in the planning or execution of acts of terror.

In the wake of the Six Day War, Wolf recalls, Egypt made it known that it wished to share intelligence information with East Germany. Wolf's deputy travelled to Cairo and was informed that President Gamal Abdel Nasser wanted assistance in investigating Israel's alleged penetration of the Egyptian government and military.

"Nasser was bitterly disappointed when we told him that we had no agents in Israel, but it was true. In fact...we never managed to penetrate Israeli intelligence."

At Moscow's urging, Wolf tried to recruit as spies Jewish immigrants in Israel, but to no avail. The Soviets, he says, were fixated on Israel as an enemy. But he had no desire to become entangled in the shoals of Middle Eastern politics. "I would never have wasted time and money on intelligence gathering simply to get even with the State of Israel on behalf of the Arab world. I viewed Israel like any target country. Once it became clear to me that the ratio of effort was unsatisfactory in terms of penetration, I simply cancelled our attempts to gain agents in Israel."

Wolf's account of his department's relationship with the Palestinians is intriguing. East Germany supported the "legitimate national rights" of the Palestinians, and in 1969, Wolf's resident agent in Cairo established secret contact with Yasser Arafat, chair of the PLO, and George Habash, head of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. Within a few years, Erich Honecker, the East German leader, invited Arafat on a state visit. Upon the completion of Arafat's trip, Wolf's department was ordered to share intelligence data with the PLO.

"We agreed to help the PLO on the condition that it end terrorist attacks in Europe." Arafat agreed, and soon Palestinians, including the notorious Abu Nidal, were flocking to East German camps for training in intelligence, counter-intelligence and the use of guns, explosives, rocket-launching techniques and guerrilla tactics. In exchange for these services, East Germany hoped to obtain from the PLO information on American security, global strategy and weaponry.

"We had great respect for Palestinian political intelligence gathering," Wolf observes. On the whole, however, he was disappointed by the PLO's performance. Aside from valuable intelligence data concerning the 1978 Camp David accords, the PLO provided Wolf with insights into Arab politics. This material "raised our general level of expertise (of) the region," he allows. Yet, as he readily concedes, he was unfamiliar with the complexities of the Arab-Israeli dispute. "Although we all knew of Hitler's extermination of the Jews, even I as a Jew knew little of Israel's fight to establish itself."

Wolf writes that Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon reinforced East Germany's pro-Arab policy. German operatives in Beirut were particularly shocked by "the Israeli assault on the refugee camps of Sabra and Shatila." On this point, Wolf is in error, failing to mention that the massacre was carried out, not by Israel, but by its Lebanese Christian ally, the Phalange militia.

During the course of Man Without A Face, Wolf never divulges his personal view of Israel and its policies. But he hints at it when he avers that "a closer examination of the long history of Israeli-Palestinian hostilities was discouraged" by the powers-that-be. He further adds: "My Jewish roots gave me a certain sensitivity in this matter that others lacked, and I also knew of the Arab links to Hitler's Germany."

Wolf admits that once the Ministry of State Security entered into a relationship with Carlos the Jackal, the South American terrorist who had strong ties in the Middle East, East Germany was no longer able to prevent its territory from becoming a base for terrorism.

East Germany tolerated terrorists like Carlos (who travelled on a Syrian diplomat passport) because they might be useful as behind-the-lines saboteurs in case of a war with the West. "Had I been asked about this harebrained idea, I certainly would have opposed it."

Throughout the book, Wolf takes pains to explain and justify his Communist beliefs. As a Jew who found refuge in the Soviet Union, he regarded Communism as a liberating force. But after Nikita Khrushchev unmasked Josef Stalin's crimes, Wolf removed a portrait of him in his office and parted ways with Stalinism.

Nevertheless, Wolf remains a true believer: "It (is) my unshakable belief that the socialist system, for all its terrible failings, represented a better potential model for mankind than the West."

What do you want in the New Year?

The advent of 1998 is a time for some honest questions. What do we want from the 12 months that lie ahead? What qualities will render them significant and filled with meaning?

It seems to me that we should have at least four basic hopes for the coming year. However, these desires can only be realized if there is a firm resolution or determination on our part for each of them.

The first thing we should want is health. This is primary. Health adds zest and savor to our years. With radiant health, we are naturally optimistic. Without health, everything soon turns to ashes in our mouth. All our hopes are blighted, our spirits sag, the universe takes on a somber aspect.

But health, you say, is out of our hands, beyond our control. Not so.

Multitudes of people take the boon of health and throw it away. They drive their bodies relentlessly. They allow themselves no rest. They refuse to learn the secret of moderation. Or they are perfectionists who demand the impossible from themselves. It is no wonder the two widespread medical problems of our age are heart failure and mental disability.

Then there are those who give their appetites free rein. They eat, drink, smoke or drug themselves into the grave. Can we achieve health if we are not prepared to accept the road of moderation and sensible deprivation?

The second thing we should want is economic security.

We need to provide for ourselves and our families. We want recognition for our work, a fair return for our labors. We want enough to educate our children properly and to provide adequately for social and cultural activities. We want to set something aside for our later years. All this is understandable and desirable. But economic security must be a means to an end, not an end in itself. We must be concerned as much with making a life as we are with making a living. We should pray that what we do gain should not be at the expense of others — or at the expense of our self-respect and most cherished ethical ideals.

Need sincere friends

Should we worship material possessions, sacrificing health, honor and family to obtain them? When "things are in the saddle," they ride us; they do not belong to us, we belong to them.

The third thing we should desire is friendship and kindness.

Life can never achieve full meaning or satisfaction unless we experience the affection, the appreciation and interest of other people. And we need friends who are sincere, with whom we are not obliged to maintain false social standards.

On the occasion of his 94th birthday, the late Will Durant — author of an 11-volume biography of humankind, The Story of Civilization — was asked, what piece of wisdom had he distilled from a lifetime of reading and reflection?

"If you insist upon one brief answer, I say kindness. And that is, in my opinion, the finest, most successful method of behavior, not merely of a man to his wife or vice versa but of a man to his neighbor, of any individual to the individuals he meets."

The person who has not learned kindness remains uneducated no matter how many diplomas adorn his office wall, or the number of degrees that follows her signature. The person who has learned to be kind has mastered the most vital subject in life's curriculum.

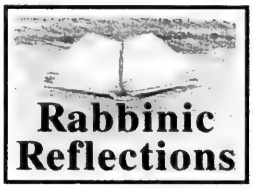
Finally, during the coming year I think we can be most alive and mature if we achieve a sense of the mystery and wonder of life.

Each of us is a finite creature, our few years a flash of light between two dark eternities, our being merely a speck on the charts of time. Yet each of us can dream great dreams and participate in the marvellous work of creation.

The more we know about ourselves and the world in which we live, the greater becomes the realm of the unknown. This is the verdict of the great scientist no less than the poets.

From the smallest atom to worlds of almost unimaginable magnitude, there is so much that lies beyond human knowledge. All of this should engender a sense of wonder. Socrates said that all philosophy began in wonder. This is certainly true of religion and also with scientific research. Einstein said, "The most beautiful thing we can experience is the 'mysterious.' It is the source of all true science."

May 1998 fulfil our deepest longings and make real our innermost dreams.



Rabbinic Reflections

Good always a better choice

By RABBI REUVEN TRADBURKS

When Moses is at the burning bush, he has an extended discussion with HaShem, trying to somehow get himself out of the job of leading the Jewish people from Egypt. (When fine people keep refusing to be president of an organization or keep refusing to become chair of the big event, they are merely following in Moses' footsteps – he didn't really want to lead the Jewish people either.)

HaShem gives Moses a sign to perform that he will be able to do to prove to the Jewish people that this is a Divine mission. Moses is told to put his hand in his cloak, then remove it – the hand is leprous. He is then told to put his hand back in the cloak and remove it from the cloak – and now it is healthy again.

There is one extra phrase in this story. Why does it say that when the leprous hand is removed from the cloak it is healed? Rashi says that this is to teach you that immediately upon the leprous hand's being removed from the cloak it is healed, whereas when Moses' good hand was striken with leprosy, it only became affected after he removed his hand.

Rashi says that this is to teach you that good comes more quickly than bad. The blight was slower to come than the good health.

This is a great lesson – be quicker with good than with bad. Let compliments flow more quickly than criticism. Driving home in the car from the dinner, speak more readily about the enjoyable conversation than about the negative occurrence. After Shabbat services, engage in positive discussion about the rabbi's points, rather than in criticism of how bad a joke he told.

In the Jewish world, we like to trumpet the great phrase that we have more in common than what divides us. This is what Rashi is getting at. Emphasize the positive not the negative. Of course, the leprosy does come – but more slowly. The good comes first and sets the tone.

We would do well to jump at the good and let the bad tarry. Good is better than bad.

JEWISH EDUCATION
The Next Generation

The meaning of teaching

By ELLIOTT MALAMET

Today, as everybody knows, the main interest of the classroom is not the student's homework but the teacher's private life. Hoping to glimpse behind the mask of the educator's harried preoccupation with grading schemes and lesson plans, the student pokes and prods for a gleaning of the existence that the teacher maintains outside of the Orwellian confines of the school.

Not exclusively designed as a stratagem to avoid real study – though there is that element, undoubtedly – this awkward, innocently blunt invasiveness tends to focus on the teacher's marital status, past educational choices and ultimately, why anyone would teach in the first place. But there is a special perplexity that accompanies any queries into the life of a Jewish educator. My students view me with wary indecisiveness – he seems normal enough, and he even has an advanced university background, but then why is he here? Teaching us. Teaching that.

Why indeed? But in truth, the answer is fully in view, a purloined rationale placed right before their eyes. Precisely because of the prevalent suspicion that Torah is outdated and irrelevant, the Jewish educator's secret passion is the oldest trick in the book – show them they're all wrong and don't stop until it hurts.

Recently a student asked me one of the old familiars: Isn't traditional Judaism just a crutch for people who are troubled, who are lost and groping inside the Torah's archaic sleeve, hoping to pull out spiritual magic? The dogmatic confidence of this question reminded me of the old assertion that only a crazy person goes to a psychiatrist, and reflected a fundamental misunderstanding of the spiritual way of life. The idea that we alone control our own destiny is an illusion from the Torah's point of view; no one is exempt from that fact.

"Society makes what is disagreeable into what is untrue," mused Freud in 1916. It is one of the delicious ironies of this century that the man who was so contemptuously patronizing regarding Judaism should have so accurately described the inherent hypocrisy of such criticism. Is it that Judaism is the province of illusion, or might it be quite the reverse, that it speaks of uncomfortable truths, of that which we do not like to be reminded – possessions fade, distraction perennially beckons, life is finite?

As a child, I learned that God sees everything, but as an adult, what I have come to sometimes feel is that in our schools, and at our dinner tables, and even – or is it especially? – in our synagogues, we are drawing the curtains against what we perceive as heaven's insistent gaze, hoping that tomorrow will bring with the sweet blankness of a weightless world.

But the desire for substance, for what Wallace Stevens so eloquently called the "weight of primary noon, the ABC of being," is still alive in many young people, so that even as they desperately squirm from the grip of religion's hand, they find themselves bound to the inevitable yearning for selfhood and a meaningful life. For the nature of their connection to Judaism is often so complex – threats of Jewish values and memories intertwined with heavy metal alienation and the requisite cultural relativism – that in those rare shining classroom moments when powerful strands of Torah begin to twist at them, they have to bend to keep from tearing.

Radio stations go online

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

Last week, we began our look at Israeli media on the Web and focussed on the sites operated by Kol Israel and the army's Galei Tzahal. But broadcasting in Israel has grown over the years and so has choice. You can now listen to everything from religious lectures 24 hours a day to the latest in entertainment news via Tel Aviv. A reminder: to hear these stations, you'll need to download and install the free RealPlayer program [http://www.real.com/products/player/download_player.html].

But let's start with a station that doesn't exist any more. One of the most famous radio stations in Israel's history didn't actually broadcast from Israel but "from somewhere in the Mediterranean." The Voice of Peace was a "pirate" radio station which operated without a license from the State of Israel. It was the brainchild of peace activist Abie Nathan and for 20 years, it broadcast a unique blend of politics and popular music. The ship made its home six miles off the coast of Tel Aviv – still within the territorial waters of Israel until it closed down in 1994. You can find a fascinating history of the station at [http://www.geocities.com/Broadway/5383/index.html].

The tradition of radio stations broadcasting to Israel from the Mediterranean continues today – although the programming is very different. Arutz 7 [http://www. a7.org/] (Channel 7) provides what it calls an alternative to Israel's "liberal-left controlled electronic media." Its mostly Hebrew language programming is a mix of traditional Jewish and Israeli music, religious teachings, its own newscasts and news from Kol Israel. Taped programming can be heard at [http://www.a7. org/sound/] and live programming at [http://www.a7.org /live. htm]. You can find a history of Arutz 7 and Israel's other pirate or offshore radio stations at [http:// www.guernsey.net/~bebridel/ israel.html] and [http://home pages.enterprise.net/jimparkes/ Radio_News.html].

Over at 90FM, you can tune in to Emtza Haderech (Middle of the Road) [http://www.90fm.co.il/]. You can listen to their weekly Hebrew language program about the Internet at [http://www.90fm. co.il/sounds/golshim.ram]. I found the connection only fair with quite a bit of break-up. You can find links to sites mentioned at [http://www.90fm.co.il/hamltz.html].

Jerusalem FM [http://www. virtual.co.il/news/news/web101/] is a local independent radio station based in the capital and has been on the air since September 1995. You can't hear their programming on the Net, but you can send off a form if you'd like to dedicate a song to a friend or relative in the Jerusalem area [http://www.virtual.co.il/news /news/ web101/requests.htm].

Radio Tel Aviv sounds like a station with attitude [http://www. 102fm.co.il/]. There's no live signal, but you can listen in to the daily showbiz newscast in Hebrew. Click on the RealAudio links at the bottom of [http://www.102fm.co.il/erev /index.html]. It's loud, hip and gossipy, something that Jerusalem's Radio 10 isn't.

Radio 10 calls itself the Positive Jewish Communications Network [http://www.radio10.co.il/] The station's live and taped programming originates mainly from Yeshivat Or Hachaim [http:// www.orhachaim .org/] and from other Yeshivot in Jerusalem, along with traditional and pop Jewish music. In addition to a live feed of their signal [http://www. radio10. co.il/live.ram], there is also an extensive audio library of lectures in Hebrew, English and French [http://www.radio10.net/orhachaim/mm/mm.htm]. I found an interesting note at the site, a sign of the times when Halachah deals with the Internet: "Don't forget not to answer Amen to brachot nor to Kaddish, since these are prerecorded lectures."

Radius FM (also called Radios 100FM) is the local radio station of the Sharon region and the centre of Israel [http://www.100fm.co .il/eindex.htm]. Radius offers popular Israeli and western music, contests and news 24 hours a day at [http://www.inter.net. il/sites/radius.ram]. I found the audio quality at this site exceptional and as a bonus, you also get to see live shots of the station's audio studio.

Next week we'll look at some real television programs as we tune to the ground-breaking work being done in broadcasting Israeli TV on the Web.

Philanthropist Arthur Gelber was 'archangel of the arts'

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Philanthropist Arthur Gelber, 82, known as "the archangel of arts" in Canada died recently of heart failure at his Toronto home.

Obituary

One of this country's most prominent art patrons, Gelber, also known as "Mr. Arts" in some circles, served on the boards of more than 60 major cultural organizations across Canada, among them, the National Theatre School, the National Arts Centre, the National Ballet of Canada, the Stratford Festival, the Art Gallery of Ontario and the Canada Israel Cultural Foundation.

"Ontario has lost a passionate and dedicated supporter of the arts. Arthur Gelber strongly believed that culture was an essential part of the quality of life in this province. He acted on that belief through a lifetime of contribution and service.

"Ontario artists and arts organizations will remember Arthur Gelber as a true friend deserving of our greatest respect and gratitude," she said.

Gelber, who was made a Companion of the Order of Canada in 1995, was a generous arts benefactor. In the early '70s, for instance, he saved the Montreal-based National Theatre School's historic building from being torn down, by buying the building himself.

He also established the Lionel Gelber Book Prize, the most valuable Canadian literary prize. The $50,000 award for books on international affairs was named in memory of his brother, a prominent writer, historian and politician who died in 1989.

An arts activist, Gelber fought for government funding for the arts throughout his life. He was adept at convincing politicians to provide public support for the arts. In 1962, for example, he persuaded Premier John Robarts to establish the Ontario Arts Council.

And while his finesse with politicians served the arts well Gelber was less successful in his efforts to persuade the federal politicians to let Jews into the country during World War II.

Although he devoted most of the war years to this cause, spending much of his time in Ottawa, the number of Jewish refugees admitted to Canada at that time remained one of the lowest in the world. Gelber was also active in the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Born in Toronto, he attended Upper Canada College and the University of Toronto. Although he had some aspirations to be an actor, Gelber went to work for the family business which encompassed textile companies and real estate holdings. He eventually headed the company, running it until the late '60s when he sold it to devote himself full time to the arts.

Gelber was predeceased by his wife Esther. He leaves his daughters Nancy Bjarnason Gelber, Patricia Rubin, Judith Gelber, and Sara Beth Charney, and five grandchildren.

STUDENT PRESENTATION

Weizmann Institute launches major fundraising drive

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Weizmann Institute of Science is launching a major fundraising drive to double its current endowment of about $250 million (US) over the next three years, said the president of the Rehovot institute during a recent visit here.

Speaking at the national annual meeting of the Canadian Society for the Weizmann Institute of Science, held at the Sutton Place Hotel, Haim Harari challenged Canadian members to take on the funding of a yet-to-be established centre for optical/laser research within Weizmann.

The electro-optics field now includes lasers and sophisticated technology enabling physicians to see what is happening inside the body, Harari said. There are an endless number of applications in modern medicine, biology, chemistry and telecommunications, he noted. When he was a student, by contrast, Harari found it "one of the most boring fields of physics."

Among the existing Canada-Weizmann connections in that field is the joint research being done by University of Toronto chemistry professor Paul Brumer and Weizmann chemical physics professor Moshe Shapiro.

The new project, for which the Canadian Society would establish a $15 million (Canadian) endowment fund over the next five years, would be part of an overall upgrading/refurbishing of campus departments to culminate in a rededication of the Weizmann Institute and an international scientific conference on Nov. 2, 1999, its 50th anniversary, Harari said.

Haim Harari

Over the next five to 10 years, Weizmann will not need any new major buildings, said Harari, but older buildings are in the process of being modernized and old departments are being reorganized. To keep current, most of the departments that existed 10 years ago have been merged, dispersed or phased out, he said.

Harari made a case for basic scientific research without any underlying commercial goal to attract funding. "When you do first class science, the practical results will come," he said. "We do not feel a need to apologize to anyone that our mission and goal is basic research."

In 1996, Harari said, industries within and outside of Israel sold $600 million (US) of products which pay royalties to the Weizmann Institute. This is "only a byproduct" of practical research and a "small function" of the institute's budget, he added.

Weizmann is in a financially sound situation, said Harari, with a balanced budget, including surpluses. An accumulated deficit of about $40 million (US) nine years ago has been reduced to about $7 million (US) and is expected to be eliminated in the next few years, he said.

Sharon Zuckerman continues as president of the national society. Among other speakers at the meeting was Shawna Silver, a third-year systems design engineering student at the University of Waterloo and an alumna of Weizmann's Bessie F. Lawrence Summer Science Programme.

Shul, MP try to aid Minsk surgeon

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A major effort to free a Minsk Jewish surgeon from being retried on a murder charge in the death of a neighbor is being made by a Beth Tzedec Synagogue group and Dr. Carolyn Bennett, Liberal member for St. Paul's.

Dr. Albert Lavrenev, 41, was declared innocent in the death of Olga Vasilieva in November 1997, but he faces a retrial on the same count by the Supreme Court of Belarus as the result of a complaint by Vasilieva's son.

A plan to lobby the 15 members of Canada's parliamentary affairs committee with members of their own constituencies on behalf of Lavrenev and his physician wife, Irinia, was formulated at a meeting recently at Beth Tzedec between Bennett and members of the board of the synagogue's Men's Club and the committee to free Jews in the former Soviet Union.

In addition, the plan calls for a letter to Lloyd Axworthy, minister for External Affairs, before Parliament reconvenes Feb. 2, to intercede for Lavrenev and his wife, who have applied to emigrate to the United States.

Constituents of three Jewish MPs, Deputy Premier Herb Gray, Elinor Caplan and Sheila Finestone will be asked to speak to their members about the case.

The victim's son, Nikola Victorovich Palaznik, began shouting obscenities and anti-Semitic threats when he heard the judge in Minsk City court declare a verdict of nonguilty, said Berta Dukarsky, Lavrenev's cousin in Florida.

"He [Palaznik] then physically attacked Dr. Lavrenev in the court room, hitting him," Dukarsky said.

All this was witnessed and reported on by observers from the U.S. Embassy in Minsk, she was told. Dukarsky has been in direct phone contact with the Lavrenevs in Minsk.

"As a result of this outrageous behavior, instead of Mr. Palznik being arrested for assault, Dr. Lavrenev has been notified that the prosecutor has reopened the case and is petitioning for it to be heard before the Supreme Court of Belarus," said Sandy Cantor of the South Florida Conference on Soviet Jewry.

"In December 1996, the Supreme Court of Belarus overturned the guilty verdicts of the lower courts. Unfortunately, the Supreme Court turned the case back to the lower courts for retrial. What possible purpose could be served by the Supreme Court hearing the same ridiculous charges again, now that the Minsk City Court has proclaimed him innocent? This constitutes harassment and human rights abuse according to international standards," Cantor said.

"This man has already been put through more litigation than was reasonably necessary. There is nothing to be gained by another trial except besmirching the concept of rule of law in Belarus."

Lavrenev, an orthopedic surgeon at the Minsk City Clinical Hospital for Emergency Treatment, and his physician wife, lived in a flat above Vasilieva. Her son alleged in court that his mother told him Lavrenev was with two men who beat her to death. However, evidence revealed that Vasilieva was in no condition to say anything after her beating.

Those meeting with Bennett at Beth Tzedec were Herb Landis, vice-chair, Soviet Jewry committee, and Dan Pullan, Eddie Kirschner and Dr. Shelley Pollack of the Men's Club.

Exploring Judaism in Minsk

Last summer, the author and some others travelled to the former Soviet Union to be a resource at Jewish camps. The following is an account of his experiences.

By BARRY PAKES
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — In Hebrew, the word mussar means values, morals or ethics. In Russian, the word mussar means garbage. Before my arrival in the former Soviet Union (FSU), I anticipated that this quirk of language would epitomize the situation facing the Jews of the Crimean port city of Sevastopol and the Belorussian capital of Minsk.

What I found, however, were intelligent, excited children, more eager to learn about Judaism than any children I can imagine in North America or Europe. I thought I would lament over the community that once was, and try hopelessly to educate the children about the basics of Judaism before they emigrated to Israel. What I found were two growing Jewish communities, one a success and the other well on its way, both committed to maintaining a vibrant Jewish life in the Commonwealth of Independent States.

This past summer, I volunteered for eight weeks with YUSSR (Yeshivah and University Students for the Spiritual Revival of the Soviet Union), a completely student-run organization dedicated to rekindling Jewish life in the FSU. As a counsellor, translator, shochet, pyrotechnic expert, yeshivah instructor and janitor, I quickly realized that while organized religion was once again allowed in Russia, toilet seats and food other than kasha were still forbidden.

In the Black Sea port of Sevastopol, where YUSSR ran a camp in July, the campers would insist on being called Ivrim (Jews), not Russians. Despite their intense pride in Judaism and in Israel, many were afraid to admit their Jewishness in public. Some believed that a brit milah occurs at age 13, or that Jesus has something to do with Judaism. But by the last day of camp, the kids knew how to daven, fend off missionaries, make tzitzit and much more. As they left camp on the ferry, they sang at the top of their lungs Shema Yisrael, in Hebrew and in Russian, and their favorite song, I am happy and proud to be a Jew, in Russian for the entire town to hear.

Later, we heard from some of the city leaders that other Jewish adults had been spectators on that boat and they told us they had never been prouder to be Jewish. This was the story of a community just beginning.

After a 26-hour train ride north past Chernobyl, we arrived at our second camp in Minsk, where we found a very different scene. With two active synagogues, a Chabad, and Lech-Lecha, a YUSSR-run youth group, many of the children of the 30,000 Jews of Minsk knew a good deal more about practical Judaism than your typical day school graduate. They had seen shchitah, knew how to observe Shabbat and could sing every song in the NCSY (National Conference of Synagogue Youth) bencher.

The older campers in the Lech-Lecha youth group run Friday night dinners every week and other programs, sometimes drawing more than 100 kids to the new youth centre. Saturday in Belarus is a normal school day. Therefore, some of the Jewish students walk great distances to school and refuse to write every Shabbat. They explain their difficulty to their non-Jewish classmates and borrow their notes. This cumbersome ritual that many of us here do to get notes during the High Holy Days is a weekly event for the committed Jews of Belarus.

While some Jewish university students are members of the Lech-Lecha youth group, they must also be members of Lukashenko (the dictator of Belarus) youth group if they wish to write their exams.

These were unique teenagers in a unique situation. Many of them understood the irony of Americans now teaching them about Judaism. It was only a few short decades ago that teachers were being sent from their country to enrich the spiritually impoverished Jews of America.

Day trips to nearby Volozhin, Mir and Rodin to clean up the Jewish cemeteries allowed the students to appreciate that they were the descendants of some of the greatest Jewish leaders of post-Talmudic times. Campers with names like Tanya Soleveichik constantly reminded the staff of who these campers were and the struggles they faced.

One of the most important moments for me was returning home and hearing that four 18-year-old boys whom I had been teaching at the informal Lech-Lecha yeshivah had finally overcome their fears and each had had a brit milah. I had encouraged them individually and together to go through with it, but unlike other Jewish rituals that I could teach by example, I could not really understand what they were going through. I was forced to ask myself: Would I have the courage to make such a commitment if I were in their position?

Penetanguishene man fails to stop Lord's Prayer

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

PENETANGUISHENE, Ont. — A local man says he's leaning increasingly toward his late mother's Judaism following his bid to ban the Lord's Prayer at town council meetings.

But round one in Henry Freitag's battle has gone to the town of Penetanguishene.

Last month, a judge of the Ontario Court (General Division) ruled that the recitation of the Lord's Prayer at the start of council meetings does not violate anyone's constitutional rights.

Town council wins first round in court

Freitag, 68, had sued the town, saying that while sitting in the public gallery, he felt coerced to recite the prayer, which he says is Christian in origin.

"I did it for all the people of Canada," Freitag told The CJN. "Everybody's rights and religions should be respected. Public money shouldn't be used to pray."

But the court rejected his argument, saying that the town council, "which takes the time to recite an innocuous prayer, should not be censored."

Freitag says he'll appeal the ruling.

He says he based his argument partly on a 1988 Ontario Court of Appeal decision striking down a regulation that forced public schools to start the day with the Lord's Prayer.

Freitag, a retired construction worker, says his late mother was Jewish and that after his divorce, he's "more inclined to follow Judaism."

That's difficult, he allows, as the nearest Jewish community is in Barrie, about 50 kilometres away.

As a boy, he and his mother spent two weeks at a Nazi interrogation centre near Berlin. His mother died in a bombing raid and he spent the rest of the war living in Germany as a Christian.

Following his court case, Freitag says he received several "nasty" calls telling him to leave town, and some threatening letters.

The mayor of Penetanguishene, Robert Klug, said the Lord's Prayer sets the moral tone for council meetings.

The town says it simply invites members of the public to recite the prayer.

By JOEL JACOBSON

HALIFAX — Rabbi David Ellis is in the right place at the right time.

The former rabbi of Congregation Tiferes Israel, the Orthodox Moncton shul, has become chaplain in service to the Atlantic Jewish Council (AJC) and a consultant to Northwood Manor, a Halifax seniors residence that will soon open a Jewish wing.

"I hope I'll be appreciated and maybe be a drawing card as someone with a bit more knowledge who can give a sermon, lead services, read Torah in those smaller Atlantic Canadian communities that don't have a rabbi," said Rabbi Ellis, soon after assuming his new post in late December.

Rabbi Ellis, full-time rabbi of Moncton's Orthodox congregation for three years, did not have his contract renewed in 1996. He remained in the city, did some chaplaincy work on Prince Edward Island and occasionally visited Sydney and Glace Bay in Cape Breton. In his new position, he, his wife Rose, and their children Leah, 8, Tamar, 6, and Sarah, 3, will be based in Halifax.

"Bringing a rabbi to a community means bringing tradition," said the Dallas, Texas-born Rabbi Ellis.

Rabbi Ellis said he would do whatever needs to be done, but "you have to be careful with Maritimers," he laughs. "They don't like to be told what to do. Every community is an entity in itself. I certainly want to help and want to see what they're doing, but I certainly won't violate my conscience or Halachah."

Jon Goldberg, executive director of the AJC, says this is a first for the organization. "In the past, we have not been involved in religious affairs of the community. But with our community diminishing in the region, and with fewer religious services being held, bringing Judaism to them will make people more inclined to Israel and Zionism.

"We've been working on this for two years, the time it took to put the funding together. We're receiving financial support from Northwood Centre and from a special fund of a Toronto philanthropist, set up to help small communities."

At Northwood Manor, Rabbi Ellis will help establish a kosher kitchen for an anticipated 24 residents who will move in late next summer. He'll also provide chaplaincy services and run a weekly service if there is demand.

Lloyd Goldsmith, newly elected president of the Conservative Sharrei Zedek Congregation in Saint John, says he's sure Rabbi Ellis will be able to contribute to Saint John.

"We've been without a rabbi for two decades and our resident spiritual leader, Lou Michelson, passed away about two years ago. While we try to find another Lou Michelson, we need a Rabbi Ellis to offer our 40 Jewish families whatever he can."

One of Glace Bay's handful of remaining Jewish residents, Raymond Goldman, says Rabbi Ellis has already provided an uplift to the community.

"He's led services, read the Torah, given us a sermon and answered questions for us. He's even spent time in the shul basement sorting books. I hope he'll be able to lead study groups and present lectures on Jewish subjects on some of his visits."

Goldman, the secretary of Orthodox Congregation Sons of Israel, bemoaned the fact that most of the senior community members, which is most of the community, spends the winter in Florida, thus eliminating the opportunity for weekly services.

"We'll probably close the shul for the winter, but Rabbi Ellis will be there to help us reassemble in the spring and to get us together for spiritual love and harmony. We like him. He'll be an asset."

Deschenes honored by peers

MONTREAL — Justice Jules Deschenes admitted the commission he led to look into the prosecution of Nazi war criminals in Canada had little success, but it was not because of a lack of government will.

Among the reasons it failed were the death of an accused, the unavailability of witnesses, many of whom were behind the Iron Curtain, and, above all, because the Supreme Court, in the Imre Finta case, set a very high standard of proof.

He's not very hopeful that the current federal government's attempts to deport suspects will accomplish much more.

Deschenes, most recently a judge on the international war crimes tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, made the comments at an evening in his honor held by the Lord Reading Law Society, an association of Jewish lawyers and judges. Deschenes was presented with it annual Human Rights Award.

Former chief judge of Quebec Superior Court, Alan B. Gold called Deschenes a "shining light of the legal profession and an inspiration to all jurists."

The Deschenes Commission was appointed by then prime minister Brian Mulroney in the mid-'80s with the mandate of identifying alleged Nazi war criminals for trial in Canada.

The current government's route of stripping suspects of their Canadian citizenship and deporting them is fraught with procedural problems, he said, some so serious that stays of proceedings were issued, only to be set aside in appeal.

The main problem, he said, is the age of the alleged criminals. They are already in their late 70s and 80s and the trial and appellate process could drag on for many years.

Deschenes pointed to the Australians' similar lack of success. Three prosecutions have also been dismissed, and Australia subsequently abandoned criminal prosecutions.

The difficulty of bringing to justice even modern-day war criminals became obvious to Deschenes during his time on the international criminal tribunal set up in 1993 to investigate crimes in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda. Two accused have been convicted, but both decisions are in appeal. Nine or 10 other trials are in progress.

Of 75 arrest warrants issued, only 10 have been carried out; the rest of the suspects – many of them well known – remain free with full impunity as long as they remain in their home country, he said.

More prosecutions could be launched if these home countries had the political will to execute the arrest warrants, he said.

Deschenes is skeptical about whether the United Nations' proposed permanent international criminal court will be effective. The project is highly politicized, he said, because the court is to be established by international treaty and therefore only enforceable in those countries that are signatories.

He fears many of the worst offending nationals will not sign.

On the positive side, prosecution may be initiated either by an individual country or by the UN, the principle of international criminal responsibility will be established, and a nomenclature of crimes will be set, he said. International guarantees of human rights will also be entrenched.

Educator forges union of Jewish day schools in Western Canada

By MYRON LOVE
Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — Uzi Rivlin, the director of Judaic Studies at the Gray Academy of Jewish Education in Winnipeg, has forged a union of all the Jewish day schools in Western Canada.

"It is a wonderful achievement," he says. "We include the entire ideological and religious spectrum. Jerusalem recognizes our union."

An educator for many years in New York and Israel, Rivlin assumed his position in Winnipeg at the start of the new school year. He began working on the project in September. Representatives of 10 of the 12 schools involved met to form the union in Edmonton on Oct. 30. Also in attendance was a world Jewish education official from Israel.

"It was difficult having our educational needs met from Montreal or Toronto," Rivlin explains. "People in Montreal and Toronto don't really know or understand our situations and it is a long way to go from Vancouver or Calgary to Montreal or Toronto."

Some of the programs being planned, Rivlin says, are teacher and student exchanges between the schools, joint staff and material development, and a separate Bible competition for Western Canada with the winner representing Western Canada in the International Bible Contest in Jerusalem in April.

The first western Canadian representative will be Ruth Glinter, a 15-year-old Joseph Wolinsky (the high school component of the Gray Academy) student who has been one of the representatives from Western Canada to the Canadian competitions for three of the past four years.

Regular meetings of representatives of the western Canadian schools will be held monthly, each time in a different city.

Heavy snow slows traffic throughout Israel

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Heavy snow fell Sunday night in Jerusalem, blocking roads and occasionally halting public transport, with the Meteorological Service predicting an accumulation of 30 centimetres or more of snow in the capital.

City officials said that only Monday morning would they be able to determine if schools could open, and parents were advised to listen to radio reports.

Jerusalem's snowfall followed heavy storms across the Golan and Galilee, with snow reported as far south as Mitzpe Ramon and the northern peaks of the Negev. Temperatures plummeted to below zero in many areas.

The weather forecast was for more snow in hilly regions in northern and central districts through the night, with heavy rain in other places and the risk of flooding in the south.

The Jerusalem municipality's emergency headquarters swung into operation, as snow piled up in the streets. Plows and heavy vehicles managed to clear main routes, but numerous side roads remained blocked.

Temporary blackouts were reported in Haifa and elsewhere.

Power was restored relatively quickly in most cases and the Israel Electric Corp. said it did not anticipate any supply difficulties, even though it recorded a demand Sunday night of 6,520 megawatts, tying a record for demand set last year.

Floods were reported in the south and a number of roads were closed around the Dead Sea and other places. Hail storms also caused havoc, especially in the south.

Farmers in the Negev said that some of the hailstones were as big as eggs and caused extensive damage to crops and greenhouses.

The Hebron area was hit hard, with snow drifts of 20 cm accumulating in some areas. A number of roads in the region were closed.

One of the worst-hit regions was the north, where the snowfall was heaviest. Many roads in the Golan Heights were impassable and the regional council announced that local and regional schools were to remain closed Monday. Schools in Tzfat would also be closed.

Snow fell on peaks in the Galilee, blocking roads leading to Tzfat and Beit Jann on Mt. Meron. There were also reports of snow falling in Nazareth and other parts of the north, including the highest parts of Mt. Carmel.

Traffic lights failed, while in parts of Haifa many residents were without cable television, apparently because of lightning.

Strong winds added to the treacherous conditions on the roads and police advised motorists to make only essential journeys.

The police advised drivers to listen to radios for up-to-date information about road closures due to snow, floods or other conditions.

The cold snap is expected to slowly taper off, although showers are likely to continue in northern and central districts, before warmer weather returns.

The Public Works Authority was on standby, with dozens of vehicles prepared to clear roads in the Golan Heights, Upper Galilee, Jerusalem and Mitzpe Ramon.

The IDF put troops and heavy vehicles on standby to help in emergencies.

An army spokesperson said it had been decided because of the snow and stormy weather conditions to implement a special emergency plan.

Under the program, the central command would respond to any problems that arose in the civilian areas of Judea and Samaria, including providing humanitarian aid to Palestinians.

This included using heavy equipment to clear snow-blocked or flooded roads, and distributing food and water in the event any communities were cut off.

The vehicles would also be used, the spokesperson said, to evacuate civilians in the case of emergencies. Priority would be given to saving lives, keeping main arteries open and dealing with any damage to property.

The central command also stopped training exercises in the field because of the weather conditions.

A number of people were injured in the Gush Katif and Lachish area due to weather conditions. A cyclist was lightly injured after he lost his balance due to high winds in the area.

New centrist party founded

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — A new centrist party called Atid (future), which sets freedom from religious coercion at the top of its agenda, was registered Sunday.

Tel Aviv Mayor Ronni Milo, who is reportedly the new party's leader and candidate for prime minister, denied any connection with it, and his name does not appear among the 140 founders. Milo described the party as "the initiative of a group of serious people...These are good guys, some of whom I know, who are taking a step towards the future, as they see it. I'm not a member of this party. What the future brings, I don't know."

One of the party's founders, Ron Peer, said, "We regard Milo as a very suitable candidate for prime minister."

As for the absence of Milo's name on the list of founders, Peer said, "This is our party, not his. We're forming it because we decided something had to be done, to prevent what is happening." He added the party could be ready for elections in three months.

Before approving the new party, parties registrar Ze'ev Boneh will check to make sure the founders are all adult Israelis, that its goals are not opposed to the identity of Israel as a Jewish, democratic state and do not include racial incitement.

Spielberg set to make film on Israeli air force

LOS ANGELES — American volunteer pilots who played a key role in creating the Israeli air force may be the focus of a Steven Spielberg film.

The director said he hit on the idea after sitting in the cockpit with an Israeli pilot on an El Al flight from New York to Tel Aviv.

Most of the American airmen who flew for Israel just before and during the War of Independence were Jewish veterans of World War II, but also included some non-Jewish volunteers.

PM denies reports of new housing units

By JAY BUSHINSKY
JerusalemPost Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu denied reports that the construction of 30,000 new housing units in West Bank settlements has been authorized.

A senior government official said the media, in reporting the planned construction figures, may have misunderstood a comment made by Deputy Housing Minister Meir Porush about 30,000 apartments being built during a 20-year period.

The official also said U.S. peace envoy Dennis Ross informed Netanyahu, during a private dinner that Palestinian Authority (PA) Chairman Yasser Arafat offered to submit a letter expressing his rejection of those articles in the Palestinian National Covenant that Israel deems offensive. The report has yet to be confirmed by Palestinian sources.

Informed sources said Netanyahu insisted that the covenant's revision be carried out at a public session of the Palestinian National Council.

Netanyahu warned that "threats emanating from the Palestinians" about a new intifadah will neither affect his government's policy nor serve the cause of peace.

Speaking at the weekly cabinet meeting, Netanyahu said Israel insists that negotiations be conducted in a peaceful fashion.

"We will not alter our positions as a result of threatened violence," he said.

Arafat raised the spectre of another intifadah during a weekend appearance on Channel 1. His spokesperson, Nabil Abu Rudeineh, declared afterwards in Gaza that new violence will break out if U.S. President Bill Clinton's talks with Netanyahu and Arafat produce no progress.

In anticipation of the Netanyahu-Clinton summit, the cabinet discussed a document drafted by Attorney-General Elyakim Rubinstein and Cabinet Secretary Dan Naveh, that spells out the PA's commitments regarding the maintenance of security.

It cites four commitments embodied in the Note for the Record which was appended to the Hebron Agreement of January 1997:

- To complete the process of revising the Palestinian National Covenant (to excise articles inimical to Israel's existence).
- To fight terrorism and prevent violence.
- To reduce the size of the Palestinian police force, whose current strength is double the number permitted in the Oslo Accords.
- To restrict Palestinian governmental activities to areas under the PA's jurisdiction, and thus remove any PA security agents from Jerusalem.

National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon said the IDF should not redeploy in the West Bank as long as the Palestinians fail to fulfil their commitments.

Justice Minister Tzahi Hanegbi contended that Israel should fulfil its obligations only if the PA hands over the 34 persons in its custody who are wanted by Israel for murder.

Transport Minister Yitzhak Levy said just as Arafat is finding it hard to hand over terrorists, Israel should find it difficult to hand over territory to the Palestinians.

A government official said that there is a "wall-to-wall consensus" in the cabinet against any further redeployment in the West Bank unless the PA honors all of the commitments it made in the Oslo Accords and Hebron Agreement.

The cabinet is due to resume its deliberations in preparation for the Netanyahu-Clinton meeting.

After a recent session, Netanyahu talked to U.S. Vice President Al Gore by telephone. The prime minister conveyed his appreciation for the efforts undertaken by both Gore and Clinton to try and prevent Russia from giving Iran materials for the manufacture of ballistic missiles. Netanyahu reiterated the great danger posed to Israel and the world by Iran's acquisition of such missiles.

JERUSALEM (Jan. 12) — A blueprint of the provisional government for the new Jewish state, to be headed by a 15-man cabinet, is nearing completion, it was revealed here today by the Jewish Agency, which said that the current violence has not retarded preparations for the establishment of the state. When the UN Implementation Commission arrives, it will find that plans have been drafted to meet any eventuality. The plans have been drafted by a 13-member planning committee, headed by David Ben-Gurion.

Court lets GSS use force in questioning

By BATSHEVA TSUR
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — As security forces continued to maintain a high state of alert for possible terrorist attacks, the High Court of Justice Sunday permitted the General Security Service (GSS) to continue using force to extract information from the suspected leader of a terrorist ring.

The nine-member bench was divided over whether to accept the petition for an interim injunction preventing the use of force in the interrogation of Abdel Rahman Ghanimat, with court president Aharon Barak in the minority.

Ghanimat is one of the heads of the Hamas-affiliated Tsurif cell that was responsible for a number of suicide bombings in Israel, including the attack at the Apropo Cafe in Tel Aviv, and the GSS believes he holds information about other planned attacks.

While five judges voted in favor of rejecting the petition, Barak, his deputy Shlomo Levin, and justices Theodor Or and Dalia Dorner were in favor of curbing the use of force in Ghanimat's interrogation. A majority consisting of justices Eliezer Goldberg, Eliahu Mazza, Mishael Cheshin, Yitzchak Zamir and Tova Strasberg-Cohen, however, voted for turning down the request for an interim injunction.

The GSS is permitted to use "moderate physical force" to extract vital information that could prevent the loss of lives, according to guidelines laid down by the Landau Commission, which examined the issue. A number of human rights organizations are currently testing the definition of such physical force in three cases of suspected terrorists under interrogation. The nine-member panel said last week that it would hand down a joint ruling on the issue.

Ghanimat has been in interrogation for 58 days. His lawyers say he has been tortured by being deprived of sleep for extended periods, being handcuffed to a small chair placed on a slant (known as the Shabah) for about 20 hours every day, having his head covered with a sack and being subjected to loud music.

"Ghanimat is put on this kindergarten chair, at a slant, for approximately 20 hours a day from Sunday to Thursday," his lawyer, Allegra Pacheco said. "Its front is 20 centimetres high and its back is 25 cm high. Sometimes they let him sleep for about two to three hours and sometimes they keep him there for 48 hours straight. He sleeps a total of seven hours approximately over five days.

"Over the weekend, the interrogation stops and he is allowed to rest because presumably the interrogators go home. That undermines the critical nature of this interrogation if they can stop it," she said. "The sack is like a duffel bag on his head and there is blasting music all the time.

"The State Attorney's Office said in court that this is not a case of a ticking bomb," Pacheco added. "Ghanimat has already confessed. He says that they are interrogating him about certain guns. The same issue has been going on for a month. He has told them everything."

Questioned earlier by the court, the GSS recently admitted publicly that it deprived suspects of sleep, saying that it was necessary to extract information to avert planned terrorist attacks against Israelis.

Lebanon ready to take over security zone

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Lebanon has agreed to deploy its army into southern Lebanon and impose order and stability there if Israel accepts UN Security Council Resolution 425 and withdraws from the security zone, a very senior Lebanese official relayed to Labor MK Yossi Beilin over the weekend.

The message came via American officials who were recently in Beirut and returned to Israel saying they were assured Lebanon would honor the resolution once Israel fulfilled its part.

Until now, Lebanese leaders had reacted with skepticism to Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai's offer last week to withdraw from the security zone. Some called it a ploy to drive a wedge between Beirut and Damascus.

"If the Israelis implement UN Resolution 425, as Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai says, then Lebanon will fulfil its part of the equation, which means creating order in south Lebanon," the official said, in his message to Beilin.

"It is very interesting because they did not say 'We are going to assure Israel that there won't be any violence against it.' That would make it seem to Syria as if there was some sort of collusion between [Israel] and Lebanon," Beilin said. "Instead, they say they are entitled to impose their sovereignty there."

Beilin, founder of the Movement for a Peaceful Departure from Lebanon, said the deployment of the Lebanon Army into areas vacated by the IDF would be done with the aid of UNIFIL forces.

Beirut, Israeli officials believe, would like to impose its sovereignty over all of its territory and also end the guerrilla war going on against Israel. But its delicate situation with Damascus, which regards Lebanon as an integral part of Syria, has so far prevented it from taking a firm stand on the matter. It has traditionally called on Israel to withdraw "unconditionally."

As Mordechai sees it, 425 does lay down conditions: the deployment of the Lebanon Army southward; the disarming of Hezbollah gunmen; and the restoration of peace and security for Israel. This was backed by a legal opinion drafted by Israel's Foreign Ministry.

But others, including members of the Movement for a Peaceful Departure from Lebanon, say that the conditions are not mutual but come in stages.

According to their interpretation, Israel must get out of Lebanon and not wait for reactions from the other side.

Once it withdraws, then the Lebanon Army must deploy with the help of UNIFIL.

Beilin and other members of the movement are to meet with senior UNIFIL officers, including the commander of the international peacekeeping force, Maj.-Gen. J. Konrote, in Jerusalem to discuss the matter.

CJN Purim Art Contest

It's time again for our fourth annual Purim Art Contest and we are looking for drawings about Purim from students in elementary school.

Who can enter: Children from grades 1 to 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes: The judges will choose one drawing from two different students in each grade. These "winning" drawings will be published in The CJN on March 12. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a cheque for $25.

How to enter: You may submit as many drawings as you want. However, they should not be too small or too large. Please paint, draw, or color bright, bold, colorful pictures. You may use markers, crayons, paint or pencils. And you can even give them a title. Please send us your name, address, phone number, school and grade along with your drawings.

You may mail or deliver your drawings to: CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 1500 Don Mills Road, Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 27, 1998. We will undoubtedly receive many wonderful submissions from children all across the country. But only 12 of the drawings will be chosen for publication as "winners." The judges will base their decision on a number of factors such as: the use of color, the imaginative quality of the drawing and the way it tells an aspect of the story of Purim. The judges' decisions will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and quality of submissions received.

How the Winner will be announced: The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of Shabbat on Friday, March 6, 1998.

When the prizes will be awarded: The "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN of March 12, 1998. Have fun and good luck.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Régie des Loteries et courses du Québec.

finally coming to terms with another unsightly stain on its history.

Dreyfus was arrested in 1894 after a French spy in the German Embassy found a document purportedly in Dreyfus' handwriting that provided sensitive information to the Germans.

After a military show trial, Dreyfus was convicted of espionage, publicly stripped of his military medals and sentenced to life imprisonment on Devil's Island, a French penal colony off the coast of French Guiana, in South America.

The trial convulsed France in a violent anti-Semitic spasm. Jewish shops and synagogues were destroyed in 50 French towns.

The fury then spread to the French colony of Algeria, where Jewish cemeteries were desecrated and entire Jewish neighborhoods were ransacked.

Among the hundreds of journalists from around the world who converged on France to witness the Dreyfus trial was Theodor Herzl, an assimilated Austrian Jew who covered the event for his Viennese newspaper.

The trial created in Herzl a terrible foreboding about the fate of European Jewry and convinced him to devote himself to the establishment of a Jewish state.

The Dreyfus Affair also had a powerful effect on Zola, France's leading author, who wrote a 39-page open letter condemning anti-Semitism and denouncing France's military and judicial establishment.

Newspaper editor Georges Clemenceau, who later served as prime minister, published the letter as an article on Jan. 13, 1898, with the words "J'accuse" splashed across the front page.

In the article, Zola acknowledged the personal risks he was taking in blatantly defaming some of the most powerful men in France.

'I dare them to take me to court'

"I dare them to take me to court, and let the inquiry take place in full daylight. I'm waiting," he wrote.

He did not have long to wait. The following month, Zola was summoned to court and sentenced to one year in jail and fined.

Instead of a cell, he chose exile in England, where he railed against the weather and the cuisine.

To all but the most committed anti-Semites, it was clear that Dreyfus was a scapegoat and that the real spy was a different officer, Maj. Ferdinand Esterhazy.

Esterhazy was eventually tried, but after deliberating for just three minutes, the military judges acquitted him rather than expose the army to ridicule for its past error.

Faced with disgrace, Esterhazy followed Zola to Britain and exile.

Yet even irrefutable proof that Esterhazy, not Dreyfus, was the traitor proved insufficient to convince the army to admit its mistake.

Dreyfus was retried and again convicted, but his life sentence was reduced to 10 years. Finally, on Sept. 18, 1899, after both the French state and the army had become the object of derision, Dreyfus was granted a presidential pardon.

Two weeks later, Zola was granted amnesty and permitted to return to France. When Zola died on Sept. 28, 1902, passions were still running high.

A crowd of 50,000 Parisians accompanied Zola's coffin to the Montmartre cemetery, where they were attacked by about 5,000 nationalists and anti-Semites. Two shots were fired at Dreyfus, one wounding him in the arm.

Though still not technically cleared of treason, Dreyfus rejoined the army and served as a defender of Paris during World War I. He was promoted to the rank of colonel and awarded the Legion of Honor in 1919. He died on June 12, 1935.

Israeli camp offers variety and fun

The Ramah Jerusalem Day Camp offers an outstanding Israel-Jewish experience for English-speaking children from abroad, entering kindergarten through grade 8. The camp is located at the Israel Goldstein Youth Village, in the San Simon neighbourhood of Jerusalem, a beautiful, rural site located only 10 minutes from downtown. Campers are taken on 3 outings a week which allow them to explore and discover the magic of Jerusalem and its surroundings. The other 3 days the campers are involved in a rich assortment of fun-filled activities, many contributing to the theme of camp which this year, is 50 Years of Israel: sports, arts & crafts, nature, music, drama and swimming. Hebrew language is introduced through songs and games. All this is within an environment of Jewish tradition.

New this year are 2 programs for the older children in the camp. Entering 5th and 6th graders will participate in a special ongoing program together with their Israeli peers in a framework called "One Jewish World". Entering 7th and 8th graders will participate in a special counselor-aide training program.

Date and fees of sessions: 1st session, Sunday, July 5-Friday, July 24, $455 per child; 2nd session, Sunday, July 26-Friday, Aug. 14th, $455 per child; 1 wk. session/s, Sunday-Friday, $185 per child.

Camp Shalom, aging beautifully

Camp Shalom is getting ready to celebrate its 50th year in the upcoming 1998 camping season. Located on beautiful Lake Muskoka, the camp has established itself as an exceptional Zionist Jewish camp for boys and girls aged 8-13 in the Gravenhurst area of Ontario.

Shalom campers experience the joys of a terrific summer vacation, under the care of a well-trained staff, with a better-than-3:1 camper-to-staff ratio. The up-to-date facilities feature a newly-renovated and enlarged kitchen with bakery, and an infirmary on the premises staffed full-time by qualified doctors and nurses.

As a non-political, not-for-profit camp affiliated with Canadian Young Judaea and accredited by the OCA, Camp Shalom imbues its campers with a sense of Jewish history, cultural values and the centrality of Israel in Jewish life. The Camp Shalom ethic promotes the ideals of mutual respect, sharing and fair play in interpersonal relationships.

Camp Shalom features an individualized program wherein each child is free to choose from over 20 daily activities including canoe, sailing, ropes, baseball, basketball, tennis, archery, instructional swim, waterskiing, kayaking, cooking, drama, arts & crafts, journalism, tripping, nature, photography, Israeli singing and more.

The Camp Shalom staff is looking forward to the upcoming summer and the privilege of sharing another wonderful season with so many fortunate campers. Come join our family!

Camp Ramah, on Skeleton Lake offers a quality camping program in the framework of traditional Jewish practice. Under the directorship of Rabbi Mitchell Cohen, Ramah offers the total camping experience for children in grades 3-10. Our safe and comprehensive waterfront program staffed by certified instructors is a highlight for our camper's. Sports is an integral part of every camper's development, focusing on skills, teamwork, and sportsmanship. Arts activities allow each camper to realize their creative potential through projects, performances, and individualized instruction. Outdoors programs take full advantage of the camp's beautiful setting while raising our camper's environmental awareness. A new ropes course gives campers and staff a chance to work together towards shared goals.

Judaica, Hebrew, and Israel programming are a regular part of the camp day. Jewish texts are taught by young adults in an informal setting. Hebrew is spoken, heard and often becomes second nature at camp. Shabbat, prayer and ritual observance assume special qualities when experienced and shared with friends.

Ramah continues to offer a unique one month program for campers with special needs. The Tikvah ("Hope") program gives adolescents ages 12 and older an opportunity to enjoy every aspect of camp while defining their own Jewish identity.

Staff is often former campers who return to Ramah because of the deep-rooted commitment to the Ramah environment. Young people develop skills and leadership, enduring friendships and a Jewish consciousness that help them become vibrant members of their family and home community.

CAMP SOLELIM - Just imagine

Just imagine a place where you can feel comfortable with whom you are and with what you believe. As the Director of Camp Solelim I stand strongly behind this philosophy. Our campers come to Solelim for its "ruach" or spirit and its creative programming.

This spirit or friendship that is created at Camp Solelim is very special and I would go further to claim unique. Through creative programming on Jewish themes or if its waterskiing or horseback riding or participating in the drama program or planning a program for Israel Day or leadership training. Each camper participates with an open mind and learns not only from the highly trained and dedicated staff but more importantly from his or her fellow campers. Listening to what your friends believe and hearing other peoples' opinions is the real learning experience. This is Camp Solelim's hallmark, and for over 35 years has successfully provided to its campers a feeling of commitment to the Jewish community.

Camp Solelim is situated close to Sudbury in Ontario. Affiliated with Canadian Young Judaea, gives Camp Solelim the opportunity to provide some of the best trained staff around. The camp is only open to 14 & 15 year olds which helps nurture long lasting friendships.

Camp Solelim does have a maximum number of campers. Unfortunately, there are only 11 places still available. Please contact the Camp Solelim office before registration closes and our waiting list opens.

Fantasia World for specialists or all-round kids

Fantasia World boys' and girls' day camp offers specialties in riding, swimming and tennis, alongside all-round options for your child. Fantasia World's philosophy, explains Director Joyce Pestell, is to combine fun and play with the self-discipline of learning new physical, psychological and social skills.

Riding is offered year-round including evenings and weekends, for ages 6-15; the indoor riding arena is open in the winter. Camp riding fees weekly are $100 for 1 session per day, and $150 for 2 sessions per day. Helmet, long pants and shoes with heels are required; Fantasia World will provide a helmet if you don't have one.

Riding is excellent training for concentration, and learning empathy with an animal; while riding, the child must pay total attention to the horse, learning to mount, stay on, steer, start and stop. The horse is always on a lead shank, held by an assistant. There is 1 assistant for each rider, and 1 instructor for every 5 riders.

Swimming and tennis are other excellent ways to unite self-discipline with fun. Specialization encourages concentration; and friendly, fair competition, spurred by a desire to emulate others, also teaches your child to relate to a group. At Fantasia World, there are swimming lessons for all ages in 2 heated pools; there is a free swim as well.

Sports are available for ages 3-15, in spacious 30-acre facilities with lots of playground equipment, and continual upgrades for safety and fun. Sports include baseball, basketball, soccer and volleyball, with well-qualified instructors; there are separate facilities for tots (ages 3-5). Tots' instructors have Early Childhood Education certificates. Fantasia World offers arts & crafts, dance, music and theatre classes as well.

Fantasia World operates 9- 4 p.m. Monday-Friday. Tots' camp runs May-September; camps for 6-15-year-olds in July and August. The Counsellor-In-Training program, for kids over 15 who are there as campers, offers a 50% reduction; this option is ideal for those who enjoy working with other kids.

Tots pay $150 a week, lunch included; transportation is extra. For 6-15-year-olds, a 2-week camp including transport is $550 in July, $525 in August; lunch is $25 extra weekly, or your child can bring one. For 2 children, there is a 10% discount off the 2nd; for 3, a 50% discount off the 3rd. For a $25 discount, register before February 15th; call Joyce Pestell at 905-887-2481.

Centre Camp emphasizes sports & Jewish roots

For a fun and memorable summer, plenty of choice in one location, and a heightened awareness of one's Jewish roots, try Centre Camp at the Bathurst Jewish Centre. Here, says Director Patricia Trojman, every child expands their horizon and deepens their roots through new experiences and friendships.

Programs are versatile, with something for everyone. Each child's unique physical, mental and social skills are developed, and new skills are encouraged. Children with special needs are fully integrated into Centre Camp's program.

Do you have a youngster who's never been to camp? For 2 1/2- 4 year olds, there's a 1/2-day program. Children 3-5 enjoy a 3/4-day camp which includes a daily recreational swim and morning transportation.

For ages 4-12, full-day all-round programs include instructional and recreational swims, transportation, barbeques, field trips, theme days, drama, dance (including Israeli folk dances), sports, nature, arts and crafts, music, Judaica and Oneg Shabbat.

Specialty programs for ages 8-12 include Young Einsteins computer program, and Habima Arts in conjunction with the Koffler Centre. The "Chaverim" and "Madrichim" leadership training programs, for ages 13-15, include off-site camping.

Centre Camp's 5-acre site includes woodlands, outdoor pool, beach volleyball, basketball courts, and a 250,000-sq. ft. indoor facility. The sports program S.C.O.R.E. (Sports Camp Organized for Recreation and Education) includes soccer, baseball, tennis and in-line skating. Trojman anticipates further growth in sports over the next few years.

This is Centre Camp's first year with S.C.O.R.E. which combines sport instruction and fun under the leadership of Jeff Krupski. This is also the Camp's first year with "ETGAR, the Challenge", the premier Israel program from the JCC, for teens 15-17; it includes 4-weeks in Israel.

Camp programs throughout the year include Winterlude, Gimme a Break (March break), and Passover camp. Theme days include fun times like "backwards day", where clothes are worn backwards and Israel Theme Day and Maccabiah Days.

At Centre Camp, Jewish culture and fun are part of every child's experience. "O Canada!" is sung in the morning, "Hatikvah" in the afternoon; and the Israeli flag flies alongside the Maple Leaf.

With 10-years experience, Centre Camp is now offering its unique services to a second generation. Let your child be part of it. Centre Camp is minutes away from your front door, at 4588 Bathurst St.; call Patricia Trojman at 416-636-7880, ext. 378.

Hashomer Hatzair / Camp Shomria

Camp Shomria offers a dynamic and exciting summer camp experience for youth aged 8-16 from Canada and the United States. A variety of challenging sports, theme days, educational and cultural activities, create an atmosphere designed to build life-long friendships. It is located on Otty Lake on a beautiful waterfront ideal for a wide selection of fun-filled water activities.

Camp Shomria promotes deep love for Israel and the North American Jewish community. It is run by the Hashomer Hatzair Youth Movement, established over 80 years ago, and is active within the Jewish community. There are weekly activities available throughout the school year in Toronto and a 6-day residential winter camp during December.

Camp Shomria activities include dance, arts & crafts, drama, hikes, trips (please see directory). Grade 10 graduates participate in a leadership training program called Yedid Plus, which includes an intensive five-week itinerary in Israel.

The staff are dedicated and committed, and most were Shomria campers themselves. Camp Shomria has its own full-time registered nurse, and many staff members are trained in first aid. An excellent hospital with modern facilities is located just minutes away. To learn more about Camp Shomria, please call Yehuda or Miriam at 416-736-1339.

NBB - continuing the tradition

Since 1954, Camp Northland-B'nai Brith in Haliburton, Ontario has been a unique place for children and young adults to make lasting friendships and spend summers of discovery.

Camp Northland-B'nai Brith is proud to offer a wide variety of activities. Whether a child is artistic, athletic, or a bit of both, we fill the day with an exciting program. Water activities include canoeing, kayaking, waterskiing, sailing and windsurfing. Land activities include arts & crafts, drama, tennis, a challenge ropes course, a climbing wall, and sports of all descriptions.

Our activities are taught by experienced and certified instructors, so that campers can learn and progress within defined skill levels. The swim instruction program is mandated by the Red Cross and Royal Lifesaving Society, and campers can complete all badges, including their Bronze Medallion.

The Judaica program explores the wonder and meaning of our Jewish heritage. At appropriate ages, campers are introduced to themes such as traditional observance, the Holocaust, and Israel.

We believe that the development of self-esteem and self-confidence in children and young adults is our purpose for being. Therefore, Camp Northland-B'nai Brith's program encourages campers to live, work, and play co-operatively and to value each other's strengths and differences. With lots of opportunities, and the encouragement of caring and supportive staff, our campers challenge themselves, and experience success.

Lubavitch Day Camp

It is our belief that a camp should do a lot more than just provide fun and games. A Jewish camp should be a place where children can also experience the richness, excitement and warmth of Judaism in a truly enjoyable and unforgettable atmosphere!

We provide hot lunches, door to door transportation, instructional and recreational swimming, a warm Jewish atmosphere, creative playground, arts & crafts, dance, martial arts, sports and much more, for children 2 1/2—12.

The daily schedule runs from 9 a.m.—4 p.m. Monday—Friday, for children ages 5 1/2—12, for 3—5 1/2 year olds the camp day is from 10 a.m.—3 p.m. and our morning program for 2 1/2—3 1/2 year olds runs from 10 a.m.—1 p.m.

We offer large discounts for registration before March 15th and a discount for each additional child.

Shendy's promotes aquatic total fitness & safety

Swimming is a total fitness exercise for the whole body, using every muscle including the heart. Swimming improves strength and motor co-ordination in children and adults; and it is an ideal exercise for many people with physical challenges, because buoyancy in water eliminates the strain of weight.

Swimming is also part of fun at camp; and all water sports are more fun for a kid who is fit, safe, and comfortable in the water. At Shendy's Swim School, there is an emphasis on both fitness and safety. Eric Shendelman and his staff have helped many students develop their swimming skills, including children and adults with long-standing phobias.

Shendelman, who teaches for the York Region Board of Education, has been actively teaching swimming for 15 years and has been involved in the camping field for over 20 years. He will once again be bringing this experience to his position as Director of Camp Arrowhead this coming summer.

Shendy's instructors keep a 1:3 ratio to students. The teachers are well trained and utilize creative methods to keep the classes fun and students motivated. The staff are always approachable and keep parents up to date on their child's progress throughout each session.

Shendy's offers a wide range of Red Cross and Life Saving programs for all ages. Students gain safety and fitness through these programs.

Once again, Shendy's Swim School, as a commercial member of the Ontario Camping Association, will be offering various leadership and recertification courses throughout the winter and spring sessions. Many camp staff from all over Ontario have accessed these programs to update their skills and qualifications.

Camp Kadimah — an unforgettable summer experience

Camp Kadimah is located in rural Nova Scotia and offers a unique, dynamic and distinctly Jewish summer experience for all who attend. Once a camp that catered to the Maritime provinces, Camp Kadimah has evolved into an international camp, one that draws campers and staff from all across Canada, the United States and beyond. Camp Kadimah is one of the fastest growing Jewish summer camps in North America and there is no better time to join the Kadimah family than now.

Camp Kadimah is known by all who attend as a "second home", one which fosters friendships that last a lifetime. Not considered a large camp, Kadimah's 250 campers and 80 staff provide the ideal setting for a child to spend his/her summer.

Our 6-week camp offers a wide variety of traditional activities and programs, as well as many innovative special programs that are not duplicated at other camps. Our campers range from age 7—16 including a comprehensive C.I.T. program.

There is no shortage of summer camps, particularly in Central Canada, but Camp Kadimah is not just another summer camp. Camp Kadimah is a family, one that is continually growing and expanding each year. Most summer camps are exactly that — a summer experience. Camp Kadimah is an experience that lasts throughout the year, and indeed, for a lifetime.

A camper who attends Kadimah will leave knowing more than just how to sail or throw a baseball, he/she will depart having grown as a person. In addition to the traditional camp skills, Camp Kadimah encourages openness, understanding, co-operation, and many other qualities that will enable a camper to mature as an individual, while at the same time remaining an intricate part of Camp Kadimah's "chevra".

Even though Camp Kadimah is located in Nova Scotia, our fees, plus airfare are still comparable to those of our competitors. Camp Kadimah is a not for profit organization and is committed to just one goal — providing all who attend with a meaningful and fun filled summer.

For those of you who are looking for a special place to send your child for a summer experience they will not forget, Camp Kadimah is waiting to welcome you with open arms. There are still a few places left in our younger age sections and C.I.T. age program. Adventure Toronto for a taste of summer

Looking for a fresh idea in kids' day camps? Does your young daughter or son like to explore, rather than stay in one place? For 3 years, Adventure Toronto Day Camp has made an old idea new again: visiting a new site daily, so no day is like the one before. This gives your young explorer a chance to go somewhere with friends and counsellors, but without parents, while getting to know the city and its environs.

Adventure Toronto might take your boy or girl downtown to the CNE, or out to Wonderland; east to Family Kartways, or west to the Playdium; north to Wasaga, or south to Niagara. Twice a month in summer, there's a one-night hotel stay-over.

This year, Adventure Toronto will add Pleasure Valley and the Hockey Hall of Fame to the visit list — and extend some days to take in events like Jays games, which they've had to miss until now. For rainy days, there are indoor events like bowling and movies.

Adventure Toronto is the only camp where each staff member carries a pager. This improves safety and logistics — for example, communicating schedule changes, responding to unpredictable weather, or getting a message to your son or daughter, wherever they are.

There is door-to-door bus service in Thornhill, Richmond Hill, York Mills, Forest Hill, Willowdale and Downsview, and pickup points for other areas. Adventure Toronto works with an experienced, insured bus company, familiar with the camp's concept.

Each camper wears a colour-coded wristband identifying her or him as an Adventure Toronto camper. Staff are trained in first aid, as well as supervising kids in public; and like the campers, they are encouraged to have fun. There is a CIT program for 15-year-olds; counsellors' age starts at 16; and camper-to-staff ratio is 4:1.

Each camper gets a group photo at the end of each week, and a souvenir T-shirt; and there are occasional treats. (If your children have allergies, you'll be glad to know that Adventure Toronto is nut-free.)

Each camp session lasts one week; but register for as long as you want, even the whole summer. Camp sessions need not be in successive weeks; and Adventure Toronto can handle last-minute enrolments. Try to register now, though: some weeks fill up fast. Experience a taste of summer; call David Harris at 416-410-4386.

An Israeli camp to suit all tastes

Camp Tapuz, established in 1981, is an unique feature on the Israel summer scene, combining the elements of a traditional camp experience with those of the "teen-tour".

Supervised flights are provided (it is also possible to join us in Israel), bringing campers to Israel from all over the world to spend the summer together, living with each other, appreciating different cultures and forging life-long international friendships. The base-camp is on kibbutz so that all the regular kibbutz facilities are near at hand. Accommodation is excellent, with air-conditioned rooms, large sports fields and a swimming pool.

While the programming is specialized for each age-group, there are also special activities for the entire camp. Tours include sites and hikes all over Israel, with an emphasis on safety and caution as well as adventure and fun.

The staff are all experienced, post-army counselors and their dedication and care are famed. All food served is kosher and creative Shabbat services are held.

We are "non-denominational" and our "ideology" is that all Jews should feel comfortable with us, whatever their background or beliefs.

Israel camp for girls fosters individual growth

Overnight camps have long been recognized as an excellent supplement to a year-round Torah education. Camping fosters varied opportunities for individual growth. Group living, independence, formal as well as informal learning, song, dance, drama, swimming, etc. are just some of the benefits offered in this natural surrounding

But ... a new dimension has been added at N'Vei Ashdod. For the past 14 years N'Vei Ashdod has provided all these things, and more ... in Eretz Yisrael where everything takes on a special flavour.

Lively, frum girls from all over the world come to Camp N'Vei Ashdod and forge lifelong friendships. It is indeed rare to find so many girls from so many places, blending so naturally. Perhaps it is the love for Eretz Yisrael which brings them so close together.

Situated in beautiful central Israel, in a tranquil, fully enclosed, modern campus with an enormous pool, beautiful grounds and air-conditioned dining room, N'Vei Ashdod combines learning, sports, fun and excitement with extensive touring throughout Israel.

The girls travel across the country in air-conditioned buses with the finest tour guides available. The whole time, security is top priority.

Shabbos, whether in camp or outside, is particularly special; picture Shabbos in the old city of Jerusalem, or in the Ir HaKodesh of Tzfat, guest lectures, Talmidei Chachomim, authors and well known Torah personalities add an extra dimension to the Israel experience.

N'Vei Ashdod, the touring camp for girls ages 10-17 in Israel is now in its 14th summer.

A Program of Camp Robin Hood Ltd.

Camp Eitan has been directed by Rabbis Michoel Levine and Moshe Weinberg for the past 19 years.

Both teachers at Eitz Chaim Schools, they offer the most in camping for the lowest price. The prices are the same as last year and include door-to-door bus transportation within a designated area, hot kosher lunches (under COR supervision) and basic instructional swimming.

Also included are gymnastics, overnights, computers, arts & crafts, weekly trips and a varied sports program. The camp is located in Eitz Chaim Schools and offers modern air-conditioned indoor facilities for rainy day activities.

A recent innovation in our boy's division is our baseball camp, offered at our same low price. Coaching, video instruction, practice and game situations are aimed at helping campers at the lower skill levels, as well.

Our girls' division has been divided into two levels to better meet the needs of each age group.

In our preschool division, special daily events, preschool classrooms, playground equipment, a weekly theme and a caring staff provide the younger child with a safe and happy summer experience.

Kidsworld offers youngsters a summer they will never forget

Kidsworld is in its 18th year of quality camping. Parents have been choosing Kidsworld for its creative programming for all these years.

Careful thought and much creativity go into the program. Every day something special is happening at the camp, from theme days to carnivals, olympics, professional entertainers and more. Specialty staff are hired to create unique activities in the areas of music, drama, art, kindergym and sports. Both fine and gross motor skills are developed throughout the summer.

Mrs. Rochelle Weinberg has directed the camp since its inception. She holds a Master of Education degree, an early childhood education diploma and has taught for 20 years.

She chooses only the most qualified staff through a careful screening process. This wonderful staff is one of the reasons the camp is so popular among parents. With door-to-door busing, hot lunches and snacks, instructional swimming and trips all included in the low price, parents have known for years that Kidsworld gives the most value for the best price!

Camp Moshava ... celebrating 40 magnificent years

Situated on 250-acres of beachfront property in the beautiful Kawartha Lakes region, Camp Moshava has upgraded and expanded its facilities and programs. Along with our Beit Midrash and outdoor Beit Knesset, we have a new Indoor Recreation Centre with a regulation size basketball court and indoor/outdoor stage.

Last year we added a new rock climbing wall, a ball hockey rink, and a regulation size basketball court. This year we will add a high ropes course and banana boating while expanding the rock climbing wall and mountain biking course. Our regular scheduled days include: instructional swimming in our heated pool, canoeing in the lake, a full sports program, thematic arts & crafts, drama and shira. Special days include colour war, sports day, canoe trips, overnights, hiking, nature trips and horseback riding.

To foster commitment to the Bnei Akiva principles of love of G-d, love of Torah, and love of Israel, we train a staff of exceptional young men and women to work with our campers in a warm, supportive, Orthodox Zionist environment.

What makes Camp Moshava unique goes far beyond facilities, events and personalities. The ruach or atmosphere that exists amongst our staff and campers is truly special. Only those who have actually encountered a Shabbat at Camp Moshava, can truly appreciate what the experience is like! Special programs are being designed to honour the 50th Anniversary of the State of Israel and our own 40th Anniversary. Camp Moshava is not something that lasts 6 weeks a year, but an experience that stays with you a lifetime.

Centrally located in the beautiful, green Hogg's Hollow Valley at Yonge and York Mills. Our unique camp caters solely to the pre-school set ages 2½ to 5 years.

We provide an enriched, creative and nurturing environment while maintaining the highest safety standards.

A low camper/counselor ratio helps to ensure each child is made to feel comfortable and secure in what is often their first camp experience. Our staff is comprised of Hillcrest teachers, student teachers from the Early Childhood Education Program and mature, experienced counselors.

The rolling camp grounds and the adventure type playground provide a setting for exploration and fun. Our trained Red Cross swim staff are sensitive to new and experienced swimmers, providing your child with a feeling of security and confidence in the water.

In our pottery, arts & crafts and drama programs your child's imagination will blossom with our creative and stimulating "hands-on" experience. Our computer program will add an additional element of fun and learning.

Hillcrest Summer Camp provides a safe and secure environment geared to the needs of your preschoolers.

Exciting opportunities at UCC

UCC Camps is celebrating its 20th year of outstanding summer day-camp programs for children aged 3-16 years. UCC Camps strive to offer children exciting learning opportunities in a variety of different disciplines. We downplay competition and concentrate on participation, co-operation and fun!

This summer we will have 25 different camps which cover a large spectrum of interests, providing greater choices for the children. The sports camps include baseball, basketball, football, hockey, soccer, tennis and volleyball. Arts camps include performing arts, visual arts and music. Our specialty camps include space and science camps, Net surf and computer skills camps, biz camp, and our outdoor environmental adventure camp. Our most popular programs are our kids camp for ages 4-6 years and our kinder camp for ages 3-5 years. We also feature sports clinics and a leadership program for young teens aged 14-16 years.

The camps are located at four different sites, each with spectacular athletic facilities, arts studios, and state-of-the-art computer and science laboratories all located in quiet residential neighbourhoods in the heart of downtown Toronto. All our campers enjoy nutritious lunches at each site and receive a free camp T-shirt from each camp they attend. Swimming and recreational games are scheduled into most of the programs, and we offer free extended service to 5:30 p.m. each day!

By CINDY WAXER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Andrew Pifko's role as an understudy in the musical I Love You, You're Perfect, Now Change couldn't be more appropriate. For not unlike the Canadian premiere's title, Pifko's life is full of contradictions.

With an avid interest in the arts, sciences and world travel, Pifko first studied drama at the Claude Watson School of the Arts. After graduating, he travelled to Israel to work on a kibbutz located two kilometres south of the Lebanese border. Eight months later, he returned and spent the next four years earning a bachelor of science degree in microbiology at the University of Toronto.

Not content to abandon his artistic endeavors, Pifko paid for his university education by singing with the Mendelssohn Youth Choir and the Beth David Synagogue Choir under the auspices of Brahm Goldhammer. Upon graduating, however, he was bitten by the travel bug once again. He packed his bags and flew to Japan, where he spent a year teaching English.

"My father's father was always of the notion that you should experiment with tons of things and find out what you're good at, become good at it, really practise at it and then find out how to make money," he says.

However, just when it seemed like nothing could anchor him, last May, Pifko landed the role of an understudy in the musical I Love You, You're Perfect, Now Change, currently playing at the New Yorker Theatre.

Featuring Louise Pitre, Larry Mannell, Sara McMillan and Tufford Kennedy, the play explores the trials and triumphs of first dates, wedded bliss, dirty diapers and growing old. But whereas this all-Canadian cast of four portrays over 20 different roles in a collection of scenes and songs, Pifko must be prepared to play either of the two leading male roles at a moment's notice.

"For me, as an understudy, it's more of an academic than a visceral exercise because the only thing I'm ever allowed to do during the rehearsal period is to watch the actual performers," he says.

Fortunately, Pifko's ancestry has prepared him for the difficult task of balancing two distinct roles. Whereas his paternal grandfather, Lawrence Pifko, is a successful entrepreneur with a keen business mind, Pifko's maternal grandfather, Muni Taub, is well-known for his support of leftist causes and work with labor organizations. In fact, as cited in the book The UnCanadians by author and director Len Scher, Taub was stripped of his Canadian citizenship in the 1950s during the Cold War as a direct result of his labor organization activities.

"The joke was that at my parents' wedding, my mother's parents sat on the left, my father's parents sat on the right and we had the RCMP down the middle," jokes Pifko.

Yet it is precisely this familial coupling of left-wing and right-wing politics that has enabled Pifko to combine his love of the arts and the more pragmatic fields of science and business. For although Pifko plans to further his career as an actor, he has adopted a decidedly businesslike perspective in his field.

"A compromise does exist where one doesn't have to cheapen one's art but can still consider it as a business and I think people are afraid to say that it's a business for fear that it might lessen the gloss of that artistic appeal," he says.

As for continuing his travels of the world while pursuing artistic endeavors, Pifko jokes that for now, the only itinerary possible would be to travel "from restaurant to restaurant" as a waiter.

Writer teaches tools of the trade

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Three and a half years ago, Toronto poet Libby Scheier placed an advertisement in Now magazine seeking participants for a creative writing workshop, and soon found herself presiding over a circle of 15 writers in her living room.

"I kind of pulled it out of a hat," Scheier says of that first workshop, which signalled a career change for her after teaching creative writing at York University for seven years.

Today Scheier runs the Toronto Writing Workshop (TWW), which this semester is offering seven eight-week workshops around the city, including introductory and intermediate workshops as well as sessions for women and on writing poetry and fiction for children. Workshops cost $235 each (discounts applicable for early registration) and begin Jan. 26 to 29.

Libby Scheier

TWW is also offering two one-day workshops in February, one in the art of novel writing and the other in writing for black women, at a cost of $75 each.

"Groups that are not the mainstream group of society find there's more freedom to explore their concerns in a group of their own kind," Scheier says. "There's a certain comfort level." She suggests that TWW may stage a one-day workshop in Jewish writing "to test the waters."

Scheier has written three books of poetry and a work of fiction, and writes a column on poetry for the Toronto Star. "A workshop is not a cure-all – it won't turn anybody into a great writer – but you can teach people elements of craft," she says.

"Writing is a very solitary activity. You come to the workshop and you have a communal experience. It's a creative community. You're getting out of your solitary space and you interact

TV doc examines Quebec departures

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
Staff Reporter

In the early 18th century, Esther Brandeau, a Jewish woman disguised as a Roman Catholic, was expelled from Quebec, or New France, as it was then known. "I cannot be a Jew in New France," she observed. "It is forbidden."

More than 250 years after her lament, Jews are still leaving Quebec, not because they are forced to, as Brandeau was, but because they fear that Quebec will secede from Canada.

And although the flight of Jews from Quebec has hardly abated since the 1995 referendum on separation, few believe that Quebec's Jewish community, the oldest in Canada, will disappear.

These contradictory currents are examined in Towards A Promised Land, an impressionistic documentary to be aired in two parts on Vision TV on Jan. 20 and Jan. 27 at 9 p.m. (Channel 75 in Montreal). The two-hour film is the work of Ina Fichman, a Montreal documentarian in her mid-30s and a third-generation Jewish Quebecer.

Towards A Promised Land unfolds against three backdrops: Fichman's edgy dialogue with a French Canadian friend, Michelle Allen; the settlement of Jews in Quebec; and the Jewish community's mercurial relationship with the francophone majority.

These segments do not fall into place seamlessly, and consequently, the film tends to be rather diffuse. Be that as it may, it is thoughtful and thought-provoking.

Fichman and Allen, friends since 1988, are the products of two different solitudes. Fichman was raised in Cote St. Luc, a predominately Jewish neighborhood, while Allen grew up in a French Catholic suburb across town.

Listening to their extended conversation, one feels that, while they can communicate with each other, they don't really understand each other's deepest aspirations and fears. Fichman is a dyed-in-the-wool Canadian, while Allen is a separatist. Allen wonders why Jews are apprehensive about French Canadian nationalism, and Fichman replies that Jews are afraid of being "left out" in a sovereign Quebec. The irony is that both women are animated by a similar goal - the maintenance of their respective identities.

With broad brushstrokes, Fichman traces the arrival of Jews in Quebec. She focuses on the Hart family, some of whose descendants left Judaism and embraced Christianity, and on William Hyman, a merchant who established a business in the Gaspe. Fastforwarding, she introduces us to Hyman's great-great grandchildren, Robert Levine and his sister, who claim they feel like "French Canadian Jews."

The most intriguing figure in the film is Pierre Anctil, a Quebecois historian whose empathetic interest in Montreal Jews prompted him to learn Yiddish. In an apt comment, he observes that the refusal of Roman Catholic schools to admit Jewish students sharpened the cultural chasm between Jews and French Canadians.

Fichman expounds on the blatant anti-Semitism that once infected French Canadian society, a point novelist Mordecai Richler pungently conveyed in a New Yorker article. But this baneful chapter is balanced by pen portraits of two Montreal-based Jewish musicians who have played in French Canadian folkloric bands, and by interviews with Jewish and Quebecois intellectuals who have honestly tried to forge something of a rapprochement between the two communities.

Fichman also dwells on the bridge-building role French-speaking Sephardis have played in modern Quebec. But the goodwill they promoted can easily be eclipsed by demagogues. Who can forget Jacques Parizeau's intemperate outburst about the "ethnic vote" following the 1995 referendum. As Fichman and Allen properly suggest, he certainly inflamed the national question in Quebec.

Saga chronicles immigrant life

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A lyrical paen to his great-grandmother, Chasia Shumiatcher, has been produced by filmmaker David Paperny, 40.

The documentary, The Shumiatcher Saga – Something from Nothing, is leading off a new 13-week series, A Scattering of Seeds, Jan. 14, about immigrant life in Canada.

Judah and Chasia Shumiatcher came to Canada from Russia in 1909 and Judah farmed a quarter-section in Rumsey, Alta. Later they brought their 11 children over and moved to Calgary. Chasia died at age 88 in Calgary, with her 11 children, drawn from all corners of the continent, at her bedside.

The Shumiatcher clan is scattered across Canada and the United States. Its descendants in the Toronto area include Aser Rothstein, a biogeneticist formerly at the Hospital for Sick Children, and his son Steven, a biogeneticist at the University of Guelph. Another is retired civil rights lawyer, Morris Shumiatcher, in Regina.

The half-hour film is a wonderful tribute to a family that started from humble beginnings and stuck together through thick and thin.

The bar mitzvah of Michael Sector, a great-great-grandson, in the final scene, with his happy relatives dancing the horah, will be treasured by anyone present at a similar event.

Luckily for filmmaker Paperny, his forbearers had home movies from the 1920s and 1930s and he added to this archival material and later film.

The shots of a Model T Ford makings its way to Banff with the U.S. contingent of the clan on holiday are classic. As descendant Omus Hirshbein, a New York cultural impresario, puts it in the film: "I was carsick all the way and couldn't wait for the trip to end. Then grandmother brought out her chicken and complained that I wasn't eating enough."

Grandson Judah Shumiatcher, the film's narrator, is owner of Smithbilt Hats, the first company to make the sparkling white cowboy hats which became the trademark of the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary.

When Judah's father, Morris, sought a $300 bank loan to start the business, the bank manager told him to get one of his uncles to back the loan. Morris at first refused, but later swallowed his pride and got the loan when uncles Bill and Harry, tobacconists in Calgary, backed him up.

Grandsons Judah and Maurice were in Toronto when Calgary won the Grey Cup in 1947 for the first time. Maurice said they "went wild" with the victory and tore down the goalposts, breaking windows in a TTC streetcar when they brought the posts to the Royal York Hotel.

There were seven sisters and four brothers in the Shumiatcher family that left Russia because of the pogroms against Jews. "My father got tired of the Cossacks riding through our town," said Judah.

His grandparents could not speak English but knew that their name started with an S. "The Canadian immigration officer suggested Smith was a good name and my grandfather was not averse to it. So we became Smith. But most of us have gone back to Shumiatcher."

The seven sisters, who were very close, were also creative; four became accomplished musicians while one was a poet.

David Paperny's grandfather arrived in Calgary and was told there was a house on Fourth Street where Jews were welcome for a Sabbath meal. "My grandfather, Leo, said he met seven beautiful young women there. In six months he was married to Annie, one of them."

The Shumiatcher Saga was to be shown on the History TV channel on Jan.14, 10:30 to 11p.m.EST. It will repeated Jan.18 at 2 p.m.EST.

Teaching the skills of her trade

with other writers. You learn what it's like to have a readership."

A workshop shouldn't be a neighborhood support group full of flattery, she says. "What we do is tell each person what is working in their work, and help them to write in their own style. We help to create a nurturing, useful, constructive creative writing environment."

Many writers are afraid to present their work before others for the first time, Scheier says. "They feel like they're taking their hearts out of their chests and putting them on the table. I don't like destructive criticism. I don't allow that to happen."

TWW employs about eight teachers, including Cary Fagan, Michael Holmes, Celia Lettridge and Robert Priest, who are chosen for their teaching as well as their writing skills. The workshops are offered at several locations, including the Bloor JCC, the Bathurst Jewish Centre and a building near Bathurst and Queen streets. The Writing for Children workshop takes place at the Children's Bookstore on Yonge Street, north of Eglinton Avenue.

TRAVEL TALK

BY BILL GLADSTONE

ISRAEL AT 50 AND BEYOND

When Israeli President Ezer Weizman lit a candle at his residence on Dec. 23, it marked both the first night of Chanukah and the beginning of Israel's year-long golden anniversary festivities in 1998. Concerts, arts festivals, marches and other events have been scheduled as part of Israel's 50th birthday celebrations.

On April 30, which is Independence Day according to the Hebrew calendar, 50,000 people are expected to watch live performances and an audiovisual extravaganza at a spectacular 50th anniversary celebration in Israel.

According to the Israel Government Tourist Office in Toronto, the Vatican, Israel and the Palestinian Authority, which governs Bethlehem, have been doing detailed planning about tourism to Israel during the Christian millennium year (2000) for more than a year.

The Israeli Ministry of Tourism is expecting at least four million visitors to Israel in the first year of the new century. The figure is down by 20 percent from an earlier prediction of five million published a couple of years ago when peace negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians were in full swing.

Tower of David: Photographer Moshe Levin's color snapshots of Israel in 1947, the year leading up to its independence, are among the few color prints of the period, and capture both historic scenes and the pace of everyday life.

Among the exhibits are pictures of Israel's first traffic cop, directing a single car on a lonely Jerusalem street; a woman boiling noodles in a pressure cooker; and a family moving to their new home, with their few belongings on top of a public transit trolley.

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It looks like a great season ahead for those who love small theatre, where tickets are cheaper and the content is sometimes far out.

The group of seven theatres (go7) is making its debut with an eclectic mix of classic drama, dance, clown workshops and off-the-wall plays.

They include The Betrayal in March, and The Cherry Orchard, directed by Leah Cherniak of Theatre Columbus and Dean Gilmour of Theatre Smith-Gilmour, in May.

The new company in go7, Froth, with Leslie Lester, Alisa Palmer and Banuta Rubess, presents Quartet by Eugene Stickland at Theatre Passe Muraille, a play about four intersecting lives. It begins in mid-February.

Volcano is putting on Cherry Docs, a play about a racially motivated killing in which Legal Aid assigns a Jewish lawyer to the case.

The rest of its season includes Patience by Jason Sherman and Girl in the Goldfish Bowl by Morris Panych.

The Alumnae Theatre in the Old Firehall on Adelaide Street is presenting The Sisters Rosensweig by Wendy Wasserstein, for a three-week run in April and May.

Factory Theatre has been revitalized by Ken Gass, and it sails into the new year with the last three

"Let us build bridges of friendship between cultures," said Martin Luther King, Jr., the famed American civil rights leader who was gunned down 30 years ago.

This month, the Morris Winchevsky School and the Jewish Artists Scholarship Society (JASS) build just such a bridge as they present Let Freedom Ring, an evening in tribute to King.

Music at Bloor JCC: The chamber ensemble Trio Lyra, composed of Mark Childs (viola), Erica Goodman (harp) and Suzanne Shulman (flute), perform at the Bloor JCC, 750 Spadina Ave., on Jan. 24, 7:30 p.m. The program features music by Canada's finest Jewish composers, including Milton Barnes, Lothar Klein, Srul Irving Glick and Ben Steinberg. $12 in advance, $15 at the door. 416-024-6211.

* * *

Visual Arts: Al Van Mil and Annette Blady Van Mil are a married couple, both artists, who have opened their Thornhill studio to offer art classes for both adults and children. 905-731-3627.

Also from Solar Stage comes a production of Harold Pinter's The Lover, until Jan. 23. Weekdays at 12:12 and 1:11 p.m., 40 King St. W. in the Scotia Plaza, concourse level. $7.50. 416-368-8031.

The Compleat Works of Willm Spkspr (Abridged), which rushes through 37 plays in 97 minutes, is continuing at the Bathurst Street Theatre until April. $20 to $39.50. 416-872-1111.

Applications are now available for the 10th annual Fringe Theatre Festival at its office, 720 Bathurst St., Suite 303. The festival runs July 2 to 12. 416-534-5919.

Up and Coming: Musician-composer Debbie Friedman, who has composed liturgical music for the Reform prayerbook, performs at Convocation Hall, Feb. 7, 8 p.m. $25 ($30 at the door). 416-870-8000.

• Toronto composer, conductor, organist and lecturer Ben Steinberg is being showcased at a Chicago synagogue later this month. Steinberg performs An Evening of Choral Music and Sacred Song: A Concert with Commentary with various others at the KAM Isaiah Israel Congregation in Chicago on Jan. 31.

If it's winter, it must be flu season

When cold weather hits, people from all walks of life come down with the "flu" – a word which has come to mean anything from a bad cold to an upset stomach. But true influenza (the word from which flu is derived) has potentially severe, possibly life-threatening, consequences. To Your Health asked Carol Goldman, an infection control practitioner at Mount Sinai Hospital, to explain what exactly flu is, as well as how to recognize and treat flu symptoms.

To Your Health

You feel like you've been hit by a truck – and you have a headache and maybe a fever. You know it's not a garden-variety cold. Your doctor says you have a virus and antibiotics won't help. The flu has reared its ugly head and you trudge home to the comfort of your bed.

People often mistakenly diagnose themselves as having the flu whenever they have anything resembling a cold. But true influenza (flu) usually makes you sicker than other respiratory viruses and can set you up for pneumonia. In fact, about 5,000 Canadians die every year from influenza and its complications. Influenza is more serious in the elderly, the immune-compromised (such as patients with cancer) and those with chronic conditions such as respiratory and/or cardiac ailments.

Influenza is spread through the air or by direct contact (such as a handshake). A simple sneeze by an infected person can propel respiratory droplets containing the flu virus into the air we breathe. As a result, flu spreads quickly in a closed environment such as a nursing home, hospital or school. However, you can catch flu just about anywhere: in the home, on public transportation, in the shopping mall.

The flu virus is capable of living outside a human host for several minutes to several hours. Once a person is infected with the virus, the incubation period (the time it takes for a person to show symptoms of flu) can last from one to four days. People are contagious for one to two days before symptoms appear and about four to five while they feel sick.

Influenza varies from person to person. In adolescents and young adults, flu often causes a sudden onset of fever, chills, headache, generalized aches and pains and loss of appetite.

In many cases, the flu may also be accompanied by an unproductive cough and other upper respiratory symptoms. As a result, many viruses, including those that cause the common cold, can mimic flu symptoms. An uncomplicated infection usually lasts five to 10 days, but the cough and weakness may last up to several weeks.

The virus is seasonal, appearing in cold weather in temperate climates like ours, while in tropical climates, it appears during the rainy season. It is difficult for physicians to diagnose the illness immediately as influenza, because it is often indistinguishable from colds or other respiratory viruses. But if you really have influenza, you will feel truly terrible.

A lot of people are confused when they are not prescribed antibiotics for influenza, but influenza is caused by a virus and antibiotics only work against a bacterial infection. Getting a flu shot – which is a vaccine – is your best bet for avoiding the flu.

Those who are at high risk for influenza and its related complications are people over 65 years old; children/adults with chronic cardiac and/or pulmonary disorders, including asthma; residents of nursing or chronic care facilities; anyone who has required regular medical care or hospitalization within the last year for chronic metabolic diseases, hemoglobinopathies and/or immunosuppression; and children from 6 months to 18 years old who are on chronic ASA therapy.

People who are in contact with others at high risk for influenza and its related complications include health care workers, both inpatient and outpatient care; employees of nursing and chronic care facilities who have contact with residents; and health care workers, home care providers and household members of people at high risk.

There will be times when, despite your best efforts, you will still come down with the flu.

Those remedies your mother or grandmother preached are still the best: get plenty of sleep and drink lots of fluids. If you have a fever, take Tylenol; and take cold medicine to help relieve cold symptoms. Find comfort in the fact that all your symptoms are signs that your active, healthy immune system is doing battle with that intrepid virus. And finally, don't go to work or school.

Treating Prostate Cancer

An implant to treat metastasizing prostate cancer was developed by Prof. Irving Spitz of Shaare Zedek Medical Center, in Jerusalem, along with scientists from the Population Council in New York.

Containing a compound that suppresses the production of testosterone in men, the implant has been used in clinical studies on 34 patients. It could take two years for it to gain approval from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (longer for Canadian approval).

The delivery system is the innovation — a hydrogel implant of histrelin, a synthetic form of the natural hormone LH-RH, which controls the body's production of sex hormones. Implanting the 2.6 centimetre long capsule under the skin on the inner arm is simple (some women undergo Norplant implants to prevent pregnancy). Until now, this type of prostate cancer has been treated by castration or quarterly injections of testosterone suppressors — painful and inconvenient.

Spitz, who heads Shaare Zedek's hormone research institute, conducted a study of the implant along with Dr. Amitsur Farkas, who heads the urology department, and Prof. Raphael Catane, head of the oncology institute. The implant is also being tested at Cornell University and the University of Salzburg.

Better Drug for Gaucher

Israel is the first country in the world now treating all of its Gaucher disease patients with a recombinant enzyme, Ceredase, produced by genetic engineering. Genzyme, a U.S. company, has exclusive rights to this drug, but has a representative in Israel. Gaucher, a genetic disease more common among Ashkenazi Jews, can cause swelling of the spleen and liver, anemia, fragile bones and severe disability in some patients, while others have a milder form.

Prof. Ari Zimran, head of the national Gaucher disease centre at Jerusalem's Shaare Zedek Medical Center, says that Cerezyme has a number of benefits over the natural enzyme…it is safer, its supply is not dependent on the collection of placentas (from which Cerezyme is extracted), and the treatment can be given once every week or two (instead of three times a week).

In a Lighter Vein

A recent study at Shaare Zedek closely examined the reactions of 87 men who accompanied their pregnant partners during ultrasound screening. Without exception, each of the men developed feelings of anxiety after the examination. Women, on the other hand, generally experience feelings of reassurance after such a procedure.

Blind Children "See"

Youngsters from Jerusalem's Institute for the Blind wanted to come and tour Shaare Zedek – to learn about the treatments provided there and to familiarize themselves with the building. In addition to expanding their general knowledge, they wanted to prepare for a time when they might require medical treatment.

After an introductory talk, the boys were able to "see" by touch the ornately carved wood of the original entrance door of the hospital, established in 1902. Some exhibited great independence, and insisted on taking the stairs unaccompanied. Surrounding sounds and smells were discussed and the boys felt their way around a ward without disturbing the patients!

A Message to CJN Snowbirds

If you will be spending all or part of this winter outside of Canada, there are three options available to you regarding delivery of your Canadian Jewish News.

1/ Continue regular delivery to your home, and arrange for Canada Post to forward The CJN on with your other mail each week.

2/ Advise our Circulation Department to suspend delivery until your return to Canada with no weeks lost in your subscription period.

3/ Arrange with our Circulation Department to redirect The CJN to your winter address at a cost of $5.00 per month.

This charge -- payable by cheque, Visa or Mastercard before departure -- covers the cost of additional postage incurred for out of country mailings.

To make any change in your delivery, please call Janice at 416-391-1836, allowing a minimum of two weeks notice.

Brother, sister are true chess mavens

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — When Diana and Roman Golts go for a walk, they like to play a game to keep themselves busy.

Nothing too unusual in that, except that where other kids might enjoy word games like Geography or Ghost, they like to play chess. Without a board. In their heads.

Usually they have no trouble playing a 60-move game from opening to checkmate, remembering every move along the way and the position of every piece.

Clearly they're not your typical Toronto kids who enjoy a good game of chess now and again. At 15, Roman is a Canadian master and his sister Diana, 10, is the top-ranked player in her age group. She recently returned from the World Championships in Cannes, France, tying Stefanie Chu for top score among Canadian girls. Chu, 14, is the fifth ranked player among women in Canada.

Roman, meanwhile, recently won the Canadian Chess Challenge among youngsters in Grade 10 and in November, he was ranked 38th in Canada among all chess players, regardless of age. Two years ago at the Labor Day Open tournament in Toronto, he tackled the big boys of adult chess and surprised the assembled chess mavens by beating three masters to jump into the tournament lead.

In his fourth match, he came up against grandmaster Kevin Spraggett, Canada's top chess player, and was beaten in a tough match. Despite that loss, Roman accumulated enough points in the tournament to give him 2,300 overall and vault him into the master's category. In addition, he's the top rated "Cadet" in Canada (16 and under) and he's about 300 points shy of the 2,600 that he needs to be considered a grandmaster.

Wait, there's more. He's won three tournaments and come second in three others, competing against youngsters in his age group.

He's also played Boris Spassky during a chess exhibition in which the former world champion played 24 games at the same time. Roman occupied the prestigious first board and though he lost, he gave Spassky a tough game, pushing the grandmaster to the limits in a 3½-hour marathon.

Spassky was the world champion until he ran up against American Bobby Fischer in a famous showdown in Iceland in 1972.

Despite Fischer's erratic behavior since then and his public anti-Semitic remarks, "I like the way Fischer played," Roman said. "He played aggressively and he played openings that I like to play. And he writes good books."

Diana and Roman Golts

For Roman and Diana, hardly a day goes by in which they don't think about chess or play a game, against others, each other or the computer.

They were introduced to the game by their father, Arkade, when Diana was four and Roman about five.

Getting kids into the game at that early an age is not unusual in Moldova in the former Soviet Union, Arkade explained. In fact, chess was a big part of every youngster's life, as the government supported chess programs in schools and in clubs.

"It kept kids occupied and it improved their concentration," he said.

Back in Kishinev, where the family lived before moving to Toronto, Roman showed early promise. At eight, his father took him to a tournament in St. Petersburgh for his first taste of top competition. Even though Roman didn't do that well – he was the youngest player there – he came home determined to improve. He studied his games and saw where he had made mistakes.

Not long after that tournament, his parents, Arkade and Lana, moved the family to Canada.

Living in the other Great White North, Roman continued to make quick progress. In his first tournament in Canada at nine years of age, he played adult opponents and though he didn't do that well, it prepared him for the subsequent Canadian Chess Challenge. Playing against other kids in Grade 3, he won the tournament.

In Cannes, "I was a little nervous and excited, but I was proud to be chosen," she said.

Back in Toronto, she improves her game by finding solutions to chess problems her father gives her. Although she plays a lot of chess, she doesn't consider it a burden. In fact, she loves it and what it's done for her.

"It's my favorite game," she said. "It gives me something to think about. It's good for my mind and it helps me improve my memory.

"I like math a lot and spelling. It helps my memory for tests."

Roman also believes chess helps him at school. A Grade 10 student at Newtonbrook Secondary School, Roman said chess "improves my memory and logic." Chess, he continued, increases his patience and ability to sit down and hit the books.

It even helped him prepare for his bar mitzvah, he said. Although he didn't know Hebrew, he was able to memorize his maftir and haftorah, thanks to the mental discipline instilled by chess.

Although he's already a master, Roman expects his game will steadily improve, but he's not planning on becoming a grandmaster anytime soon. He'll wait until after he completes university, where he plans to study computer programming, to decide if he wants to pursue competitive chess further.

In the meantime, he continues to play the board game about 1½ hours a day in the winter and three hours a day in the summer, while running the chess club at Pleasant Public School, where Diana is a student. He also helps his father run the chess club operated by the Association of Soviet Jewry in Canada.

For more information about that chess club, phone Arkade or Roman at 416-224-0848.

Chanukah Continuity Campaign

As our way of helping to ensure the irreversibility of Jewish continuity, The CJN is launching a special continuity subscription campaign in time for Chanukah. We have decided to offer our readers a special, one-time opportunity to provide their children or their grandchildren with their own subscription to The CJN.

A gift subscription for your child or grandchild, who does not already subscribe to The CJN, will cost $14.95 (taxes included) for one full year to anywhere in Canada.

Over the past few years, The CJN has grown and evolved into an award-winning national community newspaper widely read both here in Canada and abroad. We are extremely proud of this publication. Could there be a better gift at Chanukah for your child or grandchild than the opportunity to feel part of the Jewish community?

Sincerely,

mordechai Bellett

The editor.

The Inside Back

Jews and the media: Some 'insignificant' jottings

As I was saying...

By RON CSILLAG

Got a call the other day from a community official I've been dealing with for years, pitching a story idea, as she's done countless time before. Usually, her suggestions are solid and result in a story. This time, though, she neatly encapsulated a troubling sentiment I've long suspected exists among many in the community.

It was the task of someone else, she explained, to get in touch with the daily newspapers in Toronto, and it was hers, she casually noted, to contact the "insignificant" media, like The CJN. Then came her idea. Needless to say, my level of interest sank somewhat, and her subsequent fax went straight into my "insignificant" file.

The more I thought about the conversation, the more solidified became the theory I've held about Jews and the media. After working in the Jewish media on and off for 18 years, including on the PR side of the fence, I've noticed certain patterns about our schizophrenic relationship with the secular press.

Walk into just about any synagogue or community building in Toronto and tacked on the bulletin boards you'll find articles from the Toronto Star, the Globe and Mail and the New York Times. Wait a minute. Aren't these the very same outlets which routinely bash Israel and are supposed to be against us?

And when Canadian Jewish Congress has something juicy on neo-Nazis, do they tell The CJN? Nope. For years, the skinny went to the Toronto Sun, an ardent, if knee-jerk supporter of Israel, but which every single day makes a point of featuring a semi-nude woman on page 3.

My point is: we have a hypocritical relationship with the non-Jewish media. We (incorrectly) accuse them of deliberate anti-Semitism, Israel bashing and dark conspiracies. But at the same time, we consume them and (presumably) patronize their advertisers. In our striving to be accepted in a multicultural society, but one that still has the feel of Christianity, we often turn for legitimacy, acceptance, even validation, to the very media we excoriate. An article in The CJN is okay. But an article in the Star? Now that's something. The Star? Isn't it anti-Semitic?

So The CJN is a bit player, insignificant even. (Never mind that federal cabinet ministers, ambassadors and mayors return our calls.) I've witnessed organizers of Jewish events fairly trip over themselves to make sure the Globe reporter has a good seat and access to interviews. The shnook from The CJN can sit anywhere.

Recently, I attended another lecture on how Jews are portrayed in the media. This time, it was four Jewish members of the mainstream press defending their employers. There were the customary accusations of anti-Semitism and anti-Israel bias, but one exchange was particularly noteworthy. A well-spoken woman demanded to know why the Star "routinely" uses the adjective "Jewish" to describe disgraced lawyers, shady businesspeople and slumlords. The panel members looked at each other quizzically. The Star, they said, simply doesn't do that. But one panelist was brave enough to say that the woman, like so many others, was mentally supplying the anti-Semitism in order to satisfy some deep-seated feeling of persecution.

I would go a step further. We look to the secular media because we're far more assimilated than 50 years ago, and are convinced they have a cachet the Jewish media lack. The CJN and other Jewish papers, many seem to feel, are remnants of our parents' homes, sort of like plastic slip-covers and the smell of cholent. True, the average age of The CJN reader is about 50. And given current trends, including one alarming survey from the United States showing that nearly half of all adult Americans have never read a book, we have our work cut out. Between dropping newspaper readership across North America, especially among under 30s, the Internet, and TV, we have to be – and will – evolve and adapt. We have options we'll exercise. Insignificance isn't one of them.

ISRAELI UPSIDE DOWN APPLE CAKE

1/4 cup margarine
8 apples, peeled and cored
juice of 1 lemon

1/2 cup each, brown & white sugar walnuts
raisins

Batter

5 eggs, separated
1 tsp. lemon juice

5 tblsp. sugar
4 tblsp. potato starch, sifted

Melt margarine and sugars in bottom of deep round oven proof dish. Arrange apples over sugar. Fill apple cores with walnuts and raisins. Pour juice of lemon over apples. Bake in preheated 375° F for 30-35 mins. until tender.

Batter: Separate eggs. In large mixing bowl beat egg yolks with sugar until very light. Add lemon juice and sifted potato starch. Beat egg whites until stiff. Carefully fold beaten egg whites into egg yolk mixture. Pour batter over hot apples and bake for 30 mins. or until cake tests done. Let cake rest on cake rack 10 mins. before turning out, upside down, onto large cake plate. Serve cold.

About Seniors

Dear Jesse,

I am a 93-year-old widow living alone, I have no children and my nieces and nephews live out of town. Lately, I am having difficulty bathing myself and I tire easily due to multiple medical problems. I also find it difficult to prepare my own meals, and shopping for food has become a chore. I live on a fixed income - I receive my pension with supplement - so money is a bit tight. What do you suggest that I do?

All Alone

Dear All Alone,

You have several options. You can contact your local social service agency and ask to speak to a social worker. Once one is assigned to you, the worker will assess you and see what your needs are and what services the agency can provide for you. It may be able to provide bathing assistance. For meal preparation, you may want to try Meals on Wheels for food that would already be prepared for you and only needs to be warmed up. In your community, you may find a shopping program where they take seniors to a shopping centre and then have your purchases delivered to your home, for a minimal fee.

Albright cautious on talks

Netanyahu and Arafat meet President Clinton

By JAY BUSHINSKY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said she does not expect Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian Authority (PA) Chairman Yasser Arafat to reach any agreement while they're in Washington this week.

But, she said, "It will be useful for them to hear the president's words" and take them home.

Albright considers 1997 to have been a poor year for Mideast peacemaking and did not predict 1998 would be better.

"I am an eternal optimist, and I will continue to be one," she said.

But getting Israel to withdraw from more of the West Bank and the Palestinians to rout terrorists "are very serious issues to their leaders."

Albright fretted that everything in the Middle East gets tangled, "even things that seem simple" such as setting up a Palestinian airport or an industrial zone.

Netanyahu was expected to present general parameters for the next IDF pullback in the West Bank to President Bill Clinton.

However, National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon favors a more direct approach. He believes Netanyahu should specify the exact extent to which the IDF would withdraw.

Channel 2 reported that Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai spoke by telephone with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Near East Affairs Martin Indyk.

DAY OF JUDAISM IN WARSAW

Bishop Stanislaw Gadecki head of the Polish episcopate committee for interfaith dialogue spoke last Saturday night at the Nozyk Synagogue in Warsaw, declaring for the first time ever an annual day of Judaism. He expressed the hope that this would bring the faiths closer together. Please see related story on page 43. [RNS/Reuters photo]

Taking shelter from the storm

By RABBI CHAIM STEINMETZ
Special to The CJN

I remember once hearing a joke about a rabbi whose synagogue was being turned into a shelter after floods had devastated his community. The local shelter coordinator, trying to assess how many people to send to the synagogue-shelter, asked the rabbi: "How many people can sleep in your synagogue?" The rabbi responded "Well, during my sermon on Yom Kippur, our synagogue sleeps 1,000."

I can't tell you how many people sleep during my sermons; but today, in the aftermath of a disaster, our synagogue is sleeping 180. After a series of devastating storms that have crippled the Montreal area and left millions of people without power and heat, our synagogue, Tifereth Beth David Jerusalem, was turned into an emergency shelter.

Commentary

The social hall and several of the nursery classrooms are filled with army cots and are now a dormitory for senior citizens. The library is a nursing unit for Alzheimer patients and the downstairs social hall is a cafeteria and entertainment room.

Keeping a shelter of this size going requires a lot of resources and manpower, and the synagogue's executive director, Lynda Shayer, and the nursery director, Donna Cooper, together with a team of workers from the city of Cote St. Luc are working 20-hour days making sure that everything goes right. This is no easy task. Making sure that everything goes right includes making breakfast; serving 1,000 meals a day, giving baths and shaves to senior citizens, getting donations of clothing for shelter residents, as well as countless other tasks.

Most touching have been the efforts of volunteers who have come from all over to help: a 15- year-old boy who walked every day from a distant part of town; families that took people home to give them baths and a cup of hot tea; volunteers who were available to pick people up at all times of the night; others who prepared and served meals, gave baths and shaves, and sang and danced with shelter residents.

CANADA

Maloney Prize

TORONTO — The Jewish Civil Rights Educational Foundation of Canada is sponsoring a competition, with a view to awarding its law prize in memory of the late Arthur Maloney. The prize this year will be $1,000.

A paper on advocacy in connection with issues of human rights and religious freedom affecting World Jewry must be submitted before Nov. 1. The competition is open to any law student or young lawyer.

For more information, call 416-594-1812.

Mowat Criticized

ST. JOHN'S — Farley Mowat has been criticized for insulting a member of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre by comparing the Newfoundland seal hunt to the Holocaust.

ISRAEL

Shalem Centre Fellowships

JERUSALEM — The Shalem Centre of Jerusalem is accepting applications for graduate fellowships of $15,000, which will be awarded for study at the centre in 1998-99.

Deadline for applications is Feb. 1. For more information call 02-566-2202 or e-mail [fellowship@shalem.org.il].

Non-confidence Votes

JERUSALEM — The Israeli government has lived up to its predictions and survived two no-confidence motions introduced last week by the opposition.

The final vote in the motions, introduced over the state budget and Levy's resignation, was 54-54, with two abstentions.

A majority of 61 votes in the 120-member Knesset is required to bring down the government and go to new elections.

German Held

JERUSALEM — A German citizen charged with planning to help Hezbollah fundamentalists carry out a terrorist attack in Israel will be held without bail until the end of legal proceedings against him.

That was the ruling of an Israeli judge in the case of Stephan Josef Smyrek, 25, who was arrested at Ben-Gurion Airport in November after Israeli and German intelligence trailed him for several months.

Police maintained that he was trained in Lebanon and recruited into Hezbollah to help the organization carry out a suicide attack in Israel.

Smyrek is accused of conspiracy to help an enemy in war against Israel, conspiracy to pass information to the enemy with the intention of harming state security and membership in a terrorist organization.

Strategic Forum

JERUSALEM — The defence establishment is to convene a "strategic forum" on security this week, to be headed by Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai, sources said.

The forum is part of an effort by Mordechai to re-examine defence concepts and possibly draft a new defence doctrine.

As Israel approaches its 50th anniversary, Mordechai, with backing and even pressure from the military, appears to have embarked on an ambitious effort that may lead to a fundamental change in Israel's defence strategy.

For all intents and purposes, Israel's strategic doctrine remains unchanged since it was originally drafted in the 1950s, despite the radical changes in the Middle East and the monumental geopolitical changes in the world. Until now, Israel's strategic doctrine has been based on deterrence, warning, subduing and interdiction.

Intrator Honored

WASHINGTON — Genya Intrator was recently honored at the annual meeting of the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews with the 1997 Distinguished Service Award.

Back to Germany

FRANKFURT — More than 50 years after the Holocaust, the American Jewish world is coming to Germany.

On Feb. 9, the American Jewish Committee will officially open its office in Berlin – the first German branch of a major American Jewish organization. The office will help facilitate Jewish-German relations, bring American and German Jews closer together and coordinate the AJCommittee's increased activities in central and eastern Europe.

$18M Allocated

NEW YORK — The Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany has allocated over $18 million to a broad variety of programs throughout the world. Eighty percent of the funds were in support of shelter and social services for Holocaust survivors, and the balance was allocated to research, education and documentation of the Holocaust.

Flatow Scholarship

NEW JERSEY — Applications are now available for the Alisa Flatow Memorial Scholarship for the 1998-99 academic year for those planning to spend the year studying in Israel.

This scholarship fund was established by the family of the late Alisa Flatow who was killed in a terrorist attack in Kfar Darom in 1995. Deadline for receipt of application material is Feb. 9.

For more information write Dr. Wallace Greene, executive secretary, Alisa Flatow Memorial Scholarship Fund, 901 Route 10 East, Whippany, N.J., 07981.

Poll Shows Israelis, Palestinians Want Separation

NEW YORK — Israel and the Palestinian Authority may not agree on much these days, but a recent poll shows that their respective peoples agree on at least one thing – the need to create a complete separation between them.

According to the survey, conducted jointly by a Tel Aviv University research centre and a Palestinian institute, 81 percent of the Israeli respondents and 63 percent of the Palestinians interviewed support a closed border.

At the same time, large majorities of Israelis and Palestinians – 77 percent and 65 percent, respectively – said relations between the two peoples should be intensified in order to build support for peace.

While the two sets of answers may seem contradictory, the researchers believe that increased relations and separate borders are not mutually exclusive.

Montreal community helps with shelters

By JANICE ARNOLD
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The second week of the ice storm crisis saw the Jewish community mobilize en masse to help those in shelters, whether by providing transportation and entertainment or assisting at mealtime.

At the shelter and infirmary at Bialik High School, for example, hundreds of students, teachers, administrators and parents volunteered to work with staff from the CLSCs and Cote St. Luc's emergency medical services. The school housed over 350 at one point, with the elderly in the gymnasium and families with young children billeted in classrooms.

At the Tifereth Beth David Jerusalem Synagogue, also in Cote St. Luc, executive director Lynda Shayer, who spent days and nights there, celebrated her 45th birthday with a cake big enough to feed the 100 people finding refuge.

At one point, the Golden Age Association (GAA) on Westbury Avenue, which had its power restored when Hydro Quebec deemed it an urgently needed facility, was preparing 1,000 meals a day prepared by staff and volunteers, served free of charge in its cafeteria to anyone, regardless of age or religion, and delivered to those isolated at home, whether Jewish or not, and to the Cote St. Luc and Cote des Neiges shelters.

A rare rapport was established with the Muslim community, which also follows religious dietary restrictions, when they asked the GAA to supply kosher meals.

The cost will be high to the community, GAA executive director Herb Finkelberg admitted, but money never caused a moment's hesitation. A shopping service was

OPERATION SE'ARAT KERACH

CJC, CJFC lend a hand to victims of storm

MONTREAL — Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) and the Council of Jewish Federations Canada (CJFC) are receiving donations for Quebec and eastern Ontario's post-ice storm relief efforts.

In addition to money, the organizations are also collecting such items as generators, firewood and bedding. All donations will be distributed on a non-sectarian basis. CJC is working in cooperation with the Red Cross Society.

Donations can be sent to the Canadian Jewish Congress Charities Committee, 1590 Dr. Penfield Ave., Montreal, Que. H3G 1C5 or to CJFC, 4600 Bathurst St., Willowdale, Ont. M2R 3V2.

CJC communications director Mike Cohen said CJC regions across the country had received many inquiries from community members about how they could help.

"At a time like this we must all come together," said CJC president Goldie Hershon. "Many of our own community's institutions have been without power for the past week. The federal, provincial and municipal governments and social service agencies should be commended for the work they have been doing."

CJC itself, which is downtown, was relatively unscathed, going without power only one weekday and a weekend.

My trip to Israel last month still occupies this space. I will be unable to transform all my notes into columns. There are simply too many notes and too few columns. But I hope to write two, perhaps three more articles about the people we heard and the things we saw.

* * *

He is not classically telegenic in the mold of most modern politicians. He is of medium height and stocky. He walks briskly into the room in the company of the young men of the security forces who protect and guard him.

He looks directly at as many faces as he can before the proceedings officially commence. His coal-black eyes bore into you as he acknowledges your presence metres away. He smiles a half smile that appears first at the corner of the tightly-pursed lips of his mouth.

Barak has a reputation in Israel. Born in 1942, in Kibbutz Mishmar Hasharon, he is something of a military legend.

At the age of 37, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general; three years later he was promoted to major-general. In January 1986, he was appointed commander of the IDF Central Command and in May 1987, he was appointed deputy chief of the general staff.

In April 1991, he became the chief of the general staff and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general, the highest rank in the Israeli military.

But there is more than military to the man. He has a highly-curious, eclectically-ranging mind that is analytic and precise. He holds a B.Sc. in physics and mathematics from Hebrew University and a M.Sc. in Economic Engineering Systems from Stanford University.

He is also a gifted pianist.

Ehud Barak speaks

Speaking to us in Hebrew about a range of subjects covering military, foreign, social and political policy, he presented his thoughts confidently, with the assurance of a man who has thought through the ideas.

His first points relate to the peace process and to his emphasis of the need to balance peace with security.

"We are at a period of outstanding achievement. There isn't a country within a 1,500-kilometre radius of Jerusalem that is as strong as Israel, militarily, economically or intellectually.

"Only through security can we achieve peace. But to achieve security, the Jewish people must be strong, confident, the majority in its land and democratic."

Barak articulated four cornerstones to his vision for the peace process with the Palestinians:

- Jerusalem will remain always united.
- There will be no return to the borders of 1967.
- There will be no foreign military presence west of the Jordan River.
- The majority of the settlers, but not necessarily of the settlements, will remain under Jewish sovereignty.

He speaks forcefully and without even slight hesitation on the possibility, if not probability, of achieving peace with the Palestinians.

"As a former chief of staff, I am convinced that we can arrive at a peace settlement without harming our security.

"It is absurd to think that a Palestinian state can threaten the existence of Israel.

"Israel is far more threatened by the possibility of guerrilla warfare. But even after a guerrilla war, after we bury our people, and they bury theirs, we must return to the negotiating table to decide upon exactly the same issues that we are deciding upon now."

On the subject of regional peace, Barak believes that Hafez al-Assad in Syria holds the key.

"If we can reach an agreement with Syria, there will be no more wars for Israel in the Middle East."

In the next breath, however, he acknowledges that reaching an agreement with Assad is terribly complicated. Israel must be satisfied on a number of issues: a permanently quiet border with Lebanon; the elimination of terrorism against Israel from the Islamic factions in Lebanon; control of water rights; full normalization of relations between the countries; and joint economic cooperation.

Only if such an agreement with Syria was reached, Barak said, could Israel consider withdrawing from the Golan Heights.

On matters of social policy, Barak was equally as forceful.

"Israel requires a middle path: neither Reaganism nor Thatcherism. There are five domestic priorities for us:

- Education. The most precious of our resources rests between the ears and upon the shoulders of our youth. Nothing is more important than improving our educational system.
- We must improve our physical infrastructure.
- We must remove the barriers that exist to gender equality.
- We must implement a program of sherut le'umi (national service) that will oblige all youth to contribute to the country and thereby remove the stigma from those who cannot or do not serve in the IDF.
- We must find a way to return to our Jewish roots."

By this, he, the kibbutznik-soldier-philosopher-musician definitely did not mean that everyone should adopt Orthodoxy "as a way of life." Rather, he explained that the people in Israel must find a level of comfort within the heritage of Israel, and with the Diaspora, namely, all of the people of Israel.

Jews for Judaism opens next door to adversary

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

VAUGHAN — Jews for Judaism has finally opened its Thornhill office, partly to blunt the influence of the City of David messianic "synagogue" right next door.

After finalizing its lease and other arrangements, Jews for Judaism opened the 1,000-square-foot storefront, site of a former kosher frozen yogurt shop, late last month. The counter-missionary and Jewish outreach group will soon wrap up operations at its Bathurst Street headquarters, which opened two years ago.

Its new operation, in the Main Exchange shopping plaza at Bathurst and Steeles, is probably the only such storefront in the world, says Jews for Judaism's executive director, Julius Ciss.

It will serve as a resource centre and will offer the public free information booklets, videos and brochures on how to counter the growing influence of so-called Hebrew-Christian groups – those who worship Jesus as the Jewish messiah.

It will also run workshops and "survival seminars," some of which have been timed to coincide with Bible study classes and oneg Shabbats at City of David.

There's another big change at Jews for Judaism: Rabbi Michael Skobac, who used to be part time, will now be the group's full-time spiritual leader and education director. A cadre of volunteers will help staff the storefront.

The opening of the Jews for Judaism office follows last autumn's protracted and pitched confrontation between communal officials and the City of David over the congregation's presence in the plaza, located in the heart of Jewish Thornhill.

The City of David was accused of preying on vulnerable Jews, especially the young and recent immigrants, and of using Jewish symbols to lure the unsuspecting to what is essentially evangelical Christianity. Most of the acrimony was directed at two large signs the congregation had put up, touting itself as a "messianic synagogue."

In the end, the plaza's landlord agreed to remove the larger sign and toned down a smaller one to read simply "City of David."

Ciss notes that the new Jews for Judaism location is the first in the world to be situated right next door to the adversary.

He contends that despite City of David's lower profile, its targeting of the Jewish community has not abated.

"They have not scaled back one iota," Ciss said. "They're as active as ever. Just because they're out of sight doesn't mean they're out of mind."

City of David is just the tip of the messianic Jewish iceberg, he added.

According to Ciss, there are several other similar groups within a square-mile radius, including Chosen People Ministries, the International Messianic Jewish (Hebrew-Christian) Alliance of Canada, New Covenant House on Sheppard Avenue and two groups geared to Russian-Jewish emigres in the Bathurst-Finch area.

As well, Jews for Jesus continues its operation on Mt. Pleasant Road, while Congregation Melech Yisrael, on Ranee Road, is active and even has a day school.

In all, Jews for Judaism estimates there are some 50 organizations in southern Ontario which are actively proselytizing Jews.

"We say hello. They're not making an effort to be friendly, and we can't blame them. We're just trying to be pleasant."

CJC Ontario region helps deliver aid to Quebecers

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A truckload of blankets, stuffed toys and children's stickers was delivered to a community relief centre in Cote des Neiges in Montreal, Jan. 15, by representatives of the Ontario region, Canadian Jewish Congress.

The blankets were donated by children of the Associated Hebrew Schools and the whole operation was organized in 18 hours, regional chair, Moshe Ronen, told the Ontario region executive.

It took 30 people and a policeman on his beat to unload the gifts at the centre, reported Daniel Fine, who along with Hershel Sahian, another staffer, accompanied the truck to Montreal.

At the centre, the blankets were particularly welcome because a number of residents had virus infections.

"Kids were stealing toys from each other and there were stickers all over the building, by the time we left," said Sahian. "It was fun to involve the kids, both in Toronto and in Montreal."

"Jews and Jewish kids felt strongly about the needs in Quebec," Fine told the meeting.

The stuffed animals were donated by Ganz Brothers, a Toronto toy company. Five cartons of toy stickers were donated by Sandy Lion Stickers.

U.S. unfair to speed up peace process: Caplan

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Pressure from the United States on Israel to speed up the peace process is "unfair," Elinor Caplan, Liberal MP for Thornhill, said here Jan. 15, reporting on a recent Jewish parliamentary conference in Israel.

"Because of political instability, it is unlikely for the peace process to move forward before the next election in Israel," she told the Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC), Ontario region executive meeting.

Reporting on the consensus in the conference attended by 75 participants from 25 countries, Caplan said she agreed that the peace process, "is the only alternative to an unwinnable war for the Jews and Arabs.

"I agree it [the peace process] is the least bad of bad alternatives."

On the conversion issue, which she termed "equally divisive," Caplan said they met with the chair and members of the Ne'eman Committee and were told by the chair "that there was agreement on all the issues, that all have agreed to compromise, and their report will be ready by the end of January."

In the question period, CJC executive delegate Joe Fried of One Israel disagreed that the peace process is the best alternative for Israel.

Later, Gilbert Zimonsky of Shomrim said Congress should not have provided a platform last month for a Palestinian from Gaza, but chair Moshe Ronen said, though he disagreed with the speaker's views, he took full responsibility for authorizing it in the interests of unity.

Women's issues are a serious problem in Israel, Caplan said, where women are paid less for doing the same job as a man. There are 80,000 families headed by single women in Israel, she said.

The MP said she was impressed by Dov Sedaka, the Israeli commander of the Erev Gate, who told her that the Israeli army has petitioned the government that jobs should go to Arabs, not to foreign workers, "because every job given to an Arab means he can feed his family."

At the conference Israeli visiting speakers said, in the MP's words, "don't tell us what to do, don't push us, be patient and understanding."

In other business, Bernie Farber, executive director, reported that a Toronto journalist has uncovered a document that purports to show a list of potential enemies of the Department of National Defence during the uproar over the Somalia affair.

"Among the left-wing and right-wing enemies, and included with the Mennonites and the Quakers, was the CJC," he said. "Among the religious extremists B'nai Brith Canada was listed."

The executive, in conjunction with the CJC national office, confirmed Farber as regional executive director, succeeding Manuel Prutschi, and promoted Daniel Fine to associate national director. Michael Soberman is the new director of community services and youth activities, and Hershel Sahian is the new public policy coordinator. Farber retains the job of national director of community relations until a replacement can be found.

Unity group formed

TORONTO — An advisory group of Reform, Conservative and Orthodox leaders has been formed to support the unity of Toronto's Jewish community.

At its recent inaugural meeting with UJA Federation, group members expressed their opposition to violence or abusive language as a means of registering differences.

The group will be advising UJA Federation President Joseph Steiner, who described it as an extension of discussions already held with representatives from all religious streams on Israel's conversion legislation and local issues.

"Our first meeting was very constructive and useful. It was positive in tone and very supportive of our role as a facilitator and a central vehicle for communication," he told the federation board of directors. "The committee members recognized an overwhelming number of issues on which they could agree.

Troubling and vexing

Only on rare occasions does The CJN comment on the editorial pronouncements of other newspapers. To do so we must have compelling reasons. Last week, there appeared two editorials, one deeply troubling, the other vexing, that compel us to comment.

The Toronto Star, Canada's largest daily, has an editorial policy that long ago proved itself to be unfair towards Israel, undisguisedly biased in its advocacy on behalf of Israel's adversaries. Thus, it is no surprise when its editorialists constantly hector the government of Israel with sanctimony and censure. The prime minister of Israel, in particular, has been a frequent object of their finger-wagging since the first days after he was elected.

But last week, in its editorial "Israel's new demands dim Mideast hopes," the paper stepped past the boundary of its usual advocacy into the realm of purposeful distortion. The editorial referred to the decision by Israel to release a 12-page document listing the violations of the Oslo accords by the Palestine Authority and the pre-conditions for further troop redeployment from the West Bank. That it dismisses those preconditions as "arbitrary" and "outrageous," simply demonstrates, again, the Star's disinterest in conveying the full truth of this complex and difficult situation to its readers. That it finds no criticism of Yasser Arafat and nothing but criticism for Benjamin Netanyahu attests to the Star's partiality. But that it repeatedly uses the phrases "Arab land occupied 30 years ago," in reference to the West Bank and east Jerusalem establishes beyond doubt the Star's intention to smudge the history of the area into an illegible piece of pro-Palestinian propaganda.

For the record, it is imperative to note that the West Bank was occupied by Transjordan at the end of hostilities during Israel's War of Independence. Only one country, Great Britain, recognized Jordan's claim to that territory. In 1967, Israel captured the West Bank and returned to east Jerusalem from which it had been expelled by the Transjordanian army 19 years earlier.

That Israel has promised to "walk away" from much of the West Bank in the context of a final, mutually-agreed treaty of full peace with the Palestinians, is to its credit. There is no precedent in history, modern or ancient, for any country, in similar circumstances, doing so. It is not likely, though, that readers of the Toronto Star will ever read this in its editorials.

But if the editorial in the Star was troublesome, the editorial in the Globe and Mail entitled "Will Nazi hunters misfire?" was vexing. The editorial challenges the validity of the current strategy of the federal government in attempting to denaturalize and then to deport some of the Nazi war criminals living in Canada.

It asks:"Is banishment an appropriate penalty for a 50-year-old lie?" strongly implying that it is not because "citizenship, as we know, is built on stronger foundations than a signature on a form."

The editorial refers in its last paragraph to "keep(ing) fairness at the heart of justice." But anyone familiar with Canada's shameful record in dealing with war criminals has long given up on the hope of seeing justice done to the Nazi murderers and torturers still living out their lives in our midst.

What the Globe and Mail fails to ask is, having abandoned all hope for the achievement of true justice, should Canadians now be willing to accept simply anyone "who has built a life and a standing" here, even Nazi war criminals, as citizens of Canada. Does Canadian citizenship mean so little? Shockingly, to the Globe and Mail, it appears so.

When one combines the muddled thinking in this editorial with the morally repugnant and breathtakingly insensitive featuring of Ernst Zundel last Saturday in the Person, Place, Thing column in its op-editorial pages, one can only gasp in incredulity at the Globe and Mail's editorial judgment. From the newspaper that fancies itself the country's national newspaper, we expect more.

Disputes CJN story on Chief Rabbi

Allow me to correct two elements of The CJN's interview with Israel's Chief Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron during his Toronto visit (CJN, Jan. 15). I do so in consultation with others who were present.

The chief rabbi, replying to The CJN regarding remarks on the obligation "sometimes…to take extreme action," which sparked controversy in the Reform Jewish community, noted that thrice during his 1996 talk he had stressed that he was not speaking of action in the physical sense. (It could only be concluded, therefore, that he was referring to action in the realm of ideas.) He added that his remarks were readily verifiable on tape. Surely The CJN thus erred in stating that the chief rabbi "offered no clarification" during the interview.

The chief rabbi indicated that it was premature to pronounce himself on the work of the Ne'eman Committee, until it released its concrete proposals. For The CJN then to say that he "declined to comment" implied that he was not interested in addressing the issue.

It is only fair and imperative that the chief rabbi be represented accurately, irrespective of whether one agrees or disagrees with his views.

Manuel Prutschi
Executive Vice-President
Sephardic Kehila Centre

Comment: The report of the interview with Rabbi Bakshi-Doron was based on a translation of his responses, which were given in Hebrew.

A careful review of the audiotape of the interview clearly shows that the rabbi said he did not mean his 1996 comments the way they had been interpreted. He did not clarify, however, what he actually did mean at the time, beyond what we reported last week, i.e. that killing is not allowed.

Trained for Israel at Smithville Hachsharah

I was at this Hachsharah at Smithville, Ont., right from the start. From there I left for what was then Palestine in December 1946. Upon my arrival there two weeks later aboard the Marine Carp, I went to Kfar Blum, a kibbutz in the Upper Galilee which had just been established.

Says no accurate list of Jewish veterans exists

As a veteran of World War II, I want to respond to "Book to remember Jewish war dead and veterans." (CJN, Dec. 25, 1997) I question the feasibility of listing some 17,000 names of Jewish soldiers in a commemorative book.

No comprehensive nominal roll (list of servicemen's name and service numbers) can be found. At the present, only incomplete lists are available. Even the listings in the National Archives in Ottawa are from Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) sources.

I had the privilege to sort, compile and catalogue the papers of the war efforts committee of the CJC, including the records of the Jewish Chaplaincy Service.

There is also a problem in Quebec. According to the Quebec Commission of Access, it is prohibited by Quebec law to publish servicemen's names without permission from the individual or next of kin. In Quebec, this may involve thousands of names.

Hospice program carries on tradition

Some weeks ago I was invited to attend the Jewish Hospice Program memorial service to honor the memory of loved ones who have passed away. Jewish Hospice is a program of compassionate home-centred care which addresses the symptoms and suffering of those persons and their families coping with a life-threatening illness. The goal is to improve the quality of life remaining. Funded entirely through charitable donations, Jewish Hospice charges no fees to those who receive their services.

I read somewhere once that our tradition does not allow us to forget those who have died. Finding an appropriate way of honoring and remembering the dead is one of the goals of the mourning process. When a person dies, his or her spirit lives in those who remember.

Perspectives

"What is the significance of the work of the Ne'eman Committee to the State of Israel and to the Diaspora?"

The CJN posed the above question to these representatives of the main "streams" within organised Jewry.

By MARK S. ANSHAN AND RABBI DOW MARMUR

The establishment of the Ne'eman Committee constitutes an unprecedented attempt to enable the various religious streams in Judaism to coexist in relative peace. It also stresses the point that Israel is not just the state of its citizens, but that of the entire Jewish people.

If successful, the committee will avert a break between Israel, which is largely secular yet, because of its electoral system, dependent on Orthodox political parties, and the Diaspora, which is dominated by non-Orthodox Judaism.

Though no committee can bring about unity in the Jewish world, the recommendations may lead to a less belligerent relationship between its components, and safeguard the rights of Jews who don't wish to submit to the rigors of the Orthodox interpretation of Jewish law in matters of personal status.

Therefore, the potential for good of the committee is enormous. But the risks are great, too. For, to reach a modus vivendi, both sides must make concessions, even sacrifices.

The Israeli Chief Rabbinate will need to recognize the legitimacy of alternative approaches to Jewish practice. Religious pluralism requires such understanding, even though Reform Judaism does not need recognition from the Chief Rabbinate. This will not come easily to Orthodox leaders. Even if they find an acceptable formula, they will be attacked by those on their right.

The non-Orthodox movements will be expected to give up a measure of their autonomy and in one way or another, to allow the Israeli Chief Rabbinate to have the last word in matters of marriage, divorce and conversion. There are many on the left, especially in the American Reform Movement, who will find this unacceptable.

Thus far, it appears that achieving an agreement will be difficult. At this point, Orthodoxy is not even officially represented at the committee. When Ya'acov Ne'eman recently addressed a convention of Reform Jews in Israel, he was attacked by Orthodox rabbis and politicians for speaking before that group.

Yaacov Ne'eman RNS/Reuters

Reform and Conservative representatives are not likely to yield their autonomy to a Chief Rabbinate that, to date, has only shown hostility. One of the chief rabbis would only see Rabbi Eric Yoffie, the leader of North American Reform, if the latter made several a priori concessions that would compromise Reform, something which, of course, he wouldn't do. It should be no surprise that the Reform movement approaches its participation in the Ne'eman Committee with a mixture of anticipation and skepticism. While we hope that a positive agreement will be achieved, there is no illusion that the committee will be successful in the absence of a recognition that there are legitimate alternative approaches to Jewish religious practice.

The Ne'eman Committee also runs the serious risk of further splintering the Jewish community. There are indications that Orthodox leadership may attempt to drive a wedge between the Reform and Conservative communities by giving "recognition" to Conservative Judaism's flexible interpretation of Jewish law and egalitarianism.

Rumors of an attempt by ultra-Orthodox members of the Knesset to exclude their Arab counterparts from voting on the conversion issue strengthen the suspicion that Orthodox politicians are preparing for war, not for peace, with brutal consequences for Israeli democracy and the cohesiveness of the House of Israel.

The Ne'eman Committee holds the promise of cooperation as well as the seed of further strife. This situation will be another critical test for Israel's political system and its judiciary. We hope and pray that wisdom and responsibility will prevail and the potential for good of the Ne'eman Committee will become real.

By NORMAN STERN

"When families don't fight, things simmer. When they fight they may reconcile. This family is fighting and that's a good thing." I use this quote, reported to have been said by a delegate at the recent General Assembly of the Council of Jewish Federations, held in Indianapolis, to sum up my feelings about the Ne'eman Committee.

For the first time, under the auspices of the government of Israel, leaders of the three main religious parties are sitting together and talking, listening and arguing. I have heard many rumors as to the possible outcome, but no matter; because the fact that such a commission was structured in the first place will mean that when it comes to the status of the religious streams in Israel, tomorrow will have to be different from today.

In Israel, where the significance of the committee's reports will be most felt, the Masorti (Conservative) Movement is ready to work together with others for the benefit of klal Yisrael. We have stated this fact in the past and we continue to do so in the future. Masorti can boast of a wide network of synagogues is Israel, along with adult education programs, youth camps, TALI educational programs in the schools and a beit midrash, which three weeks ago graduated a class of 50 rabbis, teachers and scholars who will be working in and changing Israeli society. The Reform Movement can boast of similar activities. All Israel can benefit from such institutions.

Hopefully, the Ne'eman Committee will present a compromise proposal that will protect the status and the principles of all the various streams within Judaism. This will be a historic turning point, which will only increase the quality of religious life in Israel.

In the Jewish world outside of Israel, and especially in North America, the work of the Ne'eman Committee on the conversion issue has produced results that were not expected.

Firstly, the committee has rekindled the topic of Israel in homes, in synagogues and around boardroom tables. Those of us who have been working with Zionist programming can testify to the hard reality that Israel, as a focus of attention, as a place to visit, is no longer near the top of the list of priorities, especially to a generation of Canadian Jews who cannot remember a world without Israel. We have the challenge of changing this, and we look forward to a positive response from the commission to help us in this effort.

Secondly, the committee has galvanized and raised the political awareness of the Conservative and Reform movements in North America. The two religious bodies have been very active in gathering support for the committee from Jews in both North America and Israel. The two movements had the largest delegation ever at the recent World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem. In addition, as a direct result of the commission and its mandate, leaders from the two movements have been meeting with the leaders of the local federations in order to develop plans that will satisfy the needs of all religious streams.

Canada can act as a role model to our sisters and brothers in Israel. Within the Zionist community in this country, the three religious streams have a strong, mutually respectful, working relationship, because our major concern is Israel and its development.

We all have the challenge of creating activities both in Israel and in the Jewish world globally to foster the concept of religious pluralism. By developing tolerance in each other's beliefs, we can make the State of Israel the home for all Jews.

By KURT ROTHSCHILD

We the Jewish people are a beleaguered species – a minute percentage of the world population – yet, 50 years after the Holocaust that exterminated one-third of our people, we are challenged to maintain strong and secure the very existence of a Jewish State in the Middle East and we are ravished in numbers by an unprecedented onslaught of assimilation and intermarriage.

In such a predicament, it is of paramount need that we rally together and coexist in harmony to face these challenges in unison.

Sadly, this is far from reality. Many Jews in Israel and worldwide hold genuinely differing views and different approaches to Judaism – be they religious or political – but objective differences are aggravated by violent, irresponsible and abusive language on both sides of the divide.

In this context, the Ne'eman Committee dealing with the question of conversion in Israel and its repercussions in the Jewish world takes on great importance.

The significance of the Ne'eman Committee lies in the fact that it is attempting to find a formula rooted in Jewish tradition that would address the overriding issue of Jewish unity. One must recognize that the Ne'eman Committee is a sincere effort to avoid what may become a permanent split in the Jewish people. What is now a fissure may become a major chasm. We are dealing with the future of the Jewish people.

No solution can succeed, however, if it asks that basic sacred principles be violated. That is why the integrity of Halachah must not be compromised, but everything else, on both sides, should be available for an honorable resolution of the conflict.

There is much confusion in the understanding of the issues. Some of this confusion results from a lack of understanding of the nature of Judaism, caused by a lack of education and by inaccurate statements.

It is wrong to declare that there is an effort by one side to delegitimize members of other religious streams. Yet these slogans are being circulated as part of partisan and inflammatory statements. Any person born of a Jewish mother or halachically converted is a full-fledged Jew in every sense of the word. We have no castes and no sects, and there is no justification for discrimination.

There is no attempt to alter the Law of Return which has been the cornerstone of the relationship between the State of Israel and World Jewry.

When David Ben-Gurion and the fathers of the modern State of Israel drew up the agenda for the newly born state, they agreed that for the sake of the unity of the Jewish people, regulations of personal status should be under the jurisdiction of the Chief Rabbinate of Israel. The physical and national integrity of the Jewish people and its future are tied to this concept. To challenge it and tamper with it is to endanger the concept and relevance of our Jewish state, which is by its very nature anchored on our tradition and our history.

We hope that wisdom and largesse of spirit will enable us to return peace and tranquillity to our ranks.

Halifax shuns anti-Semitism

The Jewish conspiracy to take over the world has reappeared in the spotlight. But Halifax organizations are slowing its progress.

By Viva Press in Halifax

According to a manifesto I recently read, the "Jew plague" is here again and everybody is affected by it. The writer says the whole world is in turmoil because of Jews and because of our aim to destroy morally, economically and financially anyone who's not Jewish.

The three page single-spaced typed babble mixes one or two facts – taken out of context, of course – with ridiculous notions such as the fact that Jews are responsible for the atrocities in Korea, Vietnam, Somalia, Bosnia and Iraq to name but a few.

While most of the contents of this letter are quite humorous because of their absurdity, it is also disturbing that such a document exists and is being passed around. I got this manifesto from CKDU, Dalhousie University's campus radio station.

In the last week of December, this script was mailed from Toronto – there was no return address but the postal stamp showed it came from Toronto – to CKDU asking them to make a public announcement on air about the Jewish conspiracy. CKDU ignored the request and promptly passed a copy of this hate-material to the Atlantic Jewish Council office in Halifax.

CKDU wasn't the only organization to divert anti-Semitic remarks. Dalhousie and other Maritime university newspapers had previously stopped the presses on a controversial advertisement.

At the beginning of this school year, campus newspapers were faxed an advertisement from the Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust. This anti-Semitic organization offers $50,000 (US) to anyone who can persuade a television station to play their 90-minute documentary denying the Holocaust. But the ad has another purpose: it wants people to check out its Web site, which is nothing more than a directory for anti-Jewish, anti-Semitic and hate links. Scarily the site has had more than 300,000 hits. Unlike the University of Toronto's Varsity, the universities in the Atlantic provinces refused to print the ad.

But where there is good, there is also bad.

On Jan. 9, the Dalhousie Arab Society put on an Arabic cultural day. For the most part this was an educational day for Dalhousie students to learn about the Muslim religion and culture, and taste Arab foods.

There was also another issue to be addressed: an anti-Jewish one. I am aware that the Arab-Jewish conflict is extremely volatile; however, there is no justification for the following sign that was plastered around the Dalhousie campus: "The Palestine-Israel conflict: A legacy of ethnic cleansing and dispossession." A little harsh, if you ask me.

This particular sign was promoting a lecture to be given on Jan. 9 by a professor from Dalhousie who is known for his controversial views. Unofficially referred to as "Mr. Facts," this professor is known to spew out statistics without ever identifying his sources. In fact, many Dalhousie professors shy away from including him among their circle.

Anyway, this professor was scheduled to give a talk on Israel's racist policy on Friday, Jan. 9, at 3 p.m.

Friday, 3 p.m., may not seem like anything out of the ordinary, but I think this scheduled time slot was more than a coincidence. You see, News & Science, my radio show on CKDU covering Jewish affairs, is on the air from 3 to 4 p.m. on Fridays. If you ask me, I think it's a little strange the lecture coincided perfectly with my show time.

And in fact, the past supports my suspicions. It seems that whenever there is a lecture by this professor, it takes place on a Friday, and usually in the evening so that observant Jews are kept from attending. In this case however, about a "minyan" of Jews were on hand to listen and rebut what this professor had to say.

On the whole, Halifax's role in these anti-Semitic and hate incidents during the past few months has been a positive one. The ad never got published, the manifesto never got aired and the professor had a mixed audience.

Copies of the manifesto and advertisement have been made and sent to another location. But these copies won't help in spreading the hate; they have been sent to the Canadian Jewish Congress Archives.

Parizeau's parade of words

Shortly after the last Quebec referendum, which ended in a squeaker for the federalist side, the then-premier of the province explained why his side had lost. He explained it by saying that ethnics and money had done them in.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut in Toronto

"Ethnics" was quite clear: that is the term for groups who insist on cherishing their cultural heritage and stubbornly refuse to become so assimilated that their origins are no longer discernible. Greeks, Italians, Chinese, Jews and similar "ethnics" were obvious targets of Jacques Parizeau's disdain.

And what about "money"? Jews are sensitive about expressions like this. While the premier did not single them out, it was obvious that he had used a traditional prejudicial term to describe our people. From the days of the Spanish Inquisition on, we were identified as being rich and concerned exclusively with money, and the imagery has adhered to us like glue. Those who don't like us will gladly use this ascription and believe that they have thereby characterized traditional Jewish habits and leanings. We, in turn, have come to see this expression as a cover for expressing anti-Semitic feelings.

Parizeau paid dearly for his remarks, and public opinion forced him to resign his post. Quite obviously, however, he has not changed his opinion. Not long ago – I believe it was in Florida – he returned to his favorite subject and declared, more openly and clearly, that in his opinion it was Italians, Greeks and Jews who had caused the defeat of the referendum. On the surface that remark does have some validity to it: these groups were indeed overwhelmingly in favor of a united Canada, a land that they cherish and do not want to see dismembered. Had this remark been made by a sociologist studying election results, we might in fact have been proud of being counted amongst the lovers of Canada – but that was not Parizeau's intention.

Aside from the veiled anti-Semitic slur of post-Referendum days, something altogether different lies behind his opinion. What he really says is that Italians, Greeks, Jews and other ethnics, are not "us" – meaning true Québécois. For some time now the latter term has not only conveyed a sense of cultural identification, but has had overtones of racial identity as well. The Québécois in this perception are the old inhabitants, raised in a Catholic tradition, who know who they are and who speak and think as if they were one large family. Newcomers are essentially "the others" and not "us."

Parizeau is not alone in believing this. Surveys that test public opinion have shown a large streak of agreement with his expression, and he says publicly what many Québécois think. These supporters of separatism make an emotional case for their belief, but as long as they will project a future community in which some are the real citizens and others don't quite belong, the "ethnics" as well as anglophones, allophones and many francophones will vigorously object and continue to vote No.

From one storm to another

After one full week of not being able to check my e-mail, I was finally able to log on. The first incoming message was from Israel. The letter opened with the following sentence: "I don't know if you heard, but we just had a gruelling snowstorm."

By Justin Korda in Montreal

My friend went on to explain that everything had shut down. The buses stopped running, work was cancelled, stores were closed and the country was practically crippled. Finally, my friend added, the sun came out in the afternoon and began to melt away the two inches of snow that had caused this standstill.

Considering that I read this letter just as my own power had finally turned back on after we had been in the dark for three days, I couldn't help but burst into laughter. A storm, I thought, you don't know what a storm is until you've experienced what has come to be called Ice Storm '98.

I composed myself and continued with the rest of the letter. "I heard that you guys in Montreal are having some bad weather too," my friend wrote. "Don't worry though, you will always have a shelter over here." Once again, I smiled, as the memories of one of the most horrible weeks Montreal has ever experienced came to mind.

Throughout the week, the events became literally unbelievable. Who could imagine a normal city, let alone one like Montreal which you would think should be prepared to deal with bad weather, could be completely crippled by a natural phenomenon like ice? No heating in freezing cold temperatures, tree trunks and branches torn off trees and thrown into the middle of streets and onto car and roof tops, no drinking water because of contamination, packed emergency rooms, no lights, make-shift shelters overflowing with people, complete shut down of commercial areas and schools, and cancellation of all events and programs. It sounds as if I were describing the scene of a war-torn city. And as if that isn't enough, the military was actually called in to assist in the relief.

Concert cancelled

As Ice Storm '98 took mother nature as its hostage, people worldwide – and Canadians especially – watched their televisions depict Montreal's battle with the natural disaster. Even the Rolling Stones cancelled their tour stop at the Big O after the ice punctured a hole in the roof.

Now that the worst has passed and the recovery stage is in full force, we find ourselves being truly thankful for things that we never considered before, for things that we really took for granted. Remarkably, this weather disaster put us humans in our place. To think that we are capable and independent as a result of our technological advancement all of sudden seems so naive.

Although Ice Storm '98 will surely go down in the history books, I doubt that anyone who lived through it will ever forget where they were when the heating shut off. Fortunately, with time, the ice storm will chisel itself away and we will simply be left with poignant memories. However, I hope that we all remember to take some experiences with us as warm baggage.

For one full week, we had our routines broken, we sought help or sought to help. Shelters were packed with volunteers; radio stations were crammed with calls from people offering their assistance to those in need; and even heavy metal band Megadeth performed a benefit show in Montreal to help support Ice Storm '98 relief.

Amazing stories of families and friends who bonded together are leaving social statisticians speculating about an increase in Montreal's birth rate in nine months, among other things. And when do you hear about a country that is so pacifist that they call in the military to help battle fallen electrical equipment? The population in general came together at this time of need, creating a feeling that was really welcome in a province where animosity and political frustration are usually constant givens.

As we now get back to "normal life" and pray that our spring break is not cancelled, hopefully these experiences will positively impact our daily routine.

Where were you during Ice Storm '98?

Doctors compromised themselves during Nazi era

By Sheldon Kirshner

Doctors are ethically bound by the Hippocratic oath, which forbids them to commit "all wrongdoing." But during the 12-year night of Nazi infamy in Germany, the medical profession flouted this ancient injunction with impunity.

Forty-four percent of licensed physicians joined the Nazi party, the highest percentage of all professions, and doctors did the bidding of a malevolent state. They purged medical faculties of Jews. They took part in the euthanasia program. They performed gruesome medical experiments in concentration camps.

As if these crimes were not enough, morally tainted doctors used questionably-acquired cadavers in anatomy classes; they sterilized so-called undesirables; they promoted reactionary eugenic and racialistic ideas at universities, research institutes and hospitals; and they helped lay the theoretical foundations of the 1936 Nuremberg laws, which defined Jewishness and stripped German Jews of their citizenship.

In short, doctors played a critical role in the racist transformation of Germany, says William Seidelman, a Toronto physician who is trying to raise funds for a centre devoted to the study of this subject.

It is not a topic that has attracted widespread attention, despite the proliferation of books dealing with the Holocaust. In Canada, only about five doctors and historians, including Seidelman, have delved into this still-shrouded facet of Nazidom. And in Germany, where a campaign of suppression and repression virtually succeeded in burying the matter for the first four decades after World War II, it remains to this day on the fringes of scholarly respectability.

Unburdened by the past, a new generation of German doctors and historians is striving to come to terms with the issue, said Seidelman, who has written and lectured on the role of doctors during the Nazi period. But research along these lines is still in its infancy. "An academic in a German medical school today imperils his career by working on this subject," said Seidelman, director of the HIV ambulatory program at Wellesley Central Hospital and professor of family and community medicine at the University of Toronto.

Seidelman, 56, is convinced that the controversy cannot be swept under a rug.

As he put it in a paper delivered at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington: "What happened to medicine in Germany during the Third Reich is so important because we need to learn and try to understand how the mightiest profession in the world succumbed to evil. We need to learn, not out of recrimination or retribution, but in order to study the lessons and to try to prevent ourselves and others from ever becoming party to evil...We have to examine how 'good' science and 'good' medicine tolerated professional and scientific and moral malignancy."

In Seidelman's view, a thorough investigation of how the medical profession was corrupted should rightly focus on Germany, not only because of what happened there but because it was the birthplace of modern medicine.

There was a symbiotic relationship between doctors and the state. "The German medical profession found in the Nazi movement a sympathetic ear to ideas of eugenics (and) race that had been developing within German medicine," he writes in a piece published in Medicine & Global Survival. "The Nazi leadership found in medicine a scientifically legitimate vehicle for the achievement of their political goal of racial purification."

Seidelman rejects the thesis that only undistinguished doctors served the Nazis. "The German medical profession has portrayed these guys as marginal, when in fact they were the pace setters."

Leaders of medical elite emerged unscathed

Several examples will suffice:

- Otmar von Verschuer, a geneticist known for his studies on twins, was the principal investigator in the experiments of Josef Mengele at Auschwitz. Verschuer was affiliated with the University of Frankfurt and the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute of Anthropology in Berlin.
- Eduard Pernkopf, dean of the University of Vienna's medical school, led the purge of Jewish faculty members, exploited Nazi terror to acquire cadavers, and wrote the Pernkopf Anatomy, an atlas renowned for its artistic beauty and fine detail.
- Karl Schneider, chair of the University of Heidelberg's department of psychiatry, exploited the euthanasia program to further his own research.
- Irmfried Eberl, a psychiatrist, was the first commandant of Treblinka.
- Gerhard Wagner, a general practitioner from Munich, helped formulate the Nuremberg Laws.

For all intents and purposes, the leaders of the medical elite emerged unscathed, assuming pivotal positions at universities, institutes and hospitals after the war. Verschuer, for instance, was appointed chair of the department of genetics at the University of Munster. And three of the presidents of West Germany's postwar national doctors' association, the Federal Chamber of Physicians, were former members of the SS and the SA.

The World Medical Association (WMA) was also short on scruples. Ernst Fromm, an alumnus of the SS, served as WMA president from 1973 to 1974. In 1992, Hans Sewering was elected president elect, but stepped aside when his Nazi record surfaced.

To be fair, not every doctor who strayed from the path was let off the hook. At a specially-convened trial in Nuremberg in 1946, 23 physicians had to answer for their crimes against humanity. But only two of them were internationally recognized scientists, observes Seidelman.

Normally, Seidelman keeps a low profile. But two years ago, he and Howard Israel, an American colleague associated with Columbia University, made headlines when they alleged that the cadavers in the Pernkopf Anatomy "may have been victims of (Nazi) political terror." The accusation appeared in a letter in The Journal of the American Medical Association.

In their sensational letter, which was publicized by the New York Times, Seidelman and Israel made two requests. They asked the University of Vienna to identify the cadavers, and they asked the publisher of the atlas to revise the next edition with background data about Pernkopf and his methods.

The University of Vienna has launched a probe, but the results are still pending. "I'm a pain in the ass to German and Austrian doctors who want to keep this buried," conceded Seidelman. Regarding the second request, he believes that Pernkopf's publisher may stop publishing the English edition of the atlas altogether.

As for the plan to establish a centre for Holocaust and genocide studies, Seidelman suggests that it is still very much of an idea rather than an impending reality. Be that as it may, one of its chief objectives would be to develop a curriculum which could be used by medical schools around the world.

The centre, which would be housed at the University of Toronto's faculty of medicine, is the brainchild of Seidelman, Edward Shorter, a U of T professor specializing in medical history, and Michael Kater, a German-born York University social historian of the Third Reich.

To build what would be the only facility of its kind anywhere, a sum of about $5 million will be required. Seidelman, therefore, is cautious. "For now, we're looking for a smaller amount, $150,000 in seed money, to develop the concept further."

Diaspora Jews can build a 'living bridge' to Israel

By ELI RUBENSTEIN

Guest Voices

With the establishment of the State of Israel in 1948, two millennia of collective Jewish hopes and dreams were brought to fulfilment. The return of the Jewish nation to its ancient land and the rebirth of a language unspoken since the days of the Temple in Jerusalem are developments without precedent in the annals of human history. To some it is nothing short of a Divine miracle. To others it is at least miraculous, a miracle of the human spirit. To all, it is a testament to the ability of a nation to overcome history and geography, hatred and powerlessness, to achieve its most cherished goals.

How do we as Jews living outside of Israel, during this privileged era of Jewish history, relate to this modern day phenomenon?

A minority of Jews are indifferent towards Israel. On the other hand, some Jews are so gripped by the Zionist message they have made aliyah to Israel in order to invest the best of their creative efforts in building the country.

The majority of us, however, find ourselves in the middle of these two poles. We are not ready to leave our families, the culture we are accustomed to or the language we have grown up with, yet we yearn to create a meaningful connection with this unfolding miracle.

Is it hypocritical to assert that a love of Israel is not an all or nothing proposition? Is it a sign of moral inconsistency to involve oneself with the destiny of our ancestral homeland even if we cannot transplant ourselves there? Living where we do, can we not share in the dream of rebuilding Zion without being labeled hypocritical or morally deficient?

I assert that we Diaspora Jews can build a meaningful connection, a "living bridge," between ourselves and the land and people of Israel. How? Let us count the ways: by visiting Israel, by studying in Israel, by volunteering in worthy social projects in Israel, by defending Israel against unfair reporting, by encouraging close relations between Israel and our native countries, by celebrating with Israel during her moments of glory and by crying with Israel during her moments of tragedy.

We participate in the miracle of Israel by contributing to its critical social and humanitarian needs. We support the future of Israel and the Jewish people by helping the over 750,000 Jews who have made aliyah to Israel since 1990 build a new life of freedom in Israel.

In many senses, Theodor Herzl was a prophet. However, his prophecy was not perfect. He did not anticipate the clash between secular and religious Jews, nor did he foresee the strife between the Jews and the indigenous Arab populations. Both matters were unresolved at the time of the onset of the modern Zionist movement and remain unresolved to this day. Finally, Herzl believed that incurable anti-Semitism made Jewish life in the Diaspora unviable. Once Israel was founded, he claimed, all committed Jews would move to Israel, while Jewish life in the Diaspora would wither away.

Truth be told, Jewish life in the Diaspora of the 1990s is astoundingly vibrant. Millions of committed Jews live passionate Jewish lives in North America, Europe and other regions of the world. Assimilation, not anti-Semitism, is Diaspora Jewry's most powerful enemy. Yet, in a twist Herzl could not have imagined, the very presence of Israel serves to strengthen Jewish communities in the Diaspora.

To some, Israel is viewed only as an insurance policy – "If things turn really bad here, I always have a place to go" – or as a source of pride in the achievements of the Jewish people. But more and more, Diaspora Jews are beginning to view Israel as a repository of spiritual values. We travel there to recharge our Jewish souls; we send our children there to learn of their heritage; we read books by Israeli writers, attend artistic performances and lectures by Israeli figures. We insist that all of our major religious denominations have institutions in Israel, and we care deeply about who Israel decides is or is not a Jew. In addition to becoming the population centre of the Jewish people (Israel will soon have the largest number of Jews of any country in the world), Israel is developing into the spiritual centre of the Jewish people, a view supported by Herzl's arch rival Achad Ha'am.

In traditional sources, we read of two Jerusalems: The earthly Jerusalem and the heavenly Jerusalem; the Jerusalem of street and stone and the mythical Jerusalem, the Jerusalem of our hopes and dreams.

Israel also has meaning on two levels. On one level, it is a real country of stunning natural beauty, filled with mystical sites and archeological ruins, modern institutions, big city traffic jams, falafel stands, slightly more aggressive than necessary taxi drivers, black hatted yeshivah bochers and brown sandaled kibbutzniks.

Yet on another level, Israel symbolizes the triumph of hope over despair. Judaism and the rebirth of Israel teach us to never give in to the voices of negativity, cynicism or resignation. Whether it comes to building a state from scratch or overcoming our own personal and often quite difficult challenges, human will and perseverance can carry the day. Im tirtsu ain zo agada – If you will it, it is not (merely) a dream.

As we prepare to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Israel's creation, let us strengthen our connection to Israel, to the land and her people. And let us also remember what made Israel possible: the belief that against the greatest obstacles, hope can overcome despair – if we truly desire it with all our hearts and souls.

Israel fighting the Jewish fight, educator says

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Between the conversion controversy, the budget, whether to withdraw from the West Bank, and the debate over the occupation of southern Lebanon, Israel is "going through absolute hell," says one of the country's leading educators.

But Israel is fighting battles Jews in the Diaspora "are avoiding and hiding from," Avraham Infeld, founder and president of the Melitz Centre for Jewish Zionist Education, said here last week.

One of them is the thorny issue of conversion, currently being weighed by the Ne'eman Commission, which is scheduled to deliver its findings Jan. 30. The one-person commission was struck to find a compromise with Israel's Orthodox religious establishment after the Knesset passed first reading of a bill that would recognize only Orthodox conversions.

Infeld said the commission is facing very complex issues, to which there are no simple answers.

Any decision from the commission is bound to upset some Jews, Infeld told members of UJA Federation's communal workers division.

So tense have become relations between Israel's Orthodox and secular populations that some stores are not only opening on Shabbat, in violation of the law, but are even advertising sales, Infeld said.

"That's why we created a Jewish state, so we could buy things cheap on Shabbat?" he asked.

Adding fuel to the fire are recent statistics showing that the life of an average Israeli is subsidized by the government by about 18 percent, whereas for the Haredim, it's 51 percent.

More and more non-Orthodox Israelis feel that government services for them are being cut in favor of services for the Orthodox, Infeld said.

He said he feels "sorry" for Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, whose government is in danger of collapsing over withdrawal from the West Bank. Four members of the ruling Likud have threatened to quit if Netanyahu gives up any territory, while four others says they will leave — and bring down the government — if he doesn't relinquish at least 10 percent of the region.

Netanyahu had "no choice" but to produce the recent budget he did — which passed in the Knesset — because he had to appease his right-wing and Orthodox coalition partners.

The pressure on the prime minister was so great that "a mathematical work of genius was produced, whereby the budget was increased by $1.5 billion, without increasing it by a penny."

Israelis were "furious" with the budget, and the media had a field day, but Netanyahu "had no choice."

Despite all these problems, Jews everywhere must continue to support Israel because "it's the only Jewish state we've got, and it's fighting the Jewish debate that will affect everybody."

Kosher food drive launched

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A drive to collect non-perishable kosher food items for people who cannot afford them is underway.

The food can be left in bins at Emelio's Food Basics in the Main Exchange Plaza at Steeles and Bathurst and will be transporrted to the kosher food bank at Pride of Israel Synagogue.

The recipients will be identified by the Jewish Family and Child Service, according to Tibor Martinek, a food broker, who is organizing the drive with the assistance of Debbie Goldstein.

Martinek said he will be responsible for transporting the items to the food bank.

Later, the drive will concentrate on non-perishable kosher food for Passover.

GRANT WINNERS FOCUS ON ISRAEL

UJA Federation has awarded close to $100,000 in grants to help members of Toronto's Jewish community capture the spirit and excitement of Israel's 50th anniversary.

This fifth round of Jewish continuity grants offered financial assistance to projects sustaining and strengthening our Jewish heritage.

Since 1996, dozens of Jewish organizations, representing a wide spectrum of beliefs, lifestyles and interests have received more than $400,000 to embark on new intiatives.

Earlier this month, 12 projects chosen from scores of submissions, were awarded between $2,000 and $15,000. All of the winners were asked to submit proposals that would include Israel's 50th anniversary as a central theme.

"It gives us so much joy to help these people carry out their programs because they are so appreciative of the support," says Lorraine Sandler, Chair of UJA Federation's Action Committee for Jewish Continuity. "This round also marks one of the Jewish world's most important milestones."

The following two pages provide a brief overview of the 12 award winning initiatives and the organizations behind them.

Shabbaton for the deaf

For hundreds of Toronto's Jewish deaf, getting in touch with their cultural and religious identities can be tough. But, with help from UJA Federation, the Toronto Jewish Association of the Deaf (TJAD) plans to make it a little easier.

"Many Jews who are deaf often feel left out of the community because they have so few lines of communication and interaction that can link them to Jewish life," explains Dr. Hartley Bressler, who chairs TJAD. Bressler and Alan Cheifetz are planning a Shabbaton weekend retreat this summer, which will feature two deaf rabbis from the U.S. discussing ways for the the deaf to plug in to their Jewishness.

Barrie Cheifetz, Eddy Wiesblatt, Alan Cheifetz, Joely Bernstein and Hartley Bressler.

Cheifetz and Bressler estimate there are 300-400 deaf adult Jews with little Jewish involvement, living in the greater Toronto area.

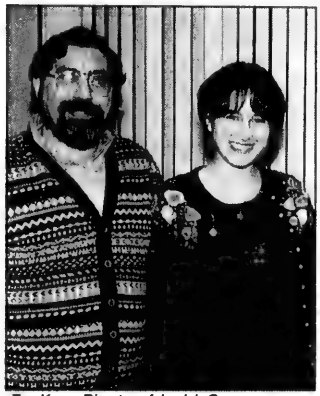
"Something as simple as a Passover Seder may be something they have never experienced," Bressler notes. "Even having a bar mitzva cannot be taken for granted."

"A shabbaton will bring people together under one roof to experience Jewish culture,' adds Bressler, "and it's all possible because of support from UJA Federation.

Students take Israel to art

University students across the city are dipping their brushes, sharpening their sketching pencils and practicing their pirouettes as they pay tribute to Israel on its 50th anniversary.

The fruits of their artistic labours of love will be on display at a special art festival, Israel at 50: Defining Our Identity, March 1 and 2 at the North York Public Library. All mediums of expression, including music, paint, sculpture, drama and dance will feature Israel as the main theme.



Zac Kaye, Director of Jewish Campus Services and Sidura Ludwig, Coordinator of the Student Arts Festival.

Jewish Campus Services (JCS), a UJA Federation beneficiary agency, is organizing the event in an effort to attract students and others with little exposure to Israel.

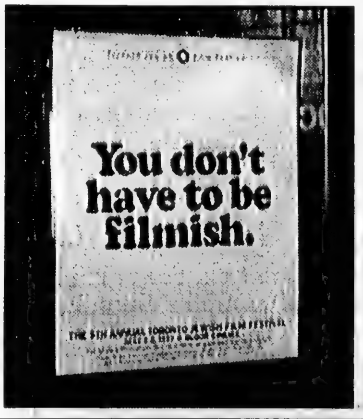
'It's a great way to bring a sense of Jewishness to people in the mainstream community as well as celebrating this special occasion," notes JCS Director Zac Kaye.

Israel on film

The 1998 Toronto Jewish Film Festival, May 7 - 14 at the Bloor Cinema, is putting the spotlight on Israel to mark the Jewish homeland's 50th birthday and to showcase an increasing flow of Israeli film talent.

The annual festival, which has attracted thousands of movie buffs for the last three years, features nearly one third of Israeli produced films and documentaries. This year, festival Director of Development Debra Kwinter hopes to increase the Israeli content and give Israel centre stage.

"Providing Israeli films with a greater profile will help enhance our ties with the country and its people at this time of celebration," notes Kwinter. "The Toronto Jewish Film Festival is thrilled to receive UJA Federation's support and we are proud to continue to work in this area."



BB welcomes Wicks

B'nai Brith is combining a love of sports with a love of Israel to draw a crowd for its special Israel at 50 event.

Young Jewish adults, athletes and professionals from all backgrounds are invited to attend the April 5 program at the Leah Posluns Theatre, featuring entertainers and award-winning author Ben Wicks, who recently wrote Dawn of the Promised Land: the Creation of Israel, a look at the contribution of Canadians to Israel's birth.

Monte Mazin, Chair of B'nai Brith's Israel at 50 event, hopes the evening will encourage young adults to explore their Jewish roots. "This celebration is a great way to generate excitement about becoming more connected to the Jewish community," says Mazin.

"UJA Federation's support has enabled us to come up with an affordable price of admission," he adds. "Hopefully this will mean a large turnout."

In addition to Mazin, Upper Canada Lodge volunteers working on the project are Harry Alexandroff, Bernie Dubinsky, Sally Dubinsky, Judy Gordon, Moe Greenspoon, Bill Grosberg, Bill Pape and Bill Stern.

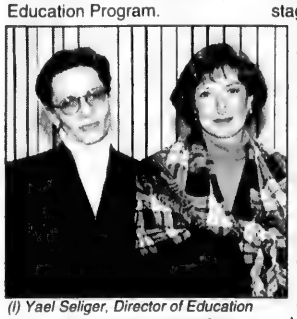
Community Matters

EDUCATION FOR THE COMMUNITY

Israel will be highlighted this spring during phase two of the UJA Federation Board of Jewish Education's Family Education Program.



(l) Yael Seliger, Director of Education Services at the BJE and BJE Chair Shirley Worth.

The program, to promote greater involvement of parents in their childrens' Jewish education, completed its first stage last year when teachers from 20 Toronto area day and supplementary schools underwent extensive training.

"We were incredibly successful in teaching our educators how to teach parents," explains Yael Seliger, Director of Education Services at the BJE. "Now it's time to get everyone else on board."

The BJE expects to attract dozens of volunteers, rabbis, principals and other professionals to the next two sessions, which will focus on integrating Israeli studies into the family education curriculum.

The Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto, is also turning toward family education, by offering special Israel at 50 adult education courses, beginning in March.

Members of CHAT's history department and other experts will be conducting four two-hour sessions on specific events in Jewish history and relate them to the present.

The courses are designed for all interested members of the community as well as CHAT parents and alumni. "We are using our extremely knowledgeable staff and expertise to develop a more educated community," explains project co-ordinator Gary Levine.

Student wake-up call

A group of university students is using its enthusiasm about being Jewish and its attachment to Israel to spark the same feelings among thousands of young peers.

The students are organizing a spring shabbaton, featuring a special concert by Israel's Moshav Band, popular among Canadians and other foreigners studying in Israel. The band, which has already performed in other North American cities for the student Wake Up Tour, will perform music written by the late composer Shlomo Carlebach.

"We hope Carlebach's captivating and inspirational songs will touch others the way they have touched so many of us," explains Amy Warsh, one of the shabbaton's organizers.

"There tends to be too much apathy among Jewish students about their Jewish identity," says Warsh. "This event is a wake-up call for young Jews to reclaim their commitment to and pride in Judaism."

Play examines Israel-Diaspora relations

The Nephesh Theatre Company, known for staging such Jewish works as Children of the Night and Einstein, is bringing a new play to town, which uses comedy to reveal the strong ties binding so many Jews to Israel.

Make Yourself at Home, written by an American who made aliya, examines Israel-Diaspora relations via a romance between an Israeli soldier and a recently arrived immigrant girl. It has already appeared more than 100 times in Israel under director Howard Rypp and will arrive in Toronto this spring for a two week run.

"It's a humorous look at the strong pull Israel has for many of us and the struggles we go through to get there,' explains Gordon Wiseman, co-founder of Nephesh and one of the show's Toronto co-producers.

Wiseman says he and Rypp hope to secure two locations for the play to attract as large an audience as possible.

Singing salute

The Lachan Toronto Jewish Choir is adding two new, specially commissioned works to its repertoire for an upcoming performance showcasing Israel's triumphant history.

"A grant from UJA Federation will enable us to commemorate Israel's 50th anniversary the best way we know how," explains Aaron Hermont, one of the choir's 16 volunteer singers. "Music is something people can relate to easily," he adds. "It's a great medium to share this momentous occasion."

The choir, now in its fourth season, will present three concerts, with the additional possibility of staging smaller performances at schools and synagogues throughout the year. The group also hopes to record a CD and cassette for worldwide distribution.

Let's get together

Seniors won't be left out of Israel at 50 celebrations, thanks to a series of upcoming programs run by Senior Care, a UJA Federation beneficiary agency.

"Many of our elderly often feel isolated from the rest of the community, especially during the holidays," says Arnold Foss, Supervisor of Volunteer Programming at Senior Care, which serves the elderly in more than 4,000 households, through meals on wheels, homecare and other services.

The Let's Get Together Group will include Israeli food, dancing and history presentations.

"These programs will offer opportunities to celebrate Israel's 50th anniversary with the rest of the community," Foss observes.

Mizrachi Israel

Jack Kahn, National President, Mizrachi and Lorraine Sandler, Chair of UJA Federation's Action Committee for Jewish Continuity. Close to twenty Orthodox synagogues are participating in a series of lively discussions about Israel and the issues facing world Jewry, led by rabbis and professors from the United States.

Kids Sing Israel

My bookshelf runneth over

By ZE'EV GLICENSTEIN

Slightly more than two decades ago, you would have been hard-pressed to find even a single book on the subject of Jewish genealogy. These days, however, the field is burgeoning. Not a month goes by without the publication of some new and usually exciting book. Here are three recent and very noteworthy examples.

Published by Ktav, Luboml: The Memorial Book of a Vanished Shtetl ($39.50 US), is a gorgeous volume of 428 large and glossy pages. It makes accessible to English-speaking readers the rich and tragic saga of the Jews of Luboml, known as Libivne in Yiddish, a shtetl located 200 miles southeast of Warsaw, Poland, in territory that is now part of Ukraine.

Like many other Yizkor or memorial books, Luboml was originally published in Yiddish and Hebrew, with almost no English text. However, with the growing number of active genealogists in recent years, there has been a trend towards the communal translation into English of these books, in whole or in part. Luboml is possibly the first such completed effort and a model for others to follow.

The publication was funded by Aaron Ziegelman, a New York real estate tycoon who left Luboml with his mother and sister in 1938. All but 51 of the 3,500 or more Jews left in the town perished in the Holocaust. In conjunction with the memorial book, Ziegelman also funded a travelling museum exhibit on Luboml. "I wanted to preserve the history and memory of our shtetl, which is really every shtetl," he explains.

Researchers who have used the YIVO Institute in New York City know that its large and diverse collection has been traditionally difficult to access because of inadequate finding aids. That situation should be forever changed with the publication of the Guide to the YIVO Archives, compiled and edited by Fruma Mohrer and Marek Web (M.E. Sharpe, 1998).

In a preface, the editors credit "generations of YIVO archivists who faithfully and painstakingly identified and catalogued hundreds of thousands of documents, giving shape and meaning to an inchoate mass of archival records." While much of those records pertain to theatre, music, literature and other cultural endeavors, many pertain to landsleit organizations, personal papers and other items of interest to genealogists.

Though I've visited YIVO many times, I never knew that it held the records of the Ladies and Men's Society of Konin, which was established in New York in 1923. Using the guide, it took me only two minutes to spot that reference to one of my ancestral towns.

Certainly one of the most exciting and awesome new books of this season, and indeed the last two decades, is Miriam Weiner's Jewish Roots in Poland: Pages from the Past and Archival Inventories ($50 US).

Seven years in the making, this is a landmark publication that fulfils three main functions. It is a lavishly illustrated memorial book of the Jews of Poland, a travel guidebook showing major Jewish heritage sites in Poland and a genealogical handbook with the fullest inventory ever compiled of extant Jewish records in the country that for centuries was the centre of the Jewish world.

With the full cooperation of the Polish State Archives, Weiner has enumerated the holdings of Polish archives at the state and town levels, the renowned Jewish Historical Institute in Warsaw, even the concentration camp archives at Majdanek and Auschwitz-Birkenau. The town-by-town listings show the locations of civil records, census records as early as the mid-18th-century, kahal and Jewish hospital records, and army, immigration, land, police, school, tax, voter and other records.

Jewish Roots in Poland is overflowing with photographs, maps and reproductions of antique postcards and archival documents. With this book, Weiner has the potential to become a great popularizer, the Alex Haley of Jewish genealogy. The message seems to be that despite the loss of three million Polish Jews in the Shoah, many diverse records survive as our essential link to a rich and vital past that must not be forgotten.

This is an important book whose appeal should extend far beyond genealogists, historians and Holocaust survivors and their families. For additional information, visit the Web sites [www.rtrfoundation.org] or [www.routestoroots.com].

God In The Classroom:* The Controversial Issue of Religion in Canada's Schools by Lois Sweet (McClelland & Stewart, $29.99).

Lois Sweet is a longtime journalist, popular columnist and film director. In 1995-96, she was awarded an Atkinson Fellowship to research the interplay between religion and education in our multicultural and multi-religious society. She travelled across Canada and interviewed a diversity of students, parents, teachers and educators.

She is convinced that we all face profound spiritual questions and that something is wrong when these questions and religion generally become prohibited subjects in the classroom. She argues that one of the few hopes that we have for a rich and peaceful multicultural future is to know our neighbors. It is quite possible, she maintains to educate about religion without indoctrination.

But politicians are fearful. Every government in Ontario since Bill Davis' Conservative government in 1984 has promised to examine the issue of school funding for members of religious minorities (the Liberals under David Peterson, the NDPs under Bob Rae, and now the Conservatives again, under Mike Harris). And thus far, every government has managed to sidestep it.

The British North America Act of 1867 guarantees a separate school system for Catholics. But she argues that back then, "the majority of people in Quebec and Ontario were either Protestant or Catholic. Guaranteeing publicly funded separate schools for Protestants in Montreal and Quebec City and for Catholics in Ontario was considered a way to protect minority rights. If that was the original intention, then in order to continue to be just and equitable, funding should be extended to the schools of the religious minorities that exist in Ontario today."

Religion in schools explored

The author visited Jewish schools in Edmonton, Ottawa and Toronto. She commends a program in Alberta that allows a Jewish school in Edmonton – open to students of all denominations – to receive public funding. The school operates successfully, receives the benefits of a public board, and is able to maintain its Jewish program of studies.

In Toronto, a mother who sends her daughter to a Hebrew day school explained, "If people like me abandon the public system and don't hold it accountable, then it's in danger. But I have to do right by my child. I see her education as essential to the survival of my people."

A student who attended the Hillel Academy in Ottawa complained, "We had no sex education, no information about AIDS prevention, or abortion, and no anti-drug campaigns. At Hillel, it's just assumed you don't do those things. But it's a problem, because students don't get sex education from the school and they don't get much from the home."

TV on your computer

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

Over the past couple of weeks, we've figured out how to turn our computers into fancy radios that let us listen in to the latest programming from Israel (using the free RealPlayer program available from [http://www.real.com/products/player/download_player.html].) Today, we look at how to go a step further and watch Israeli TV on your computer.

The premier site for television (and radio) from Israel is Artificia [http://www.artificia.com/]. Artificia is a large site that provides newscasts and other programming from the Israel Broadcasting Authority.

Unlike other sites, Artificia does charge a fee to access some of its site. While Super Users get the complete television, free users get only the first few minutes. Regardless, you must register in order to receive a password to access Artificia [https://www.netvision.net.il/artificia/su_reg.htm].

Here's what you can watch: everything from Mabat LaChadashot, the Hebrew nightly news and the English journal, to a special about Israeli prisoners of war and coverage of Yitzhak Rabin's funeral and more [http://www.artificia.com/html/news/files/newsvid.cgi].

And the quality? Don't throw away your television yet. The video signal can be quite slow and jerky. And sometimes the same image will stay on screen for several seconds. But I still find it amazing that you can watch these shows on your computer at all. And the technology is constantly improving.

Most of these clips use the free RealPlayer program. However, some of the clips need VocalTec Player (a free Israeli product) [http://www.vocaltec.com/iwave.htm#download]. You can compare RealPlayer and VocalTec and choose the one with the better results.

By the way, the people at Artificia seem to be very proud of their service. So proud that they've included a brief video clip of a fellow named Bill Gates who says he knows several people who listen to Israel via the Internet [http://www.artificia.com/html/gates.html].

There's no online programming at this site, but you may be interested in taking a look at Israeli Educational Television's Hebrew language Web page [http://www.education.gov.il/ietv/home.htm]. Best known abroad for Rehov Sumsum, the Hebrew-language version of Sesame Street, Educational TV has more recently been working on a joint Israeli/Palestinian version of the popular children's show [http://www.amin.org/pages/dkuttab/sesame.htm].

You can find more links to Israel's electronic media at The (almost) Complete Guide to WWW in Israel [http://www.math.technion.ac.il/~nyh/israel/english/68.html], JCNavigate [http://www.jcn18.com/jhot7.htm#a] and Maven [http://www.maven.co.il/subjects/idx197.htm].

I started off this series of articles on electronic media on the Internet by acknowledging the real pioneers of international communication – fans of short wave radio. If you prefer to listen to Israel the old fashioned way, you can find Kol Israel's most recent short wave broadcast schedule at [http://bet.netvision.net.il/bett.html]. And if you are more interested in two-way radio communication, check out these pages [http://ayalon.eng.tau.ac.il/~oded/iarc-files/home_page.htm] and [http://hamradio.iarc.org/main.html]. They're maintained by The Israel Amateur Radio Club. (I guess you can't call it ham radio in Israel.)

Benyamin wrote me to tell me he enjoys the People of the Book area of the Torah from Dixie site in Atlanta [http://www.tfdixie.com/pbook.htm].

It offers short bibliographies of some of the less well known personalities from the Torah like Asnat, the daughter of Dinah and the wife of Joseph, or Serach, Ezra, Nimrod and Yocheved.

The matter of the holy days of various religions and how they are to be treated by schools is controversial. Sweet feels that "Accommodating the holy days of Canada's recognized religious groups within public education – both through school closings where numbers warrant and by using them as points of discussion – could be a small, but necessary step to increase understanding of our religious diversity."

The author, fair-minded, lucid and courageous, cares deeply about how we will live and understand one another in Canada's tomorrow. She hopes that it will be possible for all of our children – Buddhists, Muslims, Sikhs, Hindus, Christians, Jews, secular humanists, and so on – to play together in the school yard and to study together in the classroom, without fear of either religious compromises or religious harassment. "Accommodating religious differences within a public system through teaching about it, acknowledging and honoring holy days, and respecting religious symbols are important steps towards mutual understanding, healthy equality, and integration."

BJE director takes stock

By LEILA SPEISMAN
Staff Reporter

When Rabbi Jeremiah Unterman arrived in Toronto last summer to take up his new position as director of the Board of Jewish Education (BJE), his first impression, he said, was that "the system is just fantastic.

"Over 10,000 children are in day schools, probably per capita the highest ratio in North America. It is a phenomenal achievement."

Even if one considers that "too many are not in the [Jewish educational] system, 65 per cent receive some Jewish education."

One fact that Rabbi Unterman said he found interesting was the large number of Conservative Jewish students in the day schools, not just at United Synagogue Day Schools, as one might expect, but at Leo Baeck, Bialik, Associated and CHAT.

"This is an example of how important Jewish education is in the community," Rabbi Unterman commented, explaining that people are looking for the most appropriate educational experience, rather than blindly following ideology.

He gave The CJN current statistics: 10,293 children are enrolled in day schools, indicating a rise in day school and high school enrolment, but there is also a drop in preschool numbers, which, the rabbi posited, may be a result of demographic changes; 6,191 are enrolled in supplementary schools, which shows a drop of four per cent, although it is the same number as in 1992.

Rabbi Unterman said he was also impressed by the "conscious decision" of the federation to support as many needy families as possible to receive a Jewish education.

"It supports more children's education per capita than any other [federation]," Rabbi Unterman said, citing the statistic that 48½ percent of allocations go to Jewish education, twice the norm in North America. And that doesn't count other funds, such as continuity grants and monies for other causes that filter down to the educational system.

The rabbi has statistics on subsidies, too. "Subsidies amounted to $6,686,659, almost 2,600 students, about 30 per cent of the student body." (These figures are only for grades 1 to OAC. Preschool students are not eligible for these subsidies.)

In spite of these impressive findings, as Rabbi Unterman put it, "only G-d doesn't have to improve."

One of his interests is in furthering family education. "You often have the situation," he said, where the children are educated beyond the parents' level."

Jewish education, he said, does not happen only in formal settings. Parents and children should have the opportunity to have Jewish experiences together, he suggested, not just studying.

"This has really taken off in the Reform and Conservative movements," he said, where a supplementary school works in conjunction with the congregation in which it is located. Family education thus becomes a way to integrate the school more closely with the congregation.

Rabbi Unterman is also a firm supporter of special education.

"Zareinu and She'arim are wonderful schools for a community to have – they speak to the praise of a community that created those schools."

However, both are in desperate need of better facilities.

"Considering the excellent work they are doing with disabled children, and the remarkable generosity of people here, I have every hope that some individual will step forward with significant funding to relieve the distress in which they find themselves," he said diplomatically and somewhat optimistically.

On the other hand, "I also believe that wherever possible, children with learning disabilities should be mainstreamed within the Jewish school system, even if separate classes must sometimes be created for them."

He said the BJE is planning to hire two special needs consultants. One will design and deliver workshops and provide consultations to Jewish school teachers and to the preschool and early grade level staff for early identification of special needs. The consultant will develop curricula and teaching strategies, work with the school administrations and develop a unified protocol with Jewish Family & Child Service and Jewish Vocational Services.

According to their needs

The Talmud enjoins us to educate every child according to his (or her) particular needs. It is only recently that the educational system has begun to catch up with that philosophy.

Or has it?

This education supplement is focusing on services to those students who need more than the regular classroom has to offer. We examine such highly specialized facilities as Zareinu and She'arim, as well as what is being offered in mainstream schools.

A precious resource to the Jewish community is the gifted child, who has so much potential that can be tapped. But is the day school system equipped to challenge those children? For the first time in our education supplement, an article shines a bright – and rather disturbing – light on that often neglected subject.

Toronto is blessed with a fine educational system, full of innovative and exciting people and programs. This supplement celebrates both its achievements and its strivings. L.S.

EDUCATION

Funding for Jewish education has changed

By BERNARD SHOUB
Special to The CJN

The Toronto Jewish community has always treated the funding of Jewish education as a top priority in budgeting for its local needs.

In 1970, the educational budget of the United Jewish Welfare Fund was in excess of 50 percent of the total annual budget for local allocations. The current UJA Federation local budget of $15.75 million allocates $7.5 million or 47.8 percent of its total budget to Jewish education.

In 1971, the United Jewish Welfare Fund established a committee to study, among other things, funding of Jewish Education. Sidney Midanik was the chair. The following year, Donald Carr was appointed co-chair.

The committee issued its report in November 1975.

At that time the community provided funds to four Hebrew day schools – Associated, Bialik, Eitz Chaim and United Synagogue (USDS) – on a deficit basis. The per capita costs of the schools ranged from $1,450 per student to $1,771 for the 1976-77 school year, but the full fee for the 1975-76 school year was $1,250.

Starting with the school year 1975-76 , the community required schools to begin bringing the full tuition fee to the level of the full per capita operating cost.

Since then those schools' per capita costs have quadrupled, while the full fees have increased almost six times.

In April 1976, the Board of Jewish Education (BJE), formed an implementation committee to examine various funding possibilities. It recommended changing the funding process from a deficit basis to that of a formula basis, which involved grouping expenditures by the schools into categories.

It was agreed that the community would regard the four schools' individual situations at a given point in time to establish a base for future funding. Each of the four schools came into the formula process with different capital costs, different class sizes and different teacher profiles.

The various expenditures were set out in three areas: Category 1 included salaries and affiliated benefits; Category 2 covered normal operating costs, such as classroom supplies, office supplies, maintenance and energy; Category 3 maintained a line-by-line budgeting review that allowed for uncontrollable expenses, new programs and inequities in the funding system.

The formula was introduced in the 1978-79 school year and worked quite well for the next 10 years.

In the early 1990s, however, the funds collected by the United Jewish Appeal levelled off and eventually shrank. The community had to cut back on funding to all its recipient agencies and ultimately put a cap on the global amount of funds available for Jewish education. As a result, the community currently provides approximately 75 cents on the dollar for shortfalls for each of the assisted families within our formula funded schools.

Strictly speaking, the community does not fund schools. Rather it funds families, based on their financial need. A set of income guidelines was prepared for use by each school's tuition assistance committee to help them establish a fair tuition for a particular family.

It is important to understand that the primary responsibility for funding the Jewish education of a child remains with the family, but no family should be deprived of a Jewish education because of an inability to pay the full tuition at the school of its choice.

Thus, payment for the education of the assisted families is now a three-way partnership; namely, the family, who are primary payers, the community and the school.

Currently 61.1 percent of families attending the 13 funded schools pay the full fee, while 38.9 percent receive some form of assistance from the community and the school. The percentage of assisted children at individual schools ranges from 10 percent to 88 percent of the enrollment, depending on the school.

Community provides $6.1 million for assisted families

All schools use similar application forms for assisted families. Families are asked to provide income tax information and to report on their equity position with regard to housing and business.

The funding provided by the community for assisted families is restricted to grades 1 to 13. Most schools independently provide assistance for needy families at the preschool level as well.

The Toronto Jewish community currently provides $6.1 million for assisted families at our various funded day schools. There are six elementary "formula" schools, including Associated, Bialik, Eitz Chaim, Leo Baeck, Netivot HaTorah and USDS. She'arim, an elementary school for children with learning disabilities, receives funding on the basis of the average funding provided for the six formula schools. Or Haemet is currently identified as a grant school, although a committee is working to provide funding for Or Haemet on a formula basis. CHAT is a formula high school. The four other funded high schools – Beth Jacob, Ner Israel, Or Chaim and Ulpanat Orot – receive funding on the basis of the average operating allocation at CHAT. CHAT receives additional funding for community programs such as new stream, special needs and capital rental.

In our community, schools commonly follow an open enrolment policy. They do not discriminate between full fee payers and assisted families in accepting children. By contrast, the practice in the United States has long been that a school will likely set aside a given budgeted amount of money for assisted families, regardless of the number of families actually applying for assistance to enable their children to attend school.

In 1982, the community established a shared tuition policy which treats a financially assisted family having children at two or more affiliated schools as a single family for guideline purposes in determining tuition. As a result, some non-funded schools, such as Beth Jacob Elementary and Yesodei Hatorah, have received indirect funding because they have families with children at funded schools.

The Board of Jewish Education is reviewing the funding formula and looking at possible alternatives. To help alleviate the tuition burdens upon the families and upon the schools, we have several long-term hopes for the funding of Jewish education, including making the United Jewish Appeal campaign as successful as possible; helping the Legacy Campaign increase its base to establish endowment funds for various Jewish schools; and lobbying to obtain provincial funding for our various day schools.

Or Haemet gets spacious new home

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Or Haemet Sephardic School has a new home. The Orthodox day school recently moved from the basement classrooms of Adath Israel Synagogue to the new Sephardic Kehila Centre in Thornhill.

During a tour of the centre – a $16-million structure modelled after the Andalusian and Moorish style synagogues of Spain – Or Haemet's general studies principal Sarah Wasserman told The CJN the move to the spacious state of the art facility was "quite a leap."

She said when she walks around the school she "can't believe it's real after being in a basement for 18 years. We went from a concrete parking lot to a green park. The students were at Adath Israel for 18 years where there was no gym…no facilities."

The new premises include a fully equipped gym and computer lab and a swimming pool. Classrooms are spread over three floors and for special occasions, the school has use of the ornate banquet hall.

People were thrilled with the move, but some parents were worried that the school "might lose the family atmosphere," Wasserman said.

Or Haemet, affiliated with the Jewish Board of Education, goes from Junior Kindergarten to Grade 8 and has approximately 300 students. The boys and girls are in separate classes by age 10 and sometimes younger where numbers permit; so the classes become quite small in the upper years, she said. "There's a lot of individualized attention."

Some 1,500 families or approximately 7,000 people are affiliated with the Sephardi community. While most of the children at Or Haemet come from that community, there are also Ashkenazi students at the school.

The Sephardi culture is rich and the community does not want the children to lose their identity. Spending time in the Andalusian/Moorish surroundings helps to reenforce the Sephardi heritage, Wasserman said. "They get the feel from the building. They understand where they came from."

Some of the rituals and customs are different in the Sephardi and Ashkenazi traditions, said Rabbi Mordechai Sevy, Or Haemet's educational director. But, he added, "there are more similarities than differences. The words are the same. The tunes are different."

The general studies curriculum follows the guidelines set out by the Ministry of Education, Wasserman said. "We're bound by the same curriculum as all schools in the province. Any day school enriches the curriculum."

She said Or Haemet has a more intensive French program than other day schools: French begins in Grade 1 and is offered every day except Friday.

"By the time the students finish Grade 8 they will have had 1,000 hours of French."

Or Haemet also has a junior Grade 1 program for 5-year-olds who in other programs would be enrolled in senior kindergarten (SK). Reading and writing starts as early as SK, which is made up of 4- and 5-year olds, Rabbi Sevy said.

Wasserman stressed that Judaic and general studies are well-integrated. "We make sure there's a lot of overlap."

The students begin to learn the siddur at the end of Grade 1 and talmudic studies begin in Grade 5, she said. The primary goal of the Judaic program is to prepare the students for secondary schools such as Or Chaim and Ner Israel or Ulpanat Orot Girls High School.

The school day is a long one to accommodate the academic demands, said Wasserman. "We've always had longer hours because of the amount of French and general studies. The average day for students in grades 5 through 8 is approximately nine hours, while the lower grades have eight-hour days, with kindergarten students ending a half an hour earlier.

Boys in grades 7 and 8 come in for 2½ hours on Sunday morning for an enriched program.

On the day of this visit, Lilly Arosh, 14, a student at Ulpana, was helping out in the kindergarten. It's not unusual to get visits from the school alumnae, Wasserman said.

"We're looking to be more than a school. Or Haemet is the centre of the Sephardi community."

Students hit the books in Or Haemet's new facility.

TORONTO FRENCH SCHOOL

At Toronto French School, one of the largest independent schools in Canada, we offer students of diverse backgrounds the opportunity to develop their intellectual, physical and creative potential.

Challenging and Caring Renowned for academic excellence, we are bilingual, coeducational, independent and non-denominational. Students feel secure in our close-knit atmosphere, and thrive in our rigorous, multilingual academic environment.

Comprehensive Curriculum Our youngest students join us at age three, in our Pre-Kindergarten programme, and complete their education in a multi-lingual environment. Extended daycare available.

International The French Ministry of Education recognizes our high standards. Our students complete an International Baccalaureate, a challenging course of study that provides graduates with an educational passport to the best universities around the globe. More than half of our 1997 graduates completed the IB in French.

Intro programmes An intensive language programme is available up to Grade 7 for students with no previous exposure to French.

If you agree that a challenging curriculum in a caring environment is a great foundation for tomorrow's leaders, explore the Toronto French School alternative. We can make a world of difference in your child's education.

Art programs capture Jewish students' attention

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

The art room at the Toronto Heschel School is so quiet you would think it was empty. But the room is full of children absorbed in an art project.

On this day, the Grade 2 class is drawing gardens, using pastels that are dipped in water to give the effect of paint. The children are studying a unit on gardens in their general and Judaic studies programs in preparation for Tu b'Shvat, the holiday of trees.

Art teacher Judy Lightman stresses that at the Heschel School, now in its second year, art is completely integrated into the curriculum to reinforce ideas and concepts being taught. She said she plans to do an origami garden with the Grade 2 class next.

Origami, the Japanese art of paper folding, cultivates a multitude of learning skills, Lightman says. "This enriching art form fosters the development of cognitive functions and manipulative skills."

She said there is wide use of origami at all grade levels at Heschel – the school now goes from Junior Kindergarten to Grade 4. In math, it can be used to teach measurement, estimation, geometry or simple counting.

Lightman is also credited with starting the integrated art program at the Dr. Abraham Shore Academy, She'arim Hebrew Day School, a Jewish day school for students with learning disabilities. The integrated art program is now taught by art specialist Sharona Reubeni-Bookbinder.

She'arim principal Kathy Manoim says that art brings the curriculum to life in an enjoyable way. She says that one class learning about Canada created a map in art class while another group studying a unit on Shabbat made a Shabbat table.

She'arim also offers art therapy to children who need help expressing their emotions, Manoim says. Shelley Allen, the art therapist, works with children on a one-to-one basis.

Some students with learning disabilities have difficulty expressing their feelings, and benefit from art therapy, Manoim explains. She adds that art therapy can also foster self-esteem which is an important focus of the entire program at She'arim.

Art taught at the high school level is also integrated into the general curriculum. Jim Thornton, art instructor at Ner Israel Yeshiva, Yeshivat Or Chaim and Ulpanat Orot Girl's School, stresses that art is compulsory for all Grade 9 students.

At these schools, the art courses focus on teaching specific studio skills such as design and composition, using a variety of media.

Previously head of the Gallery School at the Art Gallery of Ontario, the former university art professor says he was asked to design an art program at Ner Israel for Grade 10 that would satisfy the ministry requirements for grades 9 through OAC.

Thornton says his goal was to demonstrate to the students that visual arts can be used to "investigate themselves in relationship to the universe and the world, as [much as] science or any other academic subject."

If they are doing a unit on perspective, for instance, he might discuss what happened during the Renaissance when the study of perspective emerged, and perhaps make other connections to that period of history, or he might compare critical awareness in art to other critical processes. He says the students learn "that art is not a sandbox activity and that it's connected to broader academic pursuits."

Four years ago, the Grade 10 students at Or Chaim produced six plaster casts depicting Torah narratives that are permanently installed in the Torah Centre of the school.

Currently the Grade 9 students are working on four painted murals that will also be on permanent display.

Thornton says he wants to get the students' work exhibited in venues such as senior citizens homes and communal buildings.

The art program at Bnei Akiva Schools was established by Gloria Fuerstenberg. At the time it was a unique program, she says.

"It was the first time art became part of the core curriculum of a Jewish Orthodox high school."

She describes the program as a combination of studio art and the history of art design. Many of the students who study art as an elective in the upper years go on to careers in related fields such as art therapy, art education or interior design, Fuerstenberg says.

The program is unique in that it offers the whole range of studio art courses such as drawing, painting, print-making, sculpture and ceramics, she says, pointing out that the studio is well equipped and that the art program is well supported by the school.

In 1974, the school adminstration recognized that the study of "art develops the mind in a way that no other subject could" and contributes to the development of "a well-rounded individual," she notes.

BJE aims to keep special needs children in system

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

It is essential for children with special needs and abilities to be kept within the Jewish school system, says the executive director of the Jewish Board of Education (BJE).

"If we feel that Jewish education is of value, then it is of value to all children," says Rabbi Jeremiah Unterman.

With that in mind, says Unterman, the BJE is planning on hiring a consultant who, among other things, will develop appropriate teaching strategies for special needs children, particularly in areas of Hebrew and Judaica.

This consultant will work with administrators to analyse schools' needs, and will also work with Jewish Vocational Services (JVS) and Jewish Family & Child Service to develop protocol on dealing with specific issues, says Rabbi Unterman.

Hebrew school teachers must learn to identify special needs students as early as possible, he says. "The sooner we can help these students, the less chance of problems in later years."

Nava Jakubovicz of JVS says that her agency provides psycho-educational consultation and remediation services to various Hebrew schools. "When a student is having problems, either academically or socially, the school or the parents contact us. Schools do have tutors, but the bulk of the remediation is provided by JVS."

Remediation specialists, she says, work directly with students, who learn how to build on their strengths and develop new learning strategies.

"There is a range of problems, such as adjusting to the day school program or dealing with learning problems in children with no disabilities. We assess the students with their parents and discuss the various options open to them,"says Jakubovicz.

Many times, once an assessment has been made, the school can develop a better educational plan. "Our purpose is to help parents better understand their children, she says."

Rabbi Aaron Levine, Hebrew principal of the boys' division of Eitz Chaim Hebrew Day Schools, says that his school uses JVS's services for remedial work in the secular studies program. "We have also hired Nechama Matzen who works in the Hebrew department, doing testing and observing students."

On top of the JVS team, he says, there are assistants who take certain students out of Hebrew and general studies classes to provide remediation, and who try and build students' learning skills.

"We have on-going meetings with parents and we also meet with outside professionals, if need be, to come up with an action plan. We do our best to try and help all students stay at our school."

If necessary, says Rabbi Levine, the school may modify the program of certain students so that they are not responsible for all subjects. "We reduce their load and do not burden them with excessive testing. This way, they can concentrate fully on the subjects they are taking."

> 'We concentrate on the process, rather than the result'

Sometimes, learning problems are a result of emotional issues. JF&CS, therefore, has a social work program managed by Beth Feffer that sends professionals to designated schools each week. "We provide whatever services the school needs, whether it be meeting with the family, talking to a student or discussing issues with the teacher. Sometimes, helping a child get along with his peers, or work through problems he may have at home, helps him to focus on his learning."

Kathy Manoim, principal of Dr. Abraham Shore Academy, She'arim Hebrew Day School, a school for children with learning disabilities, says many students come to her school after being tested by JVS.

"Often it is found that these students show a gap between their potential and where they are functioning. All these children, who are of average to above average intelligence, have specific strengths and weaknesses."

She'arim students, she says, take part in an intensive program centred around their learning needs. "We incorporate social skills, give emotional support, and teach academic, cognitive skills and organizational skills. To this end, we use a cognitive skills program developed by Reuven Feuerstein, which is aimed at developing more flexible learning skills."

The focus of the school, says Manoim, is to teach children how to learn. "We concentrate on the process, rather than the result."

The earlier a child comes to the school, the better it is, she says. "Our goal is to have them back in the mainstream schools, and the younger they come to us, the quicker they may get back to their school. Some children, of course, stay with us until Grade 8 and then even go on to a special program at CHAT. There, they are put in a special class but are also integrated into regular CHAT classes. Most of our students who go on to CHAT have been completely mainstreamed by Grade 11."

The enrolment at She'arim, she says, is at an all-time high. "Unfortunately, however, when I think that there are about 10,000 students in the day school system, and that normally, five to 10 percent of children have learning disabilities, I wonder where are those hundreds of students who may need us. Often, children are referred to us when they become disruptive in class. Many students sit quietly at the back of the room and do not get their needs heard."

Jewish schools must meet gifted children's needs

By JANICE ROTMAN
Special to The CJN

The Jews have always admired, indeed venerated the superior scholar. How ironic, then, that attending a Jewish day school in Toronto can be a real problem for the academically gifted child.

Opinion

Who are the gifted children? Represented by perhaps five to 10 percent of our Jewish day school student population, they are often precocious and learn quickly. While they have special learning abilities in particular subjects, such as math, science or English, they are equally likely to have such abilities in all areas or learning *dis*abilities in some.

Psychological profiles might show a 12-year-old child, for example, at the academic level of an average young adult, with physical abilities at or below age level and the emotional capabilities of an average 10 to 12-year-old.

Tested intellectually in the top two to five percentile of children their age, gifted children think, learn and retain information very differently from their peers. Gifted children are different and special, and their needs are different and special.

Why are these needs not being met in our Jewish day schools?

Money. Or the lack of it. So say principals, teachers and officials from the Board of Jewish Education (BJE) when asked by frustrated parents of gifted kids. Chronically underfunded, the BJE and its affiliate schools have limited resources, financial and human, to devote to its students with any special needs. Still, while various solutions to the problems of children with learning difficulties are now being offered, gifted learners' special needs are generally not recognized and are very rarely accommodated.

So say the parents of six gifted children from several Jewish day schools representing the spectrum of Orthodox to Reform, elementary to high school, with whom I have spoken. All of these parents, who have asked not to be identified, have chosen to remove their children from the Jewish day school system in favor of secular gifted programs, supplementing their Jewish studies through the use of tutors. In every case, the decision to remove the gifted student was made after lengthy and often heartbreaking attempts to make the child "fit" into one or more of our day schools.

What's happened to these kids follows a fairly consistent pattern. Typically the otherwise reasonably well-adjusted child has at some point become bored with school.

Most have become resentful at always being the teacher's helper, but never the ones given the teacher's attention because their grades were usually good. In each case, the child's behavior changed and they began either acting out or withdrawing. Self-esteem plummeted. No one likes to be different, lonely, ostracized by students who can't speak on their level and left alone by teachers with whom they might be comfortable conversing but who have no time or training to stimulate them.

In each of the six sample cases, attempts to bring in special programs or tutors, or to get assistance from the school administration or the BJE failed to alleviate the student's distress. Reluctantly, these parents each separately came to a decision to remove their children from the Jewish day school system.

Some parents of gifted children still attending Jewish day schools in Toronto continue to try to help their children to stay happy within a system that, at the same time nurtures their Jewish community life and ignores their unhappiness at being understimulated and/or unrecognized. Some bring in programs or teachers from outside, with mixed results. Some try to supplement their children's education outside of school hours. For those children who do not view their extracurricular studies as a punishment for being smart, this can offer a partial solution, though it doesn't deal with their boredom during the school day.

Having a truly gifted child skip a grade, as is done in a number of schools, simply doesn't solve the problem if the youngster is mentally advanced far beyond the next grade but emotionally below or at his own age level. Many parents reject this option.

So what do we do as a community about these children with special needs?

Might we consider trying to accommodate them, perhaps within a context such as She'arim, our day school for children with learning disabilities. What about a resource centre at the BJE for teachers faced with especially precocious kids? Perhaps gifted classes might be offered at only one of the day schools as a catchment school for all of the others.

Certainly there must be some way of keeping our gifted Jewish students content in Jewish day schools where they can absorb their Yiddishkeit along with their other stimulating studies. There will probably be an increased cost for any adequate solution, but can we really afford to continue losing many of our gifted kids to the secular school system? And for those who remain within the system, can we risk turning gifted kids off the many positive Jewish values they learn in their Jewish school because we bore or anger them while ignoring their needs?

The BJE has established a committee, chaired by Dr. Lucy Cohen, educational director at the United Synagogue Day School, to look into and attempt to deal with the special needs of gifted children in the day school system.

Zareinu provides education, therapy for special needs kids

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Thanks to the Zareinu Education Centre, children with special needs, ages one month to 11 years, can be provided with education and therapy in a caring, Jewish environment.

Founded in 1988 by a group of Toronto Jewish families, Zareinu, located at 4700 Bathurst St., north of Sheppard Avenue, serves children with a wide range of special needs including cerebral palsy, Down syndrome, autism, learning disabilities, attention disorders and other neurological impairments.

Carol Goldman, co-principal along with Marion Goldmintz, says that because some of the children are non-verbal, the school has developed a concept which involves one-to-one therapeutic programming. "For a child who cannot express even the most basic needs, such as hunger, thirst or fear, this total communication class gives children an opportunity to improve their quality of life."

Another Zareinu program, the infant intervention group, is a "hugely successful program that serves children from one month to two years of age. The multi-disciplinary team of therapists and teachers has designed individualized programs that have helped even the most challenged infants," says Goldman.

The preschool and elementary school programs are designed for the specific learning needs of each child, she says, and teachers and therapists work together with children and their families to teach children life skills and improve their learning strategies. "Many of our children are able to successfully integrate in full-time or part-time classroom settings upon leaving the program.

"The goal for many of our children is for them to be able to enter the school system with assistance, if need be, and become valued members of our community. Our staff has led workshops with children and consulted to teachers and administrations through the integration program. We are working toward the creation of a designated classroom for our slower learning population within the Hebrew day school system."

"We understand the hardships faced by many of the families of children with special needs," Goldman says. "Therefore, support and outreach programs have been developed to assist families in their homes with the physical barriers and emotional stresses that they face. The financial burden of caring for a disabled child adds to the hardship faced by families at Zareinu. We try to support families in every way we can to ensure the best education and care possible for their children."

The Hebrew day school system, says Goldman, cannot yet accommodate the needs of children at Zareinu and the public school system does not provide the opportunity for Jewish children to identify with their culture.

"Zareinu allows children to learn according to their needs while they benefit from the nurturing of a culturally sensitive setting. For some children, education that includes understanding of their Jewish heritage opens windows to learning and belonging in our community."

Zareinu receives no provincial or federal funding, Goldman stresses . Funding is "crucial to the implementation of all our programs. Recent cutbacks have sent even more desperate families to our doors. It costs Zareinu $20,000 each year per child to meet their needs educationally and therapeutically. Tuition is set at $10,000 annually and most of our families pay less than half of this fee. No child has ever been turned away because a family is unable to pay."

A major fundraiser initiated by the school is Zareinu dollars, certificates purchased dollar for dollar in denominations of 10s, 20s and 50s. The dollars can be used to purchase items from participating merchants at no extra cost to the consumer. Stores participating in the program donate a percentage to the school.

Currently there are about 100 stores and services that accept Zareinu dollars including grocery stores, butchers, bakeries, fruit stores and kosher restaurants.

BJE's new director

This employee will also serve as a clearing house for questions about options for children with special needs by creating a knowledge base of formal and informal services for Jewish special needs children, to be shared with parents, schools and agencies.

A second person will act as a liaison with the BJE special education committee and with special needs groups.

Jewish education, he said, is "tikkun olam" – to fulfil G-d's mission for Jews in this world to create a moral society. To this end, "the educational system must be open to all Jews, of every type and ability."

There are a number of challenges which Rabbi Unterman insists cannot be ignored. For instance, "75 per cent of Jewish high school students get no Jewish education whatsoever. We can't sit back and let that continue."

Also, he said, "for those parents who send their children to supplementary schools, we need to create a chain of elements that will result in raising Jewish children to Jewish commitment."

Family education is part of this, he said, as well as youth groups, Shabbatonim, quality Jewish camps, and quality ("stressing the quality") organized teen tours of Israel. These will all help to create an environment leading to a stronger Jewish community, Rabbi Unterman said.

He also worries about the drop in numbers attending supplementary schools, suggesting it may be due to "the pull of assimilation."

Rabbi Unterman said his greatest fear is that Canada will repeat the mistakes of the Jewish community in the United States.

"The lack of attention to Jewish education went on for too long in too many segments of the Jewish community. Now, some say that Canada is made up of more recent immigrants, with a higher fealty to Jewish learning. But that is where the U.S. was 25 years ago.

"We must ensure that there is enough support so that the educational system will grow stronger."

COMMUNITY HEBREW ACADEMY OF TORONTO

C.H.A.T. is a co-educational Jewish high school offering excellent Judaic and General Studies programs.

C.H.A.T. students are drawn from a wide range of backgrounds. Some are from public schools, and we provide them with a specially designed curriculum in Hebrew language and Judaica.

C.H.A.T. fosters an atmosphere of enquiry and intellectual stimulation, while providing outlets for the students' emotional and social growth.

C.H.A.T.'s extra-curricular activities motivate students to acquire the participatory and leadership skills necessary to become vital members of the Jewish community.

C.H.A.T. promotes a spirit of K'lal Yisrael, loyalty to the Jewish heritage and to the Jewish people.

C.H.A.T. graduates - more than 98% of them - go on to post-secondary education. Many attend yeshivot and universities in Israel.

CHAT to get new site to accommodate growth

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

CHAT students relaxing in lunch room.

Each year, the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT) day school continues to grow in numbers and in new and innovative educational programs and communal projects.

CHAT is a coeducational Jewish high school, located on Wilmington Avenue in north Toronto. The school provides an education in Judaic and general studies for students from all backgrounds in the Jewish community.

Rabbi Howard Sacknovitz, director of guidance services, who describes the school as "a warm environment with a caring staff and a family feeling," believes that when observant and secular students study together, they learn from each other and learn to respect each other's differences.

"All the students feel comfortable in an atmosphere that challenges them to explore their Jewishness and urges them to grow in their own directions," Rabbi Sacknovitz says.

Rabbi Marvin Pachino says that when he came to the school as headmaster 19 years ago, there were 229 students. Today, there are more than that in Grade 9. This year, there are 762 students enrolled at CHAT and the projection is that there will be more than 800 next year.

"What has been most satisfying is the sense of camaraderie and fellowship that exists within the student body and the faculty," says Rabbi Pachino. "It is also gratifying that so many of our students go on to university and post-university and that so many are involved in Jewish communal affairs."

To accommodate the growing school population, says Norman Grill, president of CHAT, the school will start construction of a new building on the grounds of the Bathurst Jewish Centre some time in 1998.

To kick off a building campaign that will commence in the near future, the school has received two major donations from the Anne and Max Tanenbaum Foundation and the Ghert Family Foundation.

The school has initiated a number of new programs, including educational opportunities for students who have special education needs.

"Our objective is to mainstream them as much as possible, but to provide them with the academic supports they need in their specific areas of difficulty such as math or language arts," says Rabbi Pachino.

For students who have not had any day school education, there is a new stream program. Rabbi Pachino says it is gratifying how many of these students have excelled in all their studies, including their Jewish studies, and have gone on to post-secondary Jewish studies in institutions here and in Israel. A number have become rabbis and teachers.

Along with courses in Jewish ethics and Jewish philosophy, students study selections from Ma'ariv or Yediot Achronot. They analyze these Israeli newspapers, where the language is different from that in Hebrew literature. They learn the terminology related to Israeli's everyday life – domestic, political and social – and learn a new colloquial Hebrew vocabulary.

To encourage independent study, the Tanach department carries out b'kiut, extensive school-wide testing, five times a year, on biblical chapters that are not taught in class but are recommended for home study.

Among the other innovative projects, the school presents family programs, lectures where parents and students come together to discuss topics and issues being studied in the classroom.

And to gain a sense of volunteerism and to teach mitzvah, the school has instituted a communal service requirement. Students in grades 9 and 10 give a minimum of 18 hours of service in the Jewish or general community. By 1999, all students will be required to participate in the communal service program.

As an outreach program for broader community involvement, CHAT, with a grant from the action committee for Jewish continuity of UJA Federation, will present programs on our Jewish heritage that will be open to the community. This will include a series on Israel at 50.

With a new building on the drawing board, increasing enrolment, ongoing additions to curriculum and community service, CHAT is a model of community involvement and achievement for a diversified student population.

Experimental French learning project at Associated

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — One of Ruby Kaplan's Grade 8 French classes at Associated Hebrew Schools recently completed a project so all-consuming that one mother said, "TV was not a part of my daughter's life for the past few weeks. This was her life."

"This" was an adaptation of Le Malade Imaginaire, a 17th-century farce by Molière, more commonly studied at the OAC or university level. Kaplan, Associated's head of French for junior high, had used the play for an extracurricular project, but never in a classroom.

Not enough attention placed on memorization

"I'm claiming this will increase the students' vocabulary, levels of fluency, motivation and love of learning French, and [give them] an appreciation of literature," Kaplan told The CJN.

Kaplan believes not enough emphasis is placed on memorization for language acquisition. Memorizing helps the students internalize words, phrases and syntax, she said.

Ruby Kaplan

The students' excitement was palpable on a recent December morning when class 8D5 presented Le Malade Imaginaire – complete with elaborate student-painted backdrops – to an audience including parents, French teachers, Kaplan's professor at York, Marie-Anne Visoi, and members of the Toronto Board of Education. The proceedings were filmed for use when Kaplan presents her findings at an educational conference in March and to various school boards.

Before the play, she conducted an animated question-and-answer session en français, proving the students were conversant with the history of 17th-century France and the ins and outs of the play.

Having been educated in Belgium and South Africa, Kaplan finds the overall educational standard lower in Canada. She reasoned that Grade 8 students, having studied Torah, should be able to handle classic literature, although adaptation of the text to their reading level was necessary.

She was especially concerned that students who may drop French in high school be exposed to French literature early.

The class was divided into three groups, each of which produced one act of the play. A Hebrew narrator in each act served "to compare the wisdom of Molière and the teachings of Torah," Kaplan explained. Jewish studies teacher Chava Benaiah was involved in the Hebrew aspect.

The students had plenty of opportunity to ham it up with roles like that of the title character, a hypochondriac who wants his daughter to marry a doctor she doesn't love.

"I think I've taught them more through this play than I could through any formal grammar lesson," said Kaplan.

The school's junior high general studies principal, Jerry Rosenfield, called the project "a celebration of creative, meaningful learning and teaching.

"Associated's raison d'être is to create well rounded Canadian citizens and knowledgeable, committed Jews," he added.

Kaplan lauded Rosenfield's open-mindedness in supporting the project. "I'm lucky to be working at this school," she said.

Visoi noted the difficulty of showing children the experience of "pure intellectual pleasure...I really believe [Kaplan's] students are very fortunate."

"It was a great learning experience, challenging yet fun. Merci beaucoup, Madame Kaplan," said one student.

"Learning French is fun when you do something you enjoy – in my case, acting," said another.

Cheryl Ostro, a parent and former French teacher, said the play "was very much a positive experience for my daughter and her classmates...It most definitely raised the standard of learning for this year. Most importantly, the students really enjoyed themselves as well as learning something."

Schools are gearing up to join celebrations for Israel's 50th

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

To varying degrees, Toronto's Hebrew schools have long made Israel an integral part of their curricula. But during the coming year, which marks Israel's 50th anniversary, the schools are making a special effort to highlight the Jewish state.

"Each classroom or grade has a topic or focus that they're exploring in depth relating to Israel, whether it's the people, the land, geography, history, or special events," says Zita Gardner, director of Leo Baeck, which is affiliated with the Reform movement. "Israel is really a year-long theme throughout the school."

Some 1,350 Hebrew school educators from the Toronto area attended two professional development days last November at which the focus was Israel at 50, says Rabbi Jeremiah Unterman, executive director of the Board of Jewish Education (BJE), which arranged the gatherings.

As well, the BJE's Jewish Teachers Seminary is offering a full-year course specifically geared to classroom teaching about Israel during the jubilee year. In addition, the BJE has established an Israel Learning Centre, a room filled with books and other educational resources about Israel for teachers to consult.

"Obviously, this [the 50th anniversary] is a major focus of the community," Rabbi Unterman says. "On the one hand every school is doing its own activities. On the other hand, there are certain things that all the schools are involved in jointly."

Major focus of community

One collective activity, sponsored by the Mizrachi movement in conjunction with the BJE, involves the writing of a sefer Torah. All students in the Jewish school system will have the opportunity to be scribes of the Torah, which is to be given to the Israel Defence Forces in the spring.

An even more intimate connection with the Torah, the annual National Bible Contest has more themes about Israel woven into it this year than usual.

Regionally across Canada, students are scheduled to write tests about the Bible in February. The top 180 achievers will travel to Ottawa in May to compete at the national level. "The study program this year incorporates a lot of chapters from the Bible that have to do with Israel," says Yael Seliger, the BJE's director of educational services. "It's a one-time thing that we don't usually do."

For its affiliated schools, the BJE is also sponsoring a creative writing contest, with many topics related to Israel at 50, Seliger says. Some 20 or 30 winners will be chosen in April or May.

Rabbi Marvin Pachino, headmaster of the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT), says that a committee has been working at CHAT since last spring to devise and implement programs and extra-curricular activities related to Israel. "There are special contests being held on knowledge of Israel, geography, history, and so on," he says. "We also have a songwriting contest, a poetry contest, and programs throughout the year focusing on the 50th anniversary, and culminating in a major event on Yom Ha'atzmaut."

At Netivot HaTorah, which provides a traditional Jewish education with a Zionist flavor, students have been "decorating areas of the school with appropriately designed artwork" on an Israel theme, says principal Rabbi Dr. Reuven Stern, who adds that the curriculum has been enhanced in many areas to include more links to Israel than ever before. "We're trying not to limit this to a one-time experience," he says. "And we're making a special effort to teach our programs in Hebrew."

Like many schools, the special Israel-related programming at B'nei Akiva Schools is scheduled to reach a climax on Sun. May 24, Jerusalem Unification Day. On that day, thousands of students are expected to participate in the UJA's annual walk for Israel, which stretches from Toronto City Hall to Ontario Place, where a song and dance is scheduled.

"We'll be bussing students down en masse to participate," says Rabbi Moshe Yeres, the rosh yeshivah of Or Chaim and Ulpanat Orot. "We continuously stress to our students the importance of going to Israel and living in Israel."

At B'nei Akiva, which operates a campus for boys and another for girls in the Sheppard-Bathurst area of north Toronto, "a very high ratio of our graduates go to Israel in the year after graduation – the figure is more than 90 percent," Rabbi Yeres said.

Over 6,300 students in supplementary schools

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

'Our role is to leave the kids with a positive feeling about being Jewish'

More than 6,300 students attend supplementary Hebrew schools in the Greater Toronto Area. The following is a small sampling of the schools available.

Ahavat Yisrael opened its doors seven years ago and now has about 375 students at its two branches, in Thornhill and at Bayview Avenue and York Mills Road. Classes run once or twice a week.

Principal Leslie Shapiro stresses that Hebrew school can be fun. "We have small classes taught by enthusiastic teachers. Students take part in such activities as challah baking, holiday parties and arts and crafts related to our themes. They really do enjoy coming every week."

The school's curriculum is set by Shapiro and many texts are published in-house because many books are not geared towards supplementary students, she says.

"Our curriculum is age and ability appropriate and nothing is mundane. We learn about the Ten Commandments, for example, through song, puzzles and stories."

As well as a bar mitzvah program, Ahavat Yisrael runs a bat mitzvah program for girls turning 12 by June of that school year. "A ceremony takes place at synagogue and each girl makes a speech."

Shapiro, a graduate of the Faculty of Education at York University, opened the school because she saw "a need for a Hebrew school that kids look forward to attending. If children are interested they take it in.

"Our role as supplementary Hebrew school educators is to leave the kids with a positive feeling about being Jewish. We want them to feel that Judaism is something worth following."

Joan Schoenfeld, principal of the Downtown Jewish Community School, housed at the Bloor Jewish Community Centre, sees providing Jewish identity as the school's main role.

"Studies show that the more opportunities Jewish youth have for Jewish experience such as school and camp, the more likely that the child will become involved in Jewish life. What they learn at home is essential, but it must be combined with other things," she says.

The Downtown Jewish Community School, which runs twice a week, recognizes the importance of getting parents involved in their children's education.

"We have at least one or two classes a year in which parents learn alongside their children. In Grade 2, for instance, parents and children work on a project together and present it to the class. The parents learn as much as the children.

"In the younger grades, parents come in on special occasions and learn blessings, watch videos and work on an art project with their children. Its a creative learning experience for everyone," she says.

In the school's high school program, students study half the year with an Orthodox rabbi and half the year with a non-Orthodox rabbi. "It is a community school.We teach traditional Judaism with explanations that there are many ways of being a Jew," she says.

Topics on the high school curriculum include does G-d exist? and why certain Jewish groups do not get along. "Kids are getting two different perspectives in a respectful manner and they enjoy it."

The philosophy of Chabad Lubavitch Hebrew Schools "is to give children a solid Jewish education, and an appreciation and love for Yiddishkeit and Jewish heritage," says Rabbi Meir Gitlin, director of education.

"We want students to understand all facets of Judaism such as life cycles, the Holocaust, anti-Semitism and mitzvot," he says.

The program, says Rabbi Gitlin, is specially designed for Jewish children regardless of their affiliation. "We are a traditional Jewish school that is educating students to become proud, informed Jews."

He concedes that he cannot compete with Hebrew day schools, but "we can give students real knowledge and hands-on experience."

Rabbi Gitlin says the school is so successful because "kids love coming. We offer a progressive curriculum that changes each year. The teachers are enthusiastic and motivate the children to learn by acknowledging all their work."

Oraynu Children's School is run by Oraynu Community for Secular Humanistic Judaism and meets weekly near Bayview and York Mills.

"Our goal is to help children develop a strong identification with Judaism as an ethical and fulfilling way of life. We draw upon the rich cultural treasury that Jews have created over the centuries such as art, music, stories, poetry, social customs and ethics," says principal Karen Levy.

By studying historical Jewish heroes and communities, and by celebrating holidays and life cycle events, says Levy, we hope that our children learn how Jewish people developed humanistic values and learn how to integrate those values into daily living.

'CJN students' move to new stage in life

Six years ago we first profiled Ali Bresver, Naomi Emerson, Chaim Greenwald and Jacob Korenblum, then junior high students marking a milestone year with the celebration of their respective bar and bat mitzvahs. This annual series, written by staff reporter Frances Kraft, will culminate in the year 2000.

A fifth student, Nathan Wise, joined the group two years ago as a student at the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto. He is now studying in Halifax and declined to participate this year.

Of the four original participants, Chaim Greenwald, 19, and Naomi Emerson, 18, are studying for a year at yeshivot in Israel. Over cold drinks at the Bathurst Jewish Centre cafeteria last August, they talked about their excitement over their upcoming departure.

Chaim, an alumnus of Eitz Chaim Day School and the Wisconson Institute of Torah Study (WITS), is now at the Chafetz Chaim Yeshiva in Jerusalem, which is affiliated with WITS.

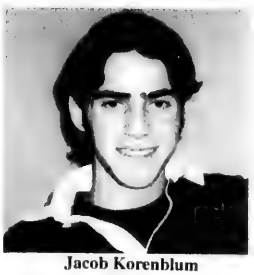
Although we did not succeed in reaching him in Israel, his mother reported that he is happy and doing well.

Naomi is studying at Orot, a women's yeshivah an hour outside Jerusalem. A graduate of Associated Hebrew Day Schools and Ulpanat Orot, Naomi has a full schedule of Jewish studies including Halachah relating to modern-day issues such as abortion and euthanasia.

"I really love it here," she wrote in a recent fax. The best part about being in Israel is just...being in Israel, she wrote. "All of my life, I have been educated to love Israel. Many of our tfillot express our love and yearning for Eretz Yisrael, the desire of Jews throughout the ages to return to our land. Much of this is being fulfilled in our time...and I am here to partake in it!"

She also loves the constant presence of Jewish history. "It is impossible to understand Tanach to its full extent when learning it in a classroom in Toronto; here in Israel, one can gain a much deeper understanding as it is all brought to life."

Ali Bresver



Jacob Korenblum

Chaim Greenwald

Naomi Emerson

The experience of living and studying in Israel has not changed her notably, she said, but she has found herself thinking about who she is and how she wants to live her life.

Although she would like to make aliyah one day, she plans to return to study at York University next fall. "Of course I would love to stay here, but...I've concluded that this is the most mature and sensible approach for me at this stage of my life."

Like Naomi, Ali Bresver and Jacob Korenblum, both 18, know where they are headed. Jacob, who has just finished his final semester at Northern Secondary School, plans to combine work and travel before entering university in the fall.

A graduate of Bialik Hebrew Day School, Jacob would like to study international relations, perhaps at the University of Toronto or the University of Guelph.

Living in residence is the route to go, he feels, even if he stays in Toronto. "I really like my house, but I think it's important to have some breathing space. It's not just independence. It's a social thing as well."

Ali, a student and active student council member at Lawrence Park Collegiate, is considering programs at Dalhousie, Queen's and McMaster Universities. Although she is still interested in journalism, particularly sports journalism, she is looking into programs in Psychology, Sports Psychology and Education so as not to limit her options.

She knows she likes teaching, and is still teaching Sunday school at Temple Emanu-El, where she attended supplementary school.

For Ali's young students, "it's cool not to like Sunday school. For me it's such a connection, and I try to explain that, but they really don't see it yet."

Although she has been involved at her synagogue for years, as a young teen, Ali didn't understand the importance of Judaism in her life, she said.

"When I'm hanging out with my Jewish friends, I totally feel differently than when I'm hanging out with my other friends. Before, I would have said there's no difference at all. Most of my Jewish friends, I've been to camp or to Israel with, so I've bonded with them much more and in a different way than with my school friends. I still love my other friends just as much, but it's made me see how important it is to have Jewish friends.

"You don't know what you have until you kind of look around, try different things, and decide for yourself."

Ali said she "will try to marry someone Jewish," but plans to raise her children Jewish and stay active in the Reform movement regardless.

When she goes away to university, she would like to connect to the local Jewish community by helping at a Sunday school.

For Jacob, whose family is Conservative, attending a largely non-Jewish high school helped him gain a stronger sense of his Jewish identity.

In his early high school years, he attended weekly classes at the Bloor JCC to continue his Jewish education.

"I think I miss it," he reflected during a recent interview at The CJN offices. "It was a good opportunity to discuss Jewish issues with other people my age. It has always been interesting, but I think it was more important when I started high school, to consolidate my views."

Belief in God is an issue that has arisen in this series, and with which Ali has struggled the most.

She's pretty well decided she doesn't believe in God, except perhaps in the concept of a God who started the world but hasn't been involved since. "[But] I totally believe in Judaism. It's weird.

"People used to believe in God to explain things. Now all this stuff has been discovered," Ali reasons.

"Religion now is more for identity and the feeling of being together with people who are like you," Ali said.

Jacob said believing in God is "a very comforting thing, but I don't think it's a sign of weakness. It's a difficult topic. No one can prove any more than disprove that God exists. I think human beings have to have some underlying belief that there's something out there.

"It's so much less glamorous to think you're the product of some enzyme or molecule rather than something spiritual. I think everybody needs some spiritual outlet. I don't think human beings should rely on science alone to explain everything."

Betar-Tagar shaliach leaves

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Pini Ravid, shaliach for Betar-Tagar, returned to Israel December 22, leaving the right-wing Zionist student organization without an official representative from Israel. (It is, however, still connected to the Herut-Likud office in Toronto.)

Since Ravid, 30, began his term here in September 1996, Betar-Tagar has strengthened its presence at a number of Ontario campuses. In addition to York University, where it began, the organization is also at the University of Toronto, the University of Western Ontario, the University of Waterloo, Seneca College and Ryerson Polytechnic University.

The youth wing of Herut-Likud also serves younger students in junior high and high school. Betar, the pre-university group, was founded in Latvia in 1923. Tagar, which serves university students, dates back only to the mid-1980s. It got off the ground here in 1994, when Ravid's predecessor, Sharon Tsur, became Toronto's first Betar-Tagar shlichah.

Ravid – whose departure was precipitated by the restructuring within the Jewish Agency – believes the various Zionist youth groups should consider joining forces.

"The kids come here not because of ideology, or not just because of ideology. They come because it's a Jewish group connected to Israel, Zionism and activism. I have left-wing people and I know Hashomer Hatzair has right-wing people. We co-operate all the time, because we have a common agenda – anti-Semitism, anti-Nazis, promoting Israel, promoting Jewish values. All of us agree on that."

He also thinks it would be a good idea to have Israel send a shaliach strictly for campus work. He estimates he's worked with 150 university students in Ontario during his stay here.

A former member of Israel's foreign ministry who studied international relations at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Ravid will be returning to his native Kfar Saba, possibly to pursue a career in the field of Israel-Diaspora relations.

He was impressed with the warmth of the Toronto Jewish community toward Israel, he said. Sometimes Israelis forget how much their Diaspora counterparts are affected by what goes on in Israel, he admitted.

"We both have to learn a lot about each other. If we know more about each other, a lot of problems we face between the two Jewish communities can be solved more easily."

Ravid feels his main contribution here has been fostering dedication to Judaism, Zionism and activism. "We educated kids to get involved in the community. I wouldn't be surprised if 15 to 20 years from now, these kids will be the backbone of the community, the leaders. If we shaped that a little bit by giving some values, then we accomplished something."

Holocaust archives expanded

NEW YORK — Clark University has acquired a valuable collection of some 5,000 books and materials on the Holocaust, many dating from 1933 to 1947.

The collection will be housed in the university's library and in its Centre for Holocaust Studies in Worcester, Mass.

The collection, assembled over the past 10 years by Eric Chaim Kline, a Los Angeles bookseller and collector, is valued at $225,000 (US).

Deborah Dwork, director of the university's Centre for Holocaust Studies, praised Kline for assembling the collection.

"Without his efforts, many of these items might have been lost forever," she said. "Now, it is time to make them accessible to scholars committed to studying the Holocaust."

The collection includes registers of Jewish survivors of World War II, German foreign policy documents, Allied military plans, artwork illustrating anti-Semitism and photographs taken during the liberation of Nazi concentration camps.

The recently established Holocaust studies centre will begin offering a doctoral degree in Holocaust history next year.

Supreme Court selection process is alarming

Scene in Ottawa

By STEPHEN BINDMAN

OTTAWA — The newest judge of the Supreme Court of Canada is not a woman. Nor a Jew.

Should we be concerned?

We shouldn't necessarily be alarmed because of who Prime Minister Jean Chrétien chose to replace Mr. Justice John Sopinka, a court leader who died suddenly of a blood disorder in November.

By all accounts, Bay Street lawyer Ian Binnie should make a fine judge although he's a bit of an unknown quantity when it comes to a legal philosophy since he's never sat on the bench before.

Binnie was regarded as one of the country's top trial lawyers, with extensive constitutional experience and more than 25 appearances as counsel before the Supreme Court.

It was he the federal government turned to after a Federal Court judge halted three Nazi war crimes cases because of a secret meeting between Chief Justice Julius Isaac and senior federal lawyer Ted Thompson. Binnie succeeded in convincing the Supreme Court to allow the cases to proceed despite the Thompson-Isaac meeting.

Nor should we necessarily be alarmed simply because the new justice is not Jewish.

Although there hasn't been a Jewish judge on the Supreme Court since the death of Chief Justice Bora Laskin (more on that family a little later) in 1984, there isn't – and shouldn't be – a reserved "Jewish seat."

The court should, of course, strive to be representative of the Canadian population as a whole. And that means there must be more than two women on the nine-member bench. Another opportunity to remedy this significant imbalance was missed.

But we should be most alarmed about an invisible selection process that allowed the reputation of one of Canada's greatest legal minds to be sullied.

In Canada, Supreme Court justices are appointed by the prime minister after consultation with the provinces and legal and judicial communities. U.S.-style public confirmation hearings à la Clarence Thomas are thought to be too messy, too political, too un-Canadian.

But are secret, behind-the-back whisper campaigns more appropriate, more Canadian?

By all accounts, the two leading candidates on everyone's list to replace Sopinka were justices of the Ontario Court of Appeal – Rosalie Abella and John Laskin. Both, by the way, are Jewish, Laskin being the son of the aforementioned Bora.

Government insiders suggest there was such an unprecedented and bitter lobbying campaign by lawyers, judges and party activists, that in the end neither Laskin nor Abella were chosen so as not to alienate either camp.

It even appears there was somewhat of an "anyone but Rosie" campaign orchestrated by people who didn't approve of her liberal philosophy or her gregarious, outgoing personality and style.

Abella supporters, in particular, believe she was the victim of a nasty "smear" campaign.

The newspaper later apologized for the smear, if you could find it at the bottom of a letter to the editor.

Another neo-con critic attacked her work on employment equity, the term she coined in her groundbreaking 1984 royal commission report.

But by far the most frequently-whispered criticism was that Rosie (it's not disrespectful to call her that, everyone does) was too ambitious, too high profile, too unjudgelike.

Here's where stereotypes seem to really be at play – how many men are guilty of the same supposed crime yet aren't punished? How come it's okay for men to be ambitious but women who have lofty goals are seen as pushy?

As one federal official confided, this knock against Abella is the modern-day equivalent of "she slept her way to the top."

"It speaks about the country and about how to get ahead," said one Abella supporter.

"The resonance of pushy, aggressive, non-Canadian, who does she think she is, was there.

"It says that if you're different and you push public policy or human rights and you keep your head up, you're not going to do as well as somebody who keeps his head down and does the mainstream route and operates in a more conventional manner. It's a lesson that's important for people to understand."

So it is certainly disappointing that Abella did not get the Supreme Court position.

But it's absolutely shameful that such a sterling reputation was dragged through the mud like it was.

Someone who was a family court judge at age 30, head of the Ontario labor relations board and law reform commission, first sitting judge elected to the Royal Society and holder of 16 honorary degrees, should never have to apologize for her more than impressive resume.

On the contrary, the whisperers owe Rosie Abella an apology.

Crackdown on Internet provider urged

VANCOUVER — British Columbia's attorney general should prosecute an Internet provider for spreading Holocaust denial material, says the Simon Wiesenthal Centre.

Sol Littman, the centre's Canadian director, and David Cohen, dean of law at the University of Victoria, told a news conference here last week that the Fairview Technology Centre in the rural Okanagan community of Oliver is violating Canadian hate laws by providing access to dozens of neo-Nazi, white supremacist, and Holocaust denial Web sites.

Political pundit discusses Oslo

By DAVID LAZARUS
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The Oslo process is now the "Os-no" process, an inevitable impasse that's brought the Israeli right and left more or less together and could result in a national unity government by the spring, one of Israel's most respected pundits said here recently.

Ehud Ya'ari said that both sides of Israel's political spectrum now see Oslo as a failure, mostly because it was much too detailed and full of utopian visions of peace and brotherhood.

But the effect of Oslo was just the opposite, Ya'ari, the associate editor of the Jerusalem Report, told a full house at the Beth Israel Beth Aaron Synagogue.

Both parties are willing to make a regional trade-off, Ya'ari said, with even hard-nosed hawks like Ariel Sharon ready to allow the creation of a Palestinian state.

The Palestinians will get, at most, 11 percent of the West Bank, but it will be a state with very limited control.

Israel will maintain control of the Jordan Valley, since there can't be a contiguous Palestinian border with Jordan. But Israel will have to make some sort of concession on East Jerusalem, he said.

Getting all that in gear will take a "broad-based" national unity government. But Ya'ari sees both sides right now as so close in their approach that's it's possible.

It's possible, he added, even with Benjamin Netanyahu as prime minister.

"The only relevant question is not whether Bibi is a good prime minister – he is probably not – but whether his mistakes affect the strategic efforts of Israel."

Ya'ari says they don't.

Of course, caveats abound, and Ya'ari was full of them, although he sees himself as less pessimistic than his actual words might indicate.

Peace will involve basic contradictions: a peace with the Palestinians that has to involve turning our backs on them; and PLO chief Yasser Arafat accepting a Palestinian state while getting the Palestinian Authority's "wings clipped."

Arafat, he said, will have to go to the Palestinian majority with a deal most Palestinians will want to reject.

"What national leader in history would ever pull a trick like that, to betray the majority of his constituency?"

That's why Ya'ari said the jury will be out until the "very last moment. We won't have the answer until the end."

Still, the ever-present glimmer of hope remains, for these reasons: Israel can't let another popular uprising like the Palestinian intifadah – which "it can't afford to win" – take place, and another war in the region will involve non-conventional weapons. Both Arabs and Jews are of one mind on that one, Ya'ari said.

Even if there is peace, he said, it will be like a divorced couple, "doomed to stay with your ex-spouse forever in the same bedroom."

And peace is differently perceived by each party in the dispute, Ya'ari said.

His appearance was co-sponsored by the synagogue and by the Canadian Institute for Jewish Research.

Nominations for CJC awards open

WINNIPEG — The Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) Board of Governors, chaired by Milton Harris, is now accepting nominations for awards to be presented at the organization's 25th triennial National Plenary Assembly May 24 to 26, at Lombard Hotel in Winnipeg.

The Samuel Bronfman Medal is presented to persons who have rendered distinguished service to Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish community.

The Saul Hayes Human Rights Award may be given to any person regardless of origin, in Canada or abroad, who has rendered distinguished service to the cause of human rights. Saul Hayes was director of the United Jewish Restitution Agency (UJRA) from 1938 to 1942, national executive director of CJC from 1942 to 1959 and executive vice-president from 1959 to 1974. He remained active with CJC until his death in 1980.

The Brian A. Finestone Memorial Award and the Monroe Abbey Award provide financial assistance to persons, aged 25 to 40, to attend the Plenary Assembly. The awards recognize past involvement and encourage ongoing and future participation in the activities of CJC. The former was established by longtime CJC leader Bernard J. Finestone in memory of his son. The latter is named in honor of a distinguished former CJC president who died in 1993.

The Sam Filer Distinguished Service Award is given to a Congress leader or other person from current Jewish community leadership. Judge Sam Filer is a past chair of the national executive of CJC.

Nominations should be sent to the CJC national office, c/o Michael J. Cohen, 1590 Avenue Dr. Penfield, Montreal, Quebec, H3G 1C5 or by fax (1-514-931-0548) or e-mail [mikec@cjc.ca]. The deadline for submissions is March 2. A 250-word letter about the nominee should be included, along with the nominee's resume, if possible.

Globe article angers BB

MONTREAL — An article by Jan Wong in the Jan. 11 Globe and Mail aroused the ire of many members of the Jewish community says B'nai Brith Canada (BBC) because it drew "liberally, if subtly, on stereotypes of ethnic communities" in reporting on the disparity between how rich and poorer Montrealers were coping with being put out of their homes because of the prolonged blackout.

The article contrasted the stories of three well-to-do apparently Jewish women comfortably whiling away the time in a fancy downtown hotel with that of a French-Canadian couple and their infant daughter eating free beans and sleeping on army cots in a Verdun shelter.

"Although the cases she cited are undoubtedly true, why the absolute division of those staying in hotels versus those staying in hostels into members of the Jewish community versus members of the French-Canadian community, evident from the names of her contacts?" asked Frank Dimant, executive vice-president of BBC.

The article focussed on the fact that wealthy Westmount, initially at least, escaped the power outage because it had its own utility company and suggested the rich were indifferent to the plight of the poor during the crisis. Wong does not identify her interviewees as Jewish. She also interviewed an apparently anglophone single mother on welfare staying in a shelter.

BBC filed a complaint with the Globe and Mail after it said it received dozens of complaints from community members in Ontario and Quebec.

Lubavitch delivers The CJN to shelters set up to escort the elderly, who were fearful of going out on icy streets, to grocery stores for necessities. Over 160 people used the service. There was concern that the elderly might eat food that had been left unrefrigerated for too long.

FEDERATION CJA, which had its power restored only last Wednesday after a week-long outage, had earlier set up a Jewish community hotline at the GAA for people needing help or offering help. It was open 12 hours a day. Many offered to open their homes or provide their cars for transport. Offers exceeded demand.

Numerous companies donated all manner of supplies from pillows to sweatsuits, to supplement what was covered by the municipalities, Red Cross, Canadian Forces and other relief agencies.

Once the basics of shelter and food were supplied, boredom became a major problem. The shelters endeavored to provide amusement. Musicians came to perform, Lubavitchers led spirited singing and dancing, bingos were organized, Oneg Shabbats were celebrated. Reading material was in short supply; Lubavitchers picked up and delivered copies of The Canadian Jewish News to shelters.

There were humorous incidents amid the hardship. One man actually came to the registration desk at the Bialik shelter seeking to enrol his son in the school next year.

The shelter at the Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue in Westmount became known as "the Ritz Carlton of shelters," said Todd Shapiro of the synagogue staff, because of the luxurious surroundings and good meals prepared in the synagogue's large kitchen.

Lubavitch opened a centre it runs for Russian immigrants, to be used for storm victims. Through its Ezrat Achim organization, Lubavitch also either bought or obtained donations of many supplies for the Cote St. Luc shelters, said Rabbi Abraham Cohen.

At the Jewish General Hospital, staff – from clerical workers to the executive-director – put in 12- and 18-hour days, even sleeping overnight, to cope with the demand of taking care of up to 200 frail elderly and discharged patients on cots, stretchers and mattresses in their auditorium and emergency ward.

The contribution of young people, high school and college age, was especially remarkable, both for the numbers that turned out and the cheerfulness they kept. "I can honestly say that I am honored to be working with this age group," said Sharon Tansky, CEGEP director for Hillel.

Volunteers from B'nai Brith worked with the Montreal police, knocking on doors of residences and apartment buildings where large numbers of senior citizens live.

B'nai Brith regional director Robert Libman said many Jewish seniors were reluctant to leave their homes, but felt more reassured when a volunteer from the community was present. Where needed, Yiddish-speaking volunteers were enlisted to ease communication.

B'nai Brith, whose Decarie Square office was without power for only one day, also provided information and referral for children outside Quebec worried about losing contact with elderly parents who had been relocated.

Le Mercaz, the federation's everyday resource outlet for the needy, was busy distributing blankets, warm clothing, toys and games. Jewish Family Services made its social workers available to any shelter in the Montreal area, in addition to keeping tabs on its own clients.

Free Hebrew for Juniors, a Jewish supplementary school program in the public schools, organized all-day programs for children of all ages at the Beth Ora Synagogue in St. Laurent. It kept the kids, who were out of school for almost two weeks, busy and fed them a hot meal, freeing the parents. Hundreds of children from many areas took advantage of the service.

Shelter from the storm

These volunteers were from both the synagogue and the city, Jewish and non-Jewish, black and white. They were here to give of their time and energy to help those who needed it.

I guess if a sermon is a good reason for 1,000 people to sleep in a synagogue, 180 people sleeping in a synagogue is a good occasion for a sermon. And the sermon, on this icy day when we are both synagogue and shelter, is about what a synagogue should be.

The Talmud (Shabbat 32a) says that it is demeaning to call a synagogue a beit am (a house of the people), because it makes the synagogue sound secular, lacking any religious value. This statement is very strange, because the Talmud almost always refers to a synagogue as a beit knesset, (a house of gathering), which seems just as secular!

Perhaps the answer is found in the choice of words. A "house of the people" can sound as if it is relegated to a certain group of people; in short, a country club for members with similar interests. This type of gathering is purely secular and debases the holiness of the synagogue. However, a "house of gathering" includes anyone who wants to come and gather. This type of openness makes the "house of gathering" a place of love and compassion, which is itself a religious value.

There are many things a synagogue can be used for. It can be used for prayers and Torah study, and it can be used for more secular matters such a socializing, eating and sleeping. What I have learned this week is that what makes a synagogue a true place of holiness depends less on what is being done, and more on how it's being done.

A synagogue filled with prayers that makes people feel excluded is still only a beit am, an icy cold religious country club. A synagogue that serves as a shelter, a place of food and lodging, but does so out of a sense of inclusion, out of concern and compassion, is truly a beit knesset, a warm and holy place of gathering.

Polish Catholic clergy crowd Warsaw shul

By MARILYN HENRY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

WARSAW — In a dramatic gesture of goodwill and cooperation the Catholic Church in Poland inaugurated a "Day of Judaism" after the havdalah service at the Nozyk Synagogue.

The day is intended to promote respect and cooperation, Bishop Stanislaw Gadecki said, addressing hundreds of Jews, nuns, monks, and priests at Warsaw's only synagogue.

Gadecki's appearance was considered important and symbolic, not only to the Jewish community, but to the population of Poland, which is mainly Catholic.

Anti-Semitic tensions had been raised by broadcast from Radio Maryja, Poland's most popular Catholic radio station which is based in Torun-Medieval, about 120 miles from the capital.

Authorities had been reluctant to gag the station, which attracts about 13 percent of the population daily. They tune in for broadcasts of prayers and talk shows in which, for example, one caller went unchallenged when he explained last year's floods by saying: "The rains in July were so unusual that I was reminded of an Israeli invention to chemically produce rain. I know that they invent such things to be omnipotent."

Krzysztof Sliwinski, the Polish Foreign Ministry envoy for Jewish affairs, said the day of Judaism and Gadecki's appearance at the synagogue was "a turning point from which official support for Jewish-Christian cooperation would filter into Polish society.

"What started a few years ago among, can I say, 'the chosen people' has become a public event that will continue," he said. "It cannot be suppressed or canceled."

Some 7,000 churches have received material suggesting how to develop local programs on Judaism, and priests were offered model sermons.

"This gives them the opportunity to know our sensitivities, like anti-Semitism, especially anti-Semitism in Poland," said Stanislaw Krajewski, who represents the Jewish community in Jewish-Christian affairs.

Gadecki, who returned to Warsaw from a visit to the Vatican only an hour before the service, said he had come with the support of Pope John Paul II, who told him to remember the Holocaust.

That point was especially significant, said Krajewski.

"The pope told him it wasn't enough to speak in a general theological framework. In Poland, we have to remember this tragic legacy."

Church officials had previously visited Nozyk, usually to commemorate a tragedy or to protest a misfortune, such as last February's arson attack on the synagogue, Krajewski said.

"Now, it's not a reaction, but a step in the long-term process of building mutual respect," he said.

Krajewski also was hopeful that the church's public stance would motivate Polish Jews.

"If the church shows respect for Jews, some marginal Jews can feel less inhibited and come back to the Jewish fold."

Pope plans Jerusalem trip

By LISA PALMIERI-BILLIG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

ROME — "A trip to Jerusalem is on my horizon," Pope John Paul II told Israeli tourism minister Moshe Katsav recently, but he gave no indication of when he might make such a trip.

"If his horizon is one year or two years, we don't know," Katsav said.

Katsav was in Rome to coordinate preparations with the Vatican for the some five million pilgrims expected to travel to Jerusalem from Rome in the next three years because of the importance to many Christians of the advent of the millennium.

In his conversation with Katsav, the pope inquired about the peace process, stressed the importance of interreligious dialogue and expressed the hope that a meeting of leaders of the three monotheistic religions will take place at Mt. Sinai before the year 2000. He referred to Jews as "our older brothers" and said, "The Holocaust is always in our minds; it is forbidden to forget."

Katsav also met with Monsignor Tauran of the Vatican State Department; with Monsignor Andreatta, president of the Vatican's official tourist agency, Opera Romana Pelegrinnaggi; and with the president of the Vatican's Grand Jubilee Committee, Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, who will be in Jerusalem this year.

Katsav reported that church authorities had expressed willingness to permit temporary hostels to be constructed on Catholic holy sites in Israel. He recommended that holy places be open to pilgrims 24 hours a day to accommodate the increased influx, and said cooperation between the Vatican and Israeli governments is necessary for the construction of infrastructures around churches.

Knesset inquiry into Maccabiah tragedy urged

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Families of the Australian athletes killed or injured in the July 1997 Maccabiah bridge disaster plan to ask individual MKs to support a Knesset inquiry into the Maccabi World Union's (MWU) role in the incident.

Colin Elterman, whose daughter, Sacha, is still in a Sydney hospital recovering from her injuries, said the families came away with mixed feelings from their meeting with Deputy Education Minister Moshe Peled and his delegation, who were in Australia last week.

While the families were appreciative of the sympathy and regret expressed by Peled and the others, Elterman said they were disappointed when Peled said he was unable to launch an external inquiry into the actions of the MWU.

"That is what we want, and what the families have been calling for since we first wrote to him about it," Elterman said. "We thought that we might be able to convince him in person, but he said he didn't want to do anything until after the trial of those indicted is complete.

"We will still be pushing for an external inquiry, and I guess the next stop is that we will be approaching individual MKs to sponsor a private member's bill to have a Knesset inquiry into the MWU," he said.

Elterman said Peled told the families he supports combining the Maccabiah Games with the Hapoel Games and other athletic events into one, larger Jewish games with more government control.

"That's something we would be in favor of as part of a clean-up of Maccabi World Union, if a new structure evolved with better procedures in place," Elterman said.

Peled presented Sacha Elterman with a personal letter from the prime minister and the president.

Colin Elterman said that Peled was surprised. "I am not against the Israeli people and the state, but everything I've said is that the Israeli people have been absolutely magnificent to us. Our fight is not with the people of Israel, but with the MWU, and we are trying to enlist the right Israeli government body to clean these guys out...The healing process will not be completed until these people are out."

Elterman said his daughter's condition had improved over the past few weeks, although she still needs treatment for an abscess on her brain.

"For now, were taking it one day at a time and enjoying being able to talk and laugh with her," he said.

Sacha, who just celebrated her 16th birthday, got a phone call from Reuma Weizman, wife of the Israeli president; she had sent Sacha a gift with the Peled delegation, but told her she had forgotten to wish her happy sweet 16. She added that she hoped to see Sacha playing tennis again soon.

The good wishes and the numerous faxes she has received from Israelis are helping in her recovery, Sacha told Weizman. She will have to have another complicated operation soon, she added.

Adam Zines, whose father, Warren, died from injuries in the bridge collapse, said he told Peled that justice is only part of the process.

"Education is key and I am deeply concerned at what he is personally doing to ensure that the education process is made a high priority."

Canadian Jewish parliamentarians attend conference

By EDGAR ASHER
CJN Israel Correspondent

JERUSALEM — Five Jewish Canadians were among over 70 representatives from 23 countries who were in Israel last week to participate in the Fifth Annual Conference of Jewish Ministers and Members of Parliament.

The conference was organized by the Israeli Forum, a non-political, non-profit group established in 1985 by members of the Young Leadership Cabinet of the UJA with the aim of strengthening ties between Jews in Israel and those in the Diaspora. It offers a wide range of activities and projects to foster Jewish identity and leadership.

This year's conference came at a time of high political tension within Israel's coalition as well as during the national debate on the conversion bill.

Delegates to the five-day program were given the opportunity to hear explanations firsthand from leading Israeli politicians and civil servants on current Israeli affairs, especially on the peace process and the conversion bill. They met with President Ezer Weizman, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and opposition leaders. They also heard a Palestinian point of view from Palestinian Authority planning minister, Nabeel Sha'ath.

Jewish parliamentarians from countries including Angola, Bulgaria, Canada, Ukraine, Georgia, Britain, the United States and Venezuela had much in common. It was clear that the debate over the conversion bill concerned all the delegates. The passage of the bill would, in the view of the majority, be very divisive, although many delegates said they understood the motivation of the Orthodox in Israel – to maintain the integrity of the Jewish people by strict observance of halachic practices.

Raymonde Folco (Laval West) reflected the sentiments of many of her colleagues: "It is very interesting to be in Israel just now, to discuss the differences of opinion and the deep cleavage in society in terms of how Israelis see their society evolving, and then comparing it to the kind of discussions we have and the deep divisions in our society in terms of separation between Quebec and the rest of Canada. There is not really a great deal in common in terms of content, but there is much in common in terms of discussion and underlying fears. We are told when we are here that the conversion law doesn't affect us, but we feel as Jews in the Diaspora that the conversion law will affect us. At the same time, we are Jews of one big family; we are not Israelis and we try to keep our fingers out of the cake. It's not our law, its not our country. It's a very difficult balancing act that we have to do as regards internal Israeli matters."

Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) also expressed concerns about the conversion bill. "It has been a particularly significant experience for us to deal with some problems that we've got at home, such as concerns about conversion. It was extremely interesting to hear Avraham Burg [Jewish Agency chair] and his evaluation of the situation."

Charles Harnick, Ontario's attorney general, agreed that the conversion bill and the peace process were the main items on the agenda for the Jewish parliamentarians.

Harnick said the conference gave him "perspective" on how different issues actually are in Israel, as compared with descriptions of them in the Western media.

He also found a widening gulf in opinion among all segments of Israeli society. "To predict where Israel is going is virtually impossible," he said.

Elinor Caplan (Thornhill) mentioned the recurring theme as to the nature of a Jewish parliamentarian. "I was told that while we consider ourselves as one family, the Spaniards look like Spaniards, the Bulgarians look like Bulgarians, the Canadians and Americans are clearly North Americans. We're diverse and that diversity is something that getting together on a such a forum reminds us of – our richness, our differences and the things we have in common."

Russell Copeman, a member of the Quebec National Assembly, returned to the theme of being Jewish in a multiracial political environment. "I represent a riding (Notre-Dame-De-Grace) that is not a Jewish riding per se…I don't see myself fulfilling a particular role as a Jewish member in the National Assembly, but clearly being Jewish has an impact on how I behave and to a certain extent how my colleagues relate to me. There is no conflict in being in the legislature as a Jew. I haven't met any resistance or ill will. There are bigger divisions in Canada on language – French versus English – rather that religious issues."

The forum was praised as a means of maintaining the Jewish connection within diverse backgrounds and experiences. "I think that what the Israeli Forum is doing in bringing together Jewish parliamentarians from around the world is a wonderful and important initiative," Caplan said.

"In my riding, which contains one of the largest Jewish populations in Canada, my constituents will want to know that this is happening. Here [in Israel] we are being informed, given information and given our chance to have our say too about the issues of the day in Israel, which are interesting, exciting, challenging and difficult."

Added Copeman, "This forum is personally important to me. One of the aims of the conference is to set up a network of Jewish parliamentarians, to share information…Israel doesn't necessarily have to be a centrepiece, I think it has to be an important factor. The Jewish questions are the question of anti-Semitism, the issue of living as Diaspora Jews in a majority gentile community. I think we can learn from each other how various communities and cultures have dealt with those issues."

Shetreet announces bid for mayoralty

By ELLI WOHLGELERNTER
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Former religious affairs minister Shimon Shetreet has announced he will run against incumbent Ehud Olmert in November's election for mayor of Jerusalem.

"I have to admit this is a great challenge," Shetreet said. "Surveys suggest that it will be very difficult, but I am optimistic. I think that if we mobilize all the sectors of the community who are keen on a harmonious combination of democracy and tradition – secular, traditional, and religious, – then I think we can bring the desired change."

Shetreet, who announced his candidacy on TV, said he is running as a candidate of One Jerusalem, which he defined as a "general public movement." It was also the fusion party of former mayor Teddy Kollek, who gave his endorsement to Shetreet.

"The endorsement of Teddy Kollek is the best I could ever expect from anyone with regards to my candidacy," Shetreet said.

But he will face a similar challenge to one Kollek faced in 1993, with no stronger guarantee of success: trying to win over the haredi vote, which is presently lined up solidly behind Olmert.

"Negotiations and contacts will take place and have taken place with various sections of the community in Jerusalem," Shetreet said, "and I don't exclude contacts with the Haredim. But I am realistic: They have in the past four years been in the best position ever in the history of Jerusalem. My best hope of being able to change the present situation is by joining forces with those committed to democracy and respectful of tradition."

Endorsed by Teddy

A senior Likud source said Shetreet would be a weak candidate. "They didn't vote for him as a [Labor] MK, so why should they vote for him as mayor? Second, the Haredim don't like him at all, because as minister of religious affairs he opposed them on a lot of issues."

Shetreet said that he is not yet a candidate representing the Labor party, but that he feels the party, including head Ehud Barak, favors his candidacy,

"His reaction was generally positive," Shetreet said, "but there is a certain process that the party has to go through. No formal decision has been made, but my assessment is that Labor will also support my candidacy.

"My main interest and main concern is the decision of the community here in Jerusalem. I am a member of the Labor party and in the last cabinet was one of the ministers of the Labor party. But I am running here as a representative of the Jerusalemites, in a Jerusalem movement, and this is what I wish to stress in my candidacy."

Olmert's spokesperson, Haggai Elias, declined to comment on Shetreet's candidacy, saying only that "the mayor is planning to run in the upcoming election, and he's going to be chosen again."

Shetreet said that his three primary objectives as mayor will be strengthening economic development; maintaining the delicate balance among the various communities in the city; and "giving special attention to the interreligious relationship in this holy city. It is very important for Jews as the united capital of Israel, but it is also a holy city of other religions."

The Week in Israel

Jan. 12

• Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu denied reports that Israeli rabbis had made contact with Iranian clerics and hoped to travel to Tehran. Rabbi Menachem Froman of Tekoa reportedly said the contacts have been going on for several months.

Jan. 13

• Israel's Sephardi Chief Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron approved the recommendations of a committee dealing with the conversion in Israel of children adopted abroad. The committee had recommended that after the children undergo conversion, the families not be required to adopt a religiously observant lifestyle.

Jan. 14

Jan. 15

• The Hamas terror cells recently uncovered by Israeli security officials in the West Bank had been planning suicide attacks in Jerusalem and in Tel Aviv. The head of the General Security Services met with Yasser Arafat earlier in the week to discuss further action against terrorists.

Jan. 16

• Media reported that finance minister Ya'acov Ne'eman hopes the report of the committee on religious pluralism, of which he is the chair, will be able to submit its report to the government well ahead of the Jan. 31 deadline.

LAKE SUCCESS, N.Y., (Jan. 15 JTA) — Sir Alexander Cadogan, chief of the British delegation at the United Nations, today indicated to the UN Implementation Commission that it would not be advisable for it to arrive in Palestine before May 1, two weeks prior to the termination of the Palestine Mandate.

Speaking at a closed session of the commission, the British representative avoided giving a clear answer to the question of whether Britain will evacuate a port in the Jewish area of Palestine by Feb. 1, as provided in a General Assembly resolution.

Holocaust Museum rejects official Arafat visit

By HILLEL KUTTLER
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum has turned down Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat's request for an official visit when he comes to Washington this week.

The decision means that no special security or escort would be provided. Arafat is still free, like anyone else, to visit the museum during normal hours.

Meanwhile, the Kibbutz Artzi movement has invited Arafat to visit its Holocaust museum at Kibbutz Yad Mordechai.

Movement leader Avshalom Vilan told Israel Radio the invitation followed the "mystifying announcement of the board of the Holocaust museum in Washington, which refused to receive Yasser Arafat in a gesture of historic reconciliation."

Vilan, the secretary of Hakibbutz Ha'artzi, blamed an "extremist wing" among American Jews who oppose the peace process for the Washington museum's refusal.

The Washington Post, which broke the story Saturday, quoted unidentified museum sources as saying members of the American Jewish community warned museum directors that Arafat was "Hitler incarnate." Arafat must not be welcomed in the memorial to Hitler's victims, they said.

"More than 50 years after the Holocaust, while we are in the midst of a peace process, I think it is our greatest victory if the Palestinian side understands and recognizes the great injustice that was done to the Jewish people," Vilan said.

Miles Lerman, the chair of the Holocaust Memorial Council that oversees the museum, said in an interview that the board was unanimous in deciding not to accord Arafat special attention were he to visit.

"There was no one in the leadership who argued we should receive him and give him formal status," Lerman said.

Lerman said that representatives of Americans for Peace Now, along with State Department officials and a local Arab-American businessman close to Arafat, might accompany Arafat to the museum in a private capacity. However, this could not be confirmed.

Asked to explain the board's decision, Lerman said: "The reason is very simple. The museum is a museum of history, and we are very careful to keep it out of politics. We are dedicated to keeping its purity. We felt that the visit of Mr. Arafat at such a crucial moment is very political. By receiving him, we'd be making a political statement."

Lerman emphasized that while in his official capacity, it is his "task to protect this institution," personally he supports the peace process and wants "to do everything to enhance its prospects."

Lerman said that just a few days ago, a State Department official proposed the visit and that the board deliberated before deciding.

Lerman said he did not speak with Arafat or any Israeli officials during the deliberations.

The Likud issued a statement critical of the Hakibbutz Ha'artzi movement, saying the decision to invite Arafat to Yad Mordechai "is one of those hurtful acts that hit an exposed nerve in the heart of every Jew."

A government official said, however, that there was no reason the government should refuse to allow Arafat to visit the Yad Mordechai museum, if he wanted to do so.

PM, Arafat meet Clinton

Mordechai told Indyk that a cold and suspicious atmosphere at the Washington talks would not help Netanyahu in his difficult mission, the report said.

Netanyahu's outline of the position he intends to convey to Clinton evidently impressed some of the foreign diplomats who attended a special briefing.

"I think he knows what he is doing and is confident he will succeed," a Western embassy aide said. "Netanyahu is a survivor. If he made it this far despite what happened in the past few weeks, he will make it in Washington, too."

The prime minister told his audience he will have "the necessary flexibility and firmness" for the upcoming talks.

"Both emanate from our belief that peace is absolutely necessary and within reach and there is an equal attitude on the Palestinian side," he said.

Netanyahu said IDF personnel would not move from their current West Bank bases of operation unless the PA fulfills its obligation to uproot terrorists.

"This is not a tactic, not a trick," he said. "It is the essence of the meaning of a contract...that not only the Israeli side lives up to its commitment, as it has, but that the Palestinian side does so as well.

"We intend to move forward with redeployment based on that understanding."

Netanyahu's aides were optimistic about the reception he would receive during his brief stay in Washington.

His staff was informed over the weekend that the dinner being tendered by Ambassador Eliahu Ben-Elissar in Netanyahu's honor might have to be moved from the Israeli Embassy to a Washington hotel because of the large number of local personalities anxious to attend.

Madeleine Albright

Netanyahu was also expected to meet with American Jewish leaders.

His meeting with Clinton was scheduled for Tuesday at 10 a.m. and will be over by noon at the latest. The "one hour-plus" formula was decided upon by White House officials as the ironclad time frame for Netanyahu's meeting, as well as that of Arafat, which begins at 10 a.m. Thursday.

The even-handed treatment being meted out requires that neither be put up at Blair House, since Netanyahu and Arafat do not have the same governmental rank.

Neither will be invited to have lunch with Clinton and there will be no joint news conferences after their respective meetings.

Hostile attitudes becoming a problem in Israel

By NECHEMIA MEYERS
Special to The CJN

Opinion

No one yet knows for sure what caused the fire that burned down Rehovot's popular Herzl Cafe last week, but since it was one of the few local eating places open on Friday night, most people here assume that it was torched by Haredim.

Violence, in any case, is not a one-way street in the "religious war" that is now raging in this country. For example, several young men in haredi garb have recently been beaten up by toughs who made it clear that they hated Haredim.

Most Israelis, whatever their attitude towards religion, would not resort to violence against the "other side." But people here are increasingly hostile to those whose lifestyle is different from their own. This was reflected in a recent Mina Zemach poll published by Yediot Aharonot.

Some 60 percent of the haredi respondents stated that they would not buy an apartment in a building where a significant percentage of the residents were secularists. And among the latter, fully 69 percent said they would not like to have haredi neighbors.

The conflict between these two groups has become particularly sharp since the passage of the 1998 budget.

Thanks to the political clout of the Haredim, who are an essential element in the Netanyahu coalition, they have received a whole series of benefits in this budget. For example, yeshivah students who are exempt from military service will now be getting housing benefits that are denied to discharged servicemen.

This measure has galled many people, one of them being Director General of the Finance Ministry Shmuel Slavin, who resigned his post shortly after the budget was passed.

But nowhere is there as much resentment as in the army. Most of it, to be sure, is unreported, but sometimes there is a leak, as occurred after Gen. Amiaz Sagis, commander of the army's Technology and Logistics Branch, spoke about the matter to a group of his fellow officers. According to Carmela Menashe, military correspondent of Israel Radio, Sagis ironically suggested that "IDF outposts in southern Lebanon be renamed yeshivot so that they would be able to receive the funds they require."

Sagis also reportedly expressed outrage at the fact that the public was being asked to contribute $8 million to a fund that would provide scholarships for ex-soldiers, while yeshivah students automatically enjoyed government scholarships (plus living allowances).

A recent study reported that 60 percent of haredi men are unemployed and that over half the income of haredi families comes from public funds (to which they contribute very little because most are too poor to pay taxes).

Physical attacks by one group against the other are fortunately still rare, but verbal abuse is growing day by day. Secularists routinely call Haredim parasites or even bloodsuckers.

Not to be outdone, spokesmen for the Haredim speak of their adversaries as enemies of Israel and refer to Conservative and Reform rabbis as priests.

There is no easy solution to this problem. For while it is possible for the secularists and the Haredim to live in separate neighborhoods, as most desire, they remain residents of the same tiny country. And unless they can learn to respect one another, life in that country may become unbearable for both.

Residents of B'nai Brak recently went to the polls to elect a new mayor and town council. The previous council collapsed as a result of infighting. B'nai Brak is one of Israel's poorest cities with an accumulated annual deficit of almost $30 million (U.S.). [Israpet]

About Nutrition

By LISA WEINBERG

Q. I love avocado. What is its caloric content?

A. Avocado, with its creamy texture, should definitely be regarded as a luxury food when it comes to watching fat and calories. One medium-sized avocado contains approximately 325 calories and 28 grams of fat. (That is more fat than most large orders of fries).

Q. I am always looking for warm, healthy snacks to give the kids after school. What would you suggest?

A. Soup is one of my favorite snack suggestions. It is filling and warming, and as long as it's not a cream soup, usually low in fat and calories. Hot chocolate made with milk would be a delicious protein and calcium-rich snack too. Cereal, which is filling and nutritious, is also a good snack.

Q. I notice all the winter vegetables making their way into the stores. I am wondering how they rank from a nutrition perspective?

A. Many winter vegetables are extremely nutritious, low in calories and high in vitamins. Squash comes in several varieties and is easy to prepare. Half a cup of any variety of winter squash contains only 39 calories and 0.6 grams of fat. I like to cut butternut squash in cubes, bake it, and drizzle with honey half way through baking for a caramelized, delicious side dish.

Doctors, med students to attend conference

TORONTO — Several Canadian physicians and medical students are expected to attend the ninth annual International Conference on Jewish Medical Ethics, to take place in San Francisco, Feb. 13 to 16.

The Canadian delegation will include Rabbi Baruch Taub of Thornhill's Beth Avraham Yoseph Congregation.

Jewish doctors, nurses, psychologists, interns and lay people will join the world's leading rabbinic authorities to explore current issues in medical ethics, and how they affect Jews.

Those include human cloning, child abuse, the ethics of managed care, drug pricing, the legal rights of the newborn, Alzheimer disease, reproductive technologies and organ transplants, to name a few.

In all, the conference is expected to attract up to 500 health care professionals and experts in Jewish law.

For details, call 1-800-258-4427.

Baycrest's new partnership

TORONTO — Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care and St. Joseph's Care Group in Thunder Bay are establishing a new partnership to share expertise on care for senior citizens.

Initially, the partnership will focus on providing educational opportunities for St. Joseph's health professionals. Using video conferencing, caregivers in Thunder Bay will have access to educational sessions conducted at Baycrest. The partnership will expand to allow doctors and other professionals in Thunder Bay to consult with geriatric specialists at Baycrest.

"At Baycrest, we think it's important to enrich the lives of the elderly no matter where they live," said Stephen Herbert, Baycrest president and CEO. "Through the caregivers at St. Joseph's, we're happy our expertise is going to benefit people in Thunder Bay and beyond."

"With the recent changes brought about by restructuring, our focus on caring for seniors is clear," said St. Joseph's president Carl White.

Israelis to find if cell phones are harmful

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — A recent visitor to Israel observed the following scenario: He was at a restaurant when he noticed two people sitting across from each other at a nearby table.

Each was talking into a cradled cellular telephone against his ear.

Since they were speaking at the same time, the visitor concluded that they were not speaking to each other.

Stories like these abound. Indeed, cellular phone use has become ubiquitous – some would say oppressive – in Israel.

It is virtually impossible in the country's cities to get through a restaurant meal or a movie without hearing cellular phone rings and conversations.

Now Israelis will find out if their obsession with cellular phones could lead to health problems.

The Jewish state will participate in a World Health Organization study on whether the use of a cellular phone can lead to an increase in brain tumors.

A recent study in the Australian Medical Journal suggested a link between the increased use of cellular phones and an increased number of such tumors in Australia.

By JOYCE SINGER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Harpist Erica Goodman of Trio Lyra has an enviable curriculum vitae. Her tale is not of cabbages and kings, but of presidents, prime ministers and queens.

Goodman's musical cohorts in Trio Lyra are Suzanne Shulman, flute, and Mark Childs, viola. The group, which will perform Jan. 24, 7:30 p.m., at the Bloor JCC, have consistently distinguished themselves individually and as a group, live and on CD.

Childs has performed with the Hamilton Philharmonic and the McGill Chamber Orchestra. Shulman has performed with the likes of Maureen Forrester and the late Glenn Gould.

And since 1978, these freelance musicians have played together as Trio Lyra, which focuses primarily on music from the late 19th and 20th centuries.

"I studied the harp at the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Mich., from the age of nine to 16. I challenged my way in, as I was younger than anyone else there. When I was 14, the orchestra was invited by Kennedy to perform on the White House lawn. On Aug. 6, 1962, we played a Strauss waltz. Our finest dancers from Interlochen also performed. Kennedy was even more handsome in person, with the most beautiful coloring and slightly sunbleached hair."

Disappointed Jackie Kennedy wasn't there

After the concert and a luncheon at the White House, they were allowed to explore the entire lower floor. "That would never be allowed today! Our only disappointment was that Jackie Kennedy wasn't there. We were all dying to see her, but she was in Italy at the time."

In 1981, Goodman performed for then prime minister Pierre Trudeau, Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip at Sussex Drive for the Constitution signing ceremony.

"Pierre Trudeau was sort of like Kennedy – incredibly charming, disarming and much better looking than on television. Prince Philip was rather jovial when I spoke with him. The Queen complimented me on my playing and so forth. I thought she had a lovely smile, but that she wasn't particularly knowledgeable or interested about music, to tell you the truth."

More recently, Goodman was scheduled to perform with an orchestra starring the Three Tenors, but the concert was cancelled. "We were supposed to play in Osaka, on New Year's Eve, and hopefully we'll be able to do this some other time," she says.

At the Jan.24 concert, Trio Lyra will perform pieces by Jewish-Canadian composers Ben Steinberg, Srul Irving Glick, Lothar Klein and Milton Barnes, all of whom are expected to attend.

For tickets, call 416-924-6211.

Group to perform composer's suite about childhood neighborhood

By DOROTHY LICHTBLAU
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — "It's extremely logical that Harbord Street be played at the Bloor JCC," composer/-conductor Milton Barnes reflects about his piece, which will be performed by the chamber ensemble Trio Lyra at their Jan. 24 concert.

"I've been going to the Y since I was 12 years old, in fact, I remember the old location on Brunswick near College Street, and I'm pleased and proud that my work will be featured."

An accomplished artist, whose compositions have been performed by international musicians such as Liona Boyd, Neville Marriner and Rivka Golani, Barnes' suite about his childhood neighborhood is part of a program that showcases distinctive Canadian talent.

Barnes prides himself on having created a body of work that does not pattern itself solely on European classical traditions.

Harbord Street is composed of six movements that fondly evoke the places, events and people of the lively quarter. The work grew out of a 1991 commission by the Kosower family, whose Harbord Street Bakery has been a longtime landmark in the area.

Since the piece was to celebrate Goldie Kosower's 80th birthday, Barnes sought to combine the color of the neighborhood with a tribute to her. He arranged the work for an up-coming CBC concert by Trio Lyra, whose sound revolves around the harp of Erica Goodman. The result was typical of Barnes – it combined the materials of the world he knew and loved with musical forms he had mastered.

Milton Barnes' composition to be played by Trio Lyra

Seated in his comfortable living room in midtown Toronto, Barnes rolls a homemade cigarette, as he thinks back to earlier years. Strong featured with longish hair, the 66-year-old composer is fun-loving, yet dead serious about his music.

For a while it was assumed that Barnes would join his father's construction business, but it never happened. Turned on by jazz and popular music, Barnes played the drums and guitar, and throughout high school at Oakwood Collegiate, he played with various bands. As a kid he thought he would be a band leader, but when it came time to consider further training, Barnes chose the Royal Conservatory of Music rather than a school that focused on modern genres.

At the conservatory his teacher was noted composer John Weinzweig, who motivated him to study composition. Barnes grins as he says, "For some strange reason, it presented a greater challenge."

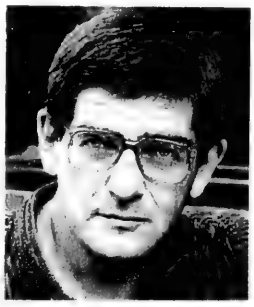
Earning an income as a classical composer was deemed virtually impossible. Undaunted, Barnes commenced writing music for theatre at the University of Toronto. The job also required that Barnes act as musical conductor for the shows, which led to his discovery of a new love.

Not content with half measures, Barnes threw himself into the study of conducting. In 1958, long after he thought he had finished with formal studies, he found himself at the Vienna Academy of Music, concentrating on the art of the conductor. Afterward, he developed a career leading various Ontario symphonies and his own Toronto Repertory Orchestra.

When still a youth, Barnes says he realized that to do anything well, "you have to put all your apples in one basket." Excited by music unlike anything else, he responded to its call, but was smart enough to know that to get the most from his muse he had to be a dedicated follower. He has been writing music for over 40 years.

Often Barnes' Russian-Jewish heritage emerges in his work. "Well over a third of my repertoire of works is based on Hebraic subject matter," he says.

As well as composing works, Barnes has arranged Sephardi and Ashkenazi melodies for classical instrumental and choral concerts.



Milton Barnes

Though he grew up in a traditional Jewish home and though Judaism has continually been part of his life, the composer has never wanted to confine himself only to religious music. Rather, his forays into Hebraic themes and songs have been a way to explore Jewish history and identity.

"I relate naturally and instinctively to the Hebraic music I heard from the cantors in the synagogue when I was a kid," he says.

Jazz and pop are the other big influences on his style. "I realized that I had to write what I relate to and what's around me, rather than trying to write European music or other people's national idioms. I absolutely accepted that I am not Beethoven. I come from Toronto, Canada."

Throughout his career, Barnes has guarded against the lure of imitation and fashion. For the last 25 years, he has mostly worked as a composer and has nearly 100 works to this credit, including symphonies, concertos, vocal and chamber music, as well as scores for theatre, television and films.

New magazine a boon for the wandering Jew

By JOSEPH SERGE
Arts Editor

TORONTO — A new magazine just hit the stands and the fact that it's free isn't necessarily the best thing about it.

The Wanderer, a Magazine of Jewish Heritage & Travel, is the brainchild of two local freelance travel writers, regular CJN contributor Bill Gladstone and frequent Jewish Tribune columnist Barbara Kingstone.

The premiere issue is a 20-page glossy filled with stories about Jewish sites in Philadelphia, Nevis, Spain, Cairo, Belarus and more. It also has feature stories on museums in Jerusalem and a feature on the Radanites, a group of medieval

Authors & Poets

When Pesach arrives this spring, so too will the second annual CJN Literary Supplement. We therefore again invite the authors and poets among our readers to submit their works to us. We are looking only for works of fiction or poetry that explore Jewish themes.

The works must be original and previously unpublished. The fiction cannot be longer than 1,500 words. We must receive your works no later than March 16, 1998 at The CJN, 1500 Don Mills Rd., Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return them, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so. We look forward to receiving your submissions.

The editor.

CJN Purim Art Contest

It's time again for our fourth annual Purim Art Contest and we are looking for drawings about Purim from students in elementary school.

Who can enter: Children from grades 1 to 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes: The judges will choose one drawing from two different students in each grade. These "winning" drawings will be published in The CJN on March 12. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a cheque for $25.

How to enter: You may submit as many drawings as you want. However, they should not be too small or too large. Please paint, draw, or color bright, bold, colorful pictures. You may use markers, crayons, paint or pencils. And you can even give them a title. Please send us your name, address, phone number, school and grade along with your drawings.

You may mail or deliver your drawings to: CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 1500 Don Mills Road, Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 27, 1998. We will undoubtedly receive many wonderful submissions from children all across the country. But only 12 of the drawings will be chosen for publication as "winners." The judges will base their decision on a number of factors such as: the use of color, the imaginative quality of the drawing and the way it tells an aspect of the story of Purim. The judges' decisions will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and quality of submissions received.

How the Winner will be announced: The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of Shabbat on Friday, March 6, 1998.

When the prizes will be awarded: The "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN of March 12, 1998. Have fun and good luck.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Régie des Loteries et courses du Québec.

YOUNG VILNA GROUP AT YIDDISHLAND CAFE

The Young Vilna (Yung-Vilne) Group consisted of Yiddish poets, novelists, painters and musicians who were active in Vilnius before the war. Though some perished in the Holocaust or afterwards in the Soviet Union, they and their literary works have acquired near-legendary status.

Young Vilna came together in 1929 as a group of young artists whose work continued to mature over the ensuing decade, particularly influenced by two phenomena of the period: the struggle for Jewish minority rights and the emergence of new forms of literary expression.

According to some, the group's mentor was Moshe Kulbak, a poet and novelist whose poetry indicates both a reverence for tradition and a taste for modernity. Kulbak's work reflects the vitality of Jews working the soil and a love of Vilnius, and captures the excitement of a society being transformed by industrial development, revolution and war.

On Jan. 25 Yiddishland Cafe presents three talented performers in The Poets of Young Vilna (Di Poetn Fun Yung-Vilne), a presentation in Yiddish and English of poetry and song from some of the group's most prominent members.

The program features readings by writer-translator Chaya Thalenberg, songs by mezzo-soprano Stella Walker, and the piano accompaniment of Sageev Oore.

The material consists of poetry and songs from some of the group's most prominent members: Moshe Kulbak, Chaim Grade, Abraham Sutzkever, Leyzer Wolfe, Shmerke Kaczerginski and Peretz Miransky – the last of whom lived and worked in Toronto until his death several years ago.

Workmen's Circle, 471 Lawrence Ave. W. Sun. Jan 25, 7:30 p.m. (doors open 7 p.m.) Reserved seating. $12 in advance; a few tickets may be available for $15 at the door. Tickets, 635-0720.

Magazine on Jewish travel

Jewish traders who travelled from Western Europe to the Orient.

It also has a helpful Question and Answer section plus a book column and an arts and leisure section.

Co-publisher Gladstone said each issue will feature at least one story on Israel in addition to features on other places in the Diaspora.

"Whenever I travel I always notice the Jewish sites and try to visit synagogues, etc.," he said. "I feel there are a lot of people with similar interests who may also want to visit such places.

"The Wanderer is a magazine that people can take with them on their travels and will serve as a reference tool on places of Jewish interest."

The articles in this premiere issue are very informative and the helpful "fact box" at the end of each travel story – "everything you need to know before you visit" – is a good idea. Future issues can undoubtedly benefit from the input of a graphic designer.

The Wanderer will be published quarterly. Free copies are available at select bookstores, synagogues, restuarants and other Jewish outlets around the city. A limited number of free copies are available by mail. Call 416-967-3930 or e-mail [bstone@pathcom.com].

Realtors take the 3Rs to the entrepreneurial level

BY ADAM BELLO
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Realtors Richard and Alex Pilarski believe a business is only as good as the people who run it.

The brothers' 12-year-old franchise Re/Max Realtron Realty Inc. (RRR), has become an industry leader in residential resale. Recently, RRR was ranked fifth out of 1,000 companies on the Toronto Real Estate Board, based on volume of listings sold in the first half of 1997. A third office is set to open in Markham, joining its operations in Willowdale and Thornhill.

"The key in raising the calibre of our business comes from creating an approach that has made the good agents even better," says Richard.

The company's more than 120 sale representatives have been trained in time management, planning and business communications, and 22 representatives have been recipients of the Re/Max Hall of Fame award.

"We help our people by teaching them how to run their own business, and assist them in achieving their goals," Alex says. "A lot of the time [for real estate agents] is spent doing unproductive activities, when they should be concentrating on helping customers get the best price."

Developing a relationship between business and customer service has been a lifelong process for Richard and Alex, now ages 51 and 45.

They were born in Poland in the post-Holocaust period. In 1958, the family moved to Barbados, where their father opened a clothing store.

When the Pilarskis settled in Toronto in the mid-1960s, Richard pursued a computer sciences career as a professional engineer for IBM. However, he did not find the same level of satisfaction he had experienced when he worked in his father's store.

In 1973, Richard joined Alex, who was in real estate sales. Two years later, the brothers started their own company, Highgate Realty. Facing the domination of the real estate market by major trust companies, the Pilarskis learned a valuable lesson.

"If you want to make your mark in the business, you have to be able to draw on a strong real estate image that communicates trust and support to the public," Richard says.

The search for a recognizable image led to their signing with major franchisor Century 21 in the late 1970s. In 1979, however, when Alex was approached to manage an office for Canada Permanent Trust, the brothers decided to part ways.

Richard sold their franchise the next year and began a computer venture with their other brother Joseph, but they continued to think about working together in real estate.

The emergence of Re/Max in 1980 provided the brothers with what they were seeking: a recognized franchising system that allowed realtors greater control.

"From day one we knew this was what we wanted," Richard said. "It let us set our tone for the business, working in the way we knew best."

Their Re/Max Realtron franchise, which they opened in 1985, used leading edge technology. In fact, the combining of real estate and electronics was the source for the name Realtron. The company was the first to use computers at the reception desk and to use pagers.

Richard says while the system is commonplace today, it was still considered new to the profession, even in the early 1990s.

More recently, Realtron designed a well received software application for presentations. Built on the Microsoft PowerPoint platform, Richard says it has allowed representatives to more effectively make home buying/sales presentations to prospective clients.

Bernard Raskin, owner of the rights of Re/Max in Israel, is negotiating to use this program.

PA faces numerous internal difficulties

By PINHAS INBARI and ZIV HELLMAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

Commentary

With Benjamin Netanyahu's meetings in Washington expected to be devoted to the issue of redeployments in the West Bank, a number of Palestinian Authority (PA) officials have stated that if no breakthrough is forthcoming, the result will be "an explosion." Some of them are warning of an imminent renewal of the intifadah.

A simplistic reading would take the situation at face value. The genuinely pessimistic expectations Palestinians have with regard to the Israeli government's readiness to fulfil its Oslo obligations are explained as the sole trigger for the threats of violence.

The truth, however, is much more complex, and the latest Palestinian warnings have as much, if not more, to do with internal difficulties within the PA as they do with the exact percentages of upcoming redeployments.

Indeed, the PA's internal difficulties are much more severe than usually depicted in the media, which is fixated on the ups and downs of the latest round of negotiations.

For one thing, the continuing struggle between the executive and legislative branches of the PA has been sharpening in recent months. The legislature, which since its inception has insisted on the adoption of proper norms of government, extended those demands to include the dissolution of the entire cabinet and its replacement with a government composed of technocrats.

Even Arafat himself was not immune from calls for his resignation from the position of head of the PA's Council of Ministers. As an indication of how far things have gone, it was no less than the Fatah faction in the legislature which, ignoring pleas to "be considerate of the delicate state of negotiations with Israel," told Arafat in a stormy session that he was the problem.

Brandishing accusations of widespread corruption in the PA, they asserted that the solution to the constitutional dispute in the PA lies "in Arafat's hands."

Another serious crisis facing the PA involves its economic future as its aid dry up. In contrast to initial rosy reports of what went on behind closed doors at the last donor nation conference held in Paris in December, it now transpires that the donors refused to guarantee any further grants beyond the original five-year plan to which they committed themselves in 1993.

That five-year stretch will end this year, and it does not even appear as if those commitments will be fully honored. Last year only about one-third of the payments promised by donor countries were disbursed.

Without any solid guarantees of more funding, the PA's economic outlook is grave.

The two crises, constitutional and financial, are really aspects of the same problem the PA has had since its founding: The PA leadership thought it could create an entity that functioned along the same cozy, monopolistic lines that kept the PLO running for decades, as far as possible from the demands of transparency and accountability demanded of modern nations.

It didn't count on the strong negative reaction it is now facing, both from the international community, which has tired of giving money to an entity that lacks accounting supervision, and from the Palestinian population itself, through its representatives in the legislature who want to march forward with a properly operating government.

The PA leadership's response to these crises is predictable: It keeps stressing that "the Palestinian revolution" has not yet ended.

The strategy is to hearken back to the PLO's days as a "revolutionary organization" in order to justify the current regime; after all, one can't expect a society in the throes of revolutionary struggle to produce normal governmental institutions.

Which brings us back to the threats of violence against Israel, an integral part of that strategy of keeping alive the atmosphere of revolution in order to silence those calling for normal institution-building instead.

Unfortunately, many aspects of Israeli policy on the PA are playing into the hands of this "revolutionary leadership."

By dragging its feet on the redeployment question, it is giving that leadership a subject around which it can rally its citizenry. In addition, based on the assumption – strongly urged by the PA – that only an authoritarian Palestinian regime can fight terrorism, Israel has consistently worked to shield the PA from World Bank fiscal accounting demands, and aided many PA elements in placing money in bank accounts that are beyond supervisory controls.

Based purely on security considerations, Israel needs to seriously reconsider these policies. The list of security demands on the PA that the Israeli government is currently composing in its security memorandum is certainly important – there can be no compromising when security is threatened – but it will miss the mark if the larger questions are not addressed as well.

In the long run, security demands can only be made on the sort of stable and properly functioning Palestinian regime that the World Bank – and the Fatah faction in the Palestinian Council – are trying to bring about. When the revolutionary leadership in the PA feels that the internal Palestinian situation has deteriorated to such an extent that only making good on its threats against Israel will save it, security memorandums will be the last thing on its mind.

The writers are, respectively, director of research and senior research at the Institute for Peace Implementation, a Jerusalem-based think-tank studying permanent status issues.

Power forward Henrich hitting his hockey stride

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Michael Henrich. Remember the name.

A native of Toronto, Henrich is a strapping six foot three, 208-pound forward with the Barrie Colts – one of the top players on one of the top teams in the Ontario Hockey League (OHL).

At 17, he's beginning to hit his stride as a hockey player. After a rookie season in 1996-97 in which he saw only spot duty, he's played his way onto the team's number 1 line with star centreman Daniel Tkaczuk and speedy left winger Brian Barker.

Together, they've contributed a potful of goals to the Colt's cause. In his first 39 games, Henrich bulged the twine 26 times and added 10 helpers, for 36 points. He's +8 on the balance sheet and he's scored seven game-winning goals, tying him with Maxim Spiridonov of London Spitfires for the league lead in that category.

Tkaczuk, meanwhile, recorded 41 points in 30 games while Barker has 12 goals and 29 assists in 39 games. They're the trio that coach Bert Templeton calls upon to energize the team and score timely goals.

Besides serving as the line's trigger man, Henrich is feeling more comfortable using his size, a tremendous asset in today's hockey world. He's winning one-on-one battles for the puck and he's not afraid to bang and crash.

That potent package combining size, grit and scoring ability hasn't gone unnoticed by those in the know. OHL central scouting has him rated as the league's number 2 prospect for next summer's NHL amateur draft, behind only David Legwand of Detroit.

Kevin McClelland, assistant coach with the Colts, believes Henrich has what it takes to make it in the NHL. If he were a scout he'd rate him high, McClelland said.

Templeton saw his potential when he was still in midget hockey, McClelland continued. In his second year, "he's expected to be a leader and come and contribute every night. He has great potential to score goals."

Asked to compare him to an NHL player, McClelland, who played 14 years in the league, said he most resembles the Flyers' John Leclair because of his size, scoring ability and skating speed.

One of the factors NHL scouts will consider when rating Henrich is the amorphous category called "intangibles," stuff like leadership, character, determination.

"Mike's a great guy. He's willing to learn and he gets along with the guys. He's a great kid," McClelland said.

Michael Henrich

For his part, Henrich exudes confidence, though not cockiness, in his skills as well as a desire to be considered among the elite of junior players.

His number 2 rating in the OHL "boosts confidence, but it's pressure as well," he said. "You look at the guy ahead and say, 'why can't I get ahead of him'."

Looking ahead to next season, he admits he'd love to be asked to try out for the national junior team. He wasn't too disappointed not being asked this season, since the team had only one or two 17-year-olds.

But his ultimate goal is to play next year in the NHL and he pointed to outstanding junior-aged players like Joe Thornton and Patrick Marleau, who earned spots on their NHL clubs.

"Why not be one of them?" Henrich asked.

Henrich is dedicated to becoming a top player. After scoring only nine goals with the Colts last year and getting limited ice time, he worked hard during the summer to prepare himself for training camp.

Part of that training regimen was participating with the Canadian team at the Maccabiah Games in Israel. Henrich enjoyed the experience thoroughly.

Playing under a Stanley Cup-winning coach, Jacques Demers, was a particular treat. "He's a good motivator. I think he helped me in that department," Henrich said.

"He told me I'm big and strong, 'use your body,'" Henrich recounted. "'People look for that. You've got to play a big man's style as a power forward.'"

During the tournament, Demers juggled all the lines except the team's number 1 unit of Mikhail Nemirovsky (Colonial and East Coast leagues), David Nemirovsky (Florida Panthers) and Aaron Brand (St. John's Maple Leafs). Henrich was teamed at various times with ex-NHLer Brian Wilks and American Hockey League player Harold Hersh, among others.

The Canadian squad of pros and junior-calibre players "really kicked some butt in the tournament," Henrich said. Although the American team of mostly college players worked hard and were led by ex-NHLer Mike Hartman, the Canadians matched them in intensity but far exceeded them in talent.

After returning from Israel, Henrich continued to work out and he arrived in camp in excellent shape.

"That kind of helped give me a good start to the new year," he said.

Chanukah Continuity Campaign

As our way of helping to ensure the irreversibility of Jewish continuity, The CJN is launching a special continuity subscription campaign in time for Chanukah. We have decided to offer our readers a special, one-time opportunity to provide their children or their grandchildren with their own subscription to The CJN.

A gift subscription for your child or grandchild, who does not already subscribe to The CJN, will cost $14.95 (taxes included) for one full year to anywhere in Canada.

Over the past few years, The CJN has grown and evolved into an award-winning national community newspaper widely read both here in Canada and abroad. We are extremely proud of this publication. Could there be a better gift at Chanukah for your child or grandchild than the opportunity to feel part of the Jewish community?

Sincerely,

The editor.

The Inside Back

ספרותנו

מאת: יעל זליגר

בגדו של חפלאפל

WE SELL GE FOR LESS

A great dip or spread!

2 tblsp. margarine
1 garlic clove, minced
1-3/4 cup chopped carrots
6 tblsp. cashews (for cashew "butter")
1/4 cup chopped onion
1/2 tsp. curry powder
1/4 cup coarsely chopped cashews

Cook carrots until tender. Put 6 tblsp. cashews in food processor and process into "butter". Over low heat, sauté onion and garlic in margarine, stirring occasionally until limp (mixture not you). Stir in curry and cook a few more seconds. Process all ingredients except chopped cashews. Taste and add salt if needed. Stir in chopped cashews. Keep chilled. Bring to room temperature before serving.

About families

Dear Susan,

I have been divorced for one year and I feel I am ready to think about dating again. However, I have two sons, ages eight and 11, and I am very worried about how this would affect my relationship with them. How do I broach the subject with them?

Dear Reader,

I applaud you for taking the time to consider your sons' needs and their possible reactions to your dating.

Just as you have taken time to emotionally prepare for this step, your sons will need time to come to grips with the possibility of their mother dating. Be prepared for a wide variety of responses from your sons, including indifference, denial, anxiety, over-protectiveness and anger. Since your sons are at different developmental stages, their reactions will reflect their sibling order and emotional maturity. Give each of your boys the opportunity to express his full range of feelings, even if those feelings are negative and difficult for you to hear. They will need to finally lay to rest any hope that their mommy and daddy will magically reunite and accept the end of your marriage before they will be able to accommodate the possibility of your embarking on other relationships. They may feel protective of their father, particularly if he is not in a relationship at present.

They will first need to accept the idea of your dating before they will be able to deal with the reality. You should not spend time talking about the implications of any serious relationship until this becomes a real possibility. To broach that eventuality now would only serve to overload your sons, and to increase their anxiety and insecurity.

Always make sure you are honest with them as to how you are coping and how any new relationship is progressing.

Above all, you must reassure them that your dating will not impact on your relationship with them, and that despite any new relationship you may at some point become involved in, you will always remain first and foremost their mom.

Netanyahu calls Ne'eman report 'important step'

By HERB KEINON
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Finance Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman presented the recommendations of his seven-member committee on conversions to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last week, seven months, 70 sessions and 150 hours of formal discussions after it first began work last June.

The panel's two main recommendations are the establishment of a joint conversion institute to be run by the three major streams of Judaism, which will educate prospective converts, and the establishment by the Chief Rabbinate of special rabbinical courts that will perform the actual conversions.

Netanyahu congratulated the panel on its work, calling it "an important step in finding an all-encompassing solution to the conversion issue." He passed the panel's finding on to the Chief Rabbinate "in the hope" that it will be adopted.

A letter that accompanied the findings called for the recommendations to be approved by the Chief Rabbinate. After this is done, Ne'eman wrote, the seven members of his panel – including one each from the Reform and Conservative movements – will formally sign the recommendations.

"The panel," wrote Neeman, "placed before it the legal situation that has existed on this matter since the establishment of the state, and also the acute problem facing the masses of immigrants from the CIS, who immigrated to Israel under the Law of Return, have integrated into the educational system, the army, the public and private sector, the

Bilateral trade up 40 percent

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The first figures are in, and what a difference a year makes.

On Jan. 1, 1997, the free trade deal between Canada and Israel came into force, knocking down most trade barriers between the two countries. Observers did expect a rise in bilateral trade, but in just a year the numbers show that commerce between the two nations has taken off.

Canada-Israel Free Trade

Two-way trade between Jerusalem and Ottawa in 1997 jumped by 40 percent over the year before, to roughly $440 million (US), according to initial figures released recently by Israel's Ministry of Industry and Trade. Final numbers will be released in April, but experts feel they will reflect the same overall trends.

Israel last year imported $294 million worth of Canadian goods, a 55 percent jump over the year before, with a big boost in high-tech machinery and telecommunications equipment (up 124 percent). Other growth areas were chemical products (up 34 percent); paper products (32 percent); base metals (10 percent of all imports); and transport equipment, including aircraft (up 136 percent).

Israeli exports to Canada last year totalled $146 million, an increase of 18 percent over 1996. Leading the way were machinery and electrical equipment (up seven percent); precious stones, including diamonds (11 percent); chemical products, including pharmaceuticals (28 percent); and rubber and plastics, whose sales doubled over 1996.

"I'm very happy," said Yael Varsano-Barzilay, Israel's Toronto-based trade commissioner to Canada. "These numbers are very impressive. They show the promise that free trade has, especially in the high-tech area."

The News in Brief

CANADA

Bullet Fired Through Shul

WINNIPEG — Someone fired a bullet from a high-powered rifle straight through the building housing Herzlia Synagogue some time during the night on Dec. 16 or 17.

No one was in the building, but police are investigating the crime, and have referred it to their hate crimes detectives.

Rabbi Yaacov Benamou, spiritual leader of the South End Orthodox synagogue, described it as a "random incident," and said police have "no signs" that it was a hate crime. Rabbi Benamou emphasized that the shooting was "a very isolated incident," adding he's convinced it had "nothing to do with Jewish people." He and synagogue members he's talked to believe it was the work of "a group of teenagers vandalizing."

ISRAEL

Museum Flap

JERUSALEM — Two Israeli Holocaust memorial sites have extended invitations to Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat – after the Washington museum dedicated to those who perished at the hands of the Nazis said it would not receive Arafat in an official capacity.

The position taken by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum set off a heated debate in Israel and the United States over whether it was appropriate for the Palestinian leader to visit the site.

Meanwhile, against the backdrop of the uproar, the administration of the museum in Washington was reportedly reconsidering its position.

WORLD

UN Watch

GENEVA — UN Watch chair Morris B. Abram recently issued a warning that the UN is being abused and misused for anti-Semitic purposes. The group is a Geneva-based monitoring body affiliated with World Jewish Congress.

Helping Pollard

NEW YORK — A major campaign to win the release of Jonathan Pollard after 12 years in prison will be launched for the first time by the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations.

The decision to mount the campaign and to write to President Bill Clinton asking for Pollard's immediate release came after a meeting at which strong support was expressed for the former Navy intelligence analyst convicted of spying for Israel in 1986. He was sentenced to life in prison and Clinton has twice rejected requests for commutation of his sentence.

Israeli Request Refused

LONDON — Jordan's King Hussein is insisting that the chief of the Israeli foreign intelligence service be fired.

The king also rejected an Israeli request to reopen the Mossad office in the Jordanian capital of Amman, which was shut down after a bungled attempt to assassinate Hamas political leader Khaled Mashaal last September.

Monument Unveiled

MOSCOW — A monument to one of the most famous Yiddish writers ever has been unveiled in Kiev.

The 10-foot monument to Shalom Aleichem was erected in the downtown section of the city, next to the house in which the writer lived at the turn of the century. Renovations have begun on the house, which is slated to become a Shalom Aleichem museum.

Shul for 10,000 in Ukraine

MOSCOW — Construction of a synagogue expected to hold 10,000 worshippers has begun in a Ukrainian town with fewer than a dozen Jews.

The synagogue, billed by its founders as the world's largest, is an undertaking of the international Bratslaver chassidic movement.

It is being built in the town of Uman to serve the needs of chassidic pilgrims who come once a year at Rosh Hashanah to visit the grave of Rabbi Nachman of Bratslav.

Torah Scroll in Belarus

MOSCOW — A Reform congregation in Belarus has received a Torah scroll as a gift from its sister congregation in Oklahoma.

The scroll, which the Minsk congregation Simcha received in a ceremony in the Belarussian capital last week, is being kept at a private apartment.

Red Heifer Impure

JERUSALEM — A red cow named Melody, once thought to have fulfilled a biblical requirement, has been declared impure.

According to Jewish scripture, the ashes of a red heifer are required to purify Jews before they can enter the Temple in Jerusalem.

Melody's birth last year was seen by some haredi Jews as a sign that the time had come to build the Third Temple, which some consider to be one of the preconditions for the arrival of the Messiah.

There's still some hope.

The rabbi who revised his earlier hopes that Melody was a red heifer, said Melody is pregnant with the seed of a reddish bull.

"We'll check in six months and who knows, maybe we'll have a red heifer then," he said.

Brian Morris national chair of CIC

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Becoming the national chair of the Canada-Israel Committee (CIC) was a trial by fire for Brian Morris.

The 51-year-old Bay Street lawyer and former national president of B'nai Brith Canada assumed the top lay post at the CIC on the same weekend as the forged passport affair blew up, with its potential to irreparably harm relations between Jerusalem and Ottawa.

Prime Minister Jean Chrétien called the use of the forgeries by two Mossad agents "unacceptable," and opposition parties demanded sanctions be imposed on Israel. In all, it was an ugly episode that strained relations between friends.

After a week of intense diplomatic manoeuvering, including the recall of Canada's ambassador to Israel, the crisis began to ease. Israel offered an apology and assurances that it would never again use Canadian passports, real or forged, in covert operations.

Morris believes the passport affair won't hurt long-term relations between the two countries. As far as he's concerned, it was a good litmus test of those ties.

"Things could have gone any which way, depending on the strength of the relationship" he told The CJN in a recent interview. "It's evidence that bilateral relations are strong, very strong."

For Morris, a former Montrealer and McGill University graduate, the episode was also evidence of the CIC's ability to act swiftly and effectively to calm the waters and contain the damage.

Morris himself spent a week in Israel following the passport affair, meeting with Knesset members to patch things up and clear the air. He found that the CIC "was not exactly on Knesset members' radar screens," but by the end of the mission, MKs were listening and "actually took advice." Given that success, Morris promises the CIC will do "a lot more legwork in the Knesset."

Brian Morris

The new chair acknowledges that the CIC, with headquarters in Ottawa and offices in Toronto and Montreal, has a low profile. It likes it that way, working behind the scenes to lobby government officials, parliamentarians, the media and others with influence in a variety of areas on Israel's behalf. It's been compared to the powerful U.S. America-Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), but the CIC operates with much less fanfare.

It goes the low-key route, preferring to play its cards close to its vest and take quiet satisfaction in the end result: mostly solid relations between Canada and Israel.

Founded after the 1967 Six Day War, the CIC encompasses other national Jewish organizations, Zionist groups across the ideological spectrum and all branches of Judaism. Morris says the Canadian Jewish community is "lucky," in that it speaks "with one voice" on matters of Israel, through the CIC.

He adds that the "animosity" that once existed between Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith, both constituent members of the CIC, has "dissipated."

Last year, the CIC facilitated the first-ever meeting between a Canadian foreign minister and all the major national Jewish organizations. It also helped organize the successful Canadian trade mission to Israel, led by then industry minister Art Eggleton.

These days find the CIC working in a number of bilateral areas, including joint research and development, agriculture and human rights initiatives.

Here at home, it has worked on opening a dialogue with the Reform party and the Bloc Québécois.

Morris is particularly proud of the CIC's efforts to help push through the Canada-Israel Free Trade Accord, which came into effect a year ago after some pointed debate in Parliament and has since boosted two-way trade by 40 percent (see story, page 1).

He feels that every step between the two countries helps, even in the face of long-standing sticking points, like Canada's refusal to recognize Israel's post-'67 borders, including eastern Jerusalem.

"Every time you increase the bilateral relationship, you raise ties and strengthen them," he explains.

The Jewish state, he adds,

RRSP'S – TO BORROW OR NOT TO BORROW: WHAT KIND OF RETIREMENT DO YOU ENVISION?

One of the best strategies to achieve a financially secure retirement, is to maximize your RRSP contribution every year throughout your working life ... but then again, let's be realistic, the vast majority of Canadians don't take advantage of the annual $13,500 RRSP contribution limit. In fact, only 24 per cent of Canadians actually made the maximum RRSP contribution in 1996.

It's unfortunate that most people don't have the funds to maximize their allowable contributions ... because with the compounding of interest over time, what we are really talking about ... is a considerable sum of money.
Here's some food for thought:

➤ In 1996, only 12 per cent of Canadians took a loan to finance all or part of their RRSP contribution.

➤ While you may want to assess the value of taking on "bad" debt (i.e., borrowing for consumer purchases), you should carefully consider "good" debt (i.e., debt you use to invest for the future).

➤ Take a careful look at the average returns for funds over the past 5 or 10 years, you'll notice in the vast majority of cases, their growth significantly exceeds the current cost of borrowing (despite the fact that in recent weeks we've seen interest rates spike upwards - but then again, they were at 30 year lows, so they had room to move up and still remain comparatively low).

➤ Psychologically speaking, most people have a phobia about borrowing, period, let alone for an investment that will realize it's dividend in the distant future ... however, it's not true that RRSP's are just for the future. I personally counsel my clients to consider their RRSP a 'live with,' use and grow with investment'. That means, there are some very exciting and clever ways to use your RRSP today to enhance your business or personal life, not just in the distant future, and in most cases you can do that and earn even larger returns ... talk about a win, win, win situation.

The Western Wall Tunnels

Yonina was our guide, an enthusiastic, articulate woman in her mid-20s. She met us, a group of 20 journalists, in a dimly-lit, low-ceilinged room that I subsequently learned was once called the "Donkey's Stable."

Moving fluidly between heavily-accented, Brooklynesque-English and the clipped, guttural sound of flawless, Israeli Hebrew she introduced herself as the person who would lead us on a tour of the Western Wall Tunnels.

It was Tuesday, a lucky day for sure, the first full day of my brief visit to Israel last month. I was delighted to be inside the Donkey's Stable, hardly able to control the excitement and sense of anticipation surging within me at the thought of imminently stepping into the tunnels. Moreover, it was raining heavily outside.

In 1968, the government of Israel undertook the project of uncovering the full length of the Western Wall, the last remnant of the Second Temple built by Herod. In 1985, the project was completed.

Visitors to the Western Wall see approximately 160 metres of the "exposed" wall that extends to the southern extremity of the Temple Mount and of which only about half has been designated as the public plaza familiar to us all as a place of public prayer and private consolation.

But these visible 160 metres of the Western Wall are not its full measure. The wall continues northward from the point that it seemingly disappears inside the synagogue at the north end of the plaza.

Since 1985, the entire length of the wall that continues uninterrupted northward from the place of public prayer has been revealed. And the visitor to the Western Wall may now walk its full northward length, some 328 metres, hand on wall virtually the entire time, as mine was, through these tunnels.

The goosebumps began right away.

From the Donkey's Stable we moved into a long room, really only a long passageway, facing east. A series of arches are noticeable to our left as we continue moving in the direction of the wall.

Yonina pointed out that at the time of the Second Temple, a large bridge existed spanning the valley between, what is now the Old City to the west and the Temple Mount itself. The bridge enabled the people who lived in the (then) Upper City, and what would now be the Jewish quarter in the Old City to walk to the Temple Mount. An aqueduct bringing water for the Temple was also carried along this bridge.

When the Temple Mount was under siege by the Romans, the Jews destroyed the bridge to deny its use to the Romans. After their conquest and destruction of the Temple, the Romans rebuilt the bridge.

Yonina explained the arches that we see now are likely remnants of that bridge.

We continue our slow, awestruck walk through this chamber and then turn left, northward. We are underneath more arches. There are markings and chiselled cuttings in the walls and rocks, and small outcroppings of edges and blunted surfaces on other rocks. Indeed Yonina pointed to some of them as signatures and signposts from our past that we should notice, but being pressed for time, she did not elaborate. To archeologists, architects and engineers, their structural significance is undoubtedly obvious. To me however, they are more mysterious pieces of a jiggled puzzle of an ancient time, long past, but never forgotten.

The light is too dim for me to be able to jot down notes legibly and neatly. At that moment it hardly matters anyway, for my mind is racing to far off corners of a questing imagination trying to envision who and what may have travelled these same paths before.

We pass through more narrow passageways into another room with a large arch. Yonina draws our attention to yet another arch that she says is the famous "Wilson Arch," named after the British archeologist who searched out the continuation of the Western Wall in the middle of the last century. Wilson's Arch actually joins to the Western Wall and is the largest arch of the former bridge joining the Temple Mount to the former Upper City.

From this area we are led down a set of recently-built stairs. We again turn our gaze northward and are ready to set our feet upon the course of road that travels adjacent to the length of the full Western Wall.

Every few paces we stop, our eyes open wide, to behold yet another marking or another sight of daunting significance. Hasmonean blends with Herodian; bedrock blends with quarried rock; past blends with present.

At one point along the wall we stand opposite a large carved area that we are told is the point in the wall closer than any other to where the Holy of Holies once stood. Immediately, I reach into my pocket to retrieve a note given to me before my departure for Israel, by a friend on the eve of major surgery.

Along with another small note that I hastily write in minimalist, precatory Hebrew, I bury them both as deeply as I can into the crevices between the stones.

At another point along the wall, the Holy Sites Authority, the body managing the Western Wall Tunnels, has built a mini-sitting area at the centre of which is a model of the Temple Mount with full true-to-scale topographical background. With parts that move, and parts that illuminate, it is a wonderful teaching device.

From the very beginning to the very end, I felt myself transported.

The end of the tour is at a door that opens onto a street close by the Via Dolorosa, in the Arab quarter of the Old City. It was this door whose opening for the first time more than a year ago was the pretext for Palestinian rioting that resulted in scores of deaths, Israeli and Palestinian.

The full, finally revealed length of the tunnel had existed since 1985. Prior to the opening of the door last year at the northernmost end of the tunnel, visitors had to retrace their steps to back, as it were, to the very beginning of the tour.

This retracing of steps, however, posed a number of drawbacks. In certain places, the width of the tunnel is so narrow as to accommodate only single files of people. Thus a 328-metre tunnel with only one point of access and egress meant tours that had to be conducted one group at a time, and at twice the length of time than was necessary.

After I had returned home from Israel, I noticed an article in the Toronto Star of Dec. 28, 1997, written by its Middle East correspondent, on the riots of one year ago. He wrote: "Sparked by Israel's expansion of an archaeological tunnel in Jerusalem's Old City..." (My emphasis)

What he wrote was false. The tunnel had not been expanded.

But what did expand, indeed, was one's sense of utter amazement and wonder at the ingenuity of a people whose Temple to their God was literally carved out of a mountain, and to which, in every generation, their children would return. MBD

Chief Rabbi Hirschprung dies at 87

MONTREAL — As The CJN was going to press, it was reported that Rabbi Pinchas Hirschprung, Montreal's chief rabbi for the last 28 years, died Jan. 24, after a lengthy illness. He was 87.

At funeral services the following day, Rabbi Hirschprung was praised for his renowned scholarship and for his many contributions as leader of the Jewish Community Council, the Beth Din and founder of the Beth Jacob School for Girls.

Vitols' unit linked to anti-partisan atrocities

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A defence lawyer and a historian of the Holocaust sparred last week over whether German-led attacks against partisans could be considered ordinary anti-guerrilla warfare or whether it invariably constituted war crimes.

Historian Konrad Kwiet, testifying at the citizenship hearing of alleged war criminal Peter Vitols, said the anti-partisan warfare conducted by Germany and its collaborationist allies was an "inhumane campaign. The rules of war were not applied... This was carried out against civilians."

Kwiet was responding to suggestions from lawyer Donald Powell that the 1943 campaign in which Vitols participated, called "Winter Magic," was nothing more than anti-guerrilla warfare "without atrocities."

Kwiet rejected that suggestion: "To put it in a blunt and clear form, Operation Barbarossa [the German invasion of the Soviet Union] was a war of annihilation, of total destruction. Therefore, I have trouble accepting it as a regular war."

Vitols is alleged to have been a second lieutenant and platoon commander in the 281st Schuma (Latvian Auxiliary Police) battalion during the Winter Magic campaign. He is alleged to have lied about that involvement, about his earlier membership in the Madona district auxiliary police and about his later participation in the Latvian Legion, a volunteer unit that fought as part of the Waffen SS. Government documents claim that he would not have been admitted to Canada and would not have been granted citizenship if he had disclosed those activities.

In documents filed with the court, Vitols admitted to joining the Madona district police – but not until after the Jews in that area had already been murdered. A former Latvian army officer, Vitols stated he needed a job so he joined the police unit in September 1941. That was about a month after the region's approximately 600 Jews had been killed, other evidence indicated.

Vitols stated he was assigned to the 281st battalion in January 1943 and a month later was involved in combing the forests on the Latvian-Byelorussian border for partisans. His unit "searched for partisans and engaged in battles but did not capture or execute any of them. He was not involved with any civilians and had nothing to do with any villages being burned. He later heard about actions taken against civilians by German SD [the SS security service] units," his affidavit stated.

However, Kwiet told a different story about anti-partisan warfare. His affidavit evidence stated that the orders for Winter Magic were simple: "To destroy each village in the operation area... which could be used as a base for partisans and to execute all partisans and persons suspected of being partisan supporters. These orders permitted extraordinary measures whereby the whole male population between 16 and 50 was killed and the female population was sent to concentration camps and forced labor. Documents point at the high number of executed 'cripples and old people.' This was only the first wave of actions."

Historian responds to critics

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In an emotional response to her critics, Holocaust historian Ruth Bettina Birn last week defended the publication of her work with that of an outspoken critic of Israel.

Bettina Birn, chief historian of the Justice Department's war crimes unit, said she did not share any of the views about Israel associated with Norman Finkelstein, who has compared Israeli policy to that of the Nazis and who compared Israeli "apologists" to "the Gestapo."

She said she has spoken to Finkelstein only once and believed him to be "entirely sincere about the Holocaust.

He is not a Holocaust denier," she said. In fact, "his life is consumed by what happened to his parents," who survived Nazi death camps. He once accompanied his mother to Dusseldorf, where she testified in the Majdanek war crimes trials, she added.

Bettina Birn said she did not feel uncomfortable being published with Finkelstein in a book examining Daniel Goldhagen's controversial work, Hitler's Willing Executioners, even though she does not agree with Finkelstein's conclusions. According to the Forward newspaper in New York, Finkelstein characterized Goldhagen as a Zionist propagandist who distorts evidence in order to support the legitimacy of Israel.

Last November, Canadian Jewish Congress spokesperson Irving Abella said Bettina Birn should never have published her work with Finkelstein's, particularly at a time when the war crimes unit was being investigated for anti-Jewish prejudice.

She said she "wouldn't be caught dead in a ditch with [Holocaust denier] Ernst Zundel." Furthermore, "my whole adult life has been devoted to the study of the Holocaust and doing war crimes work. That's why it's absolutely offensive to me."

Instead of criticism, Bettina Birn believes "there should be some justice done and recognition [given] to those who are breaking their backs on this [work]."

She said members of the war crimes unit are devoting themselves to the work, but they feel they're under a cloud. She said the unit's morale has been hurt by allegations of anti-Semitism and by the inquiry into those allegations.

Last week, Abella repeated his criticism of Bettina Birn but denied it was character assassination. "It's a question of a civil servant getting involved in a controversy at a time the unit is being investigated. She should be careful of the company she keeps," he said.

Abella said Congress did not object to her work when it was published elsewhere, but Finkelstein "is an enemy of the Jewish people... It would be like being published with someone from the Ku Klux Klan," he said.

Rabbi Schneider maintains tradition at Beth Emeth

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The past year has been one of transition for Rabbi Barry Schneider, who took on the spiritual leadership of Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue following the retirement of Rabbi Joseph Kelman last fall.

Rabbi Schneider, formerly associate rabbi of the shul, also had a milestone birthday, his 50th.

But one thing that is not likely to change soon is the traditionalism of Beth Emeth, a Conservative synagogue.

"My theology and my point of view lean towards original traditional Conservative Judaism," said Rabbi Schneider, a Brooklyn-born alumnus of Yeshiva University, the Orthodox institution where he was ordained in 1971.

Prior to being hired by Beth Emeth, he served as a deputy chaplain in the U.S. Army from 1971 to 1974, then as rabbi of Congregation Ahavas Israel in Passaic, N.J., also a traditional Conservative congregation, from 1974 to 1978.

Rabbi Barry Schneider

Although women are now recognized and ordained as Conservative rabbis by the Jewish Theological Seminary, Rabbi Schneider said he wouldn't encourage his two (grown) daughters to pursue a career in the rabbinate.

"I don't think that's a role they should be playing, and I feel traditional Judaism still has a lot of meaning and is relevant [to them]."

At Beth Emeth, women are not counted in the minyan nor do they receive aliyot. Neither do girls celebrate their bat mitzvahs at Saturday morning services.

"Women participate within the realm of traditional Conservative Judaism. Women have always done prayers and now they're doing more," explained the rabbi. Readings and prayers like Ashrei, the prayer for Israel and the prayer for the congregation are some examples.

Serving a congregation that is about four decades old – a "very warm, tremendous congregation" – Rabbi Schneider recognizes how important it is to meet the needs of older congregants while making the synagogue welcoming to the younger generation.

To the latter end, he established a regular Mishmor (study) night 10 years ago for high school age students. He still runs the program, which includes dinner and learning with 20 to 30 teens from both Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto and the public schools.

"We discuss Bible, G-d, theology," said the rabbi. "We study the Chumash, the biblical portion of the week, and from that we elicit a lot of discussion. A lot of different issues come up."

It was during his stint as an army chaplain that Rabbi Schneider discovered he had found his niche. "I was going to be a chemist," he recalled, "but I also studied for smichah."

In the army he realized he liked helping people in times of need. "I liked feeling that I made an impact upon people's lives."

He is very concerned about the "terrible friction" within the Jewish community here and in Israel. "Unless we begin to learn to respect and tolerate and love each other, and respect the various points of view, there'll be a lot of difficulty."

Last month, he participated in a 40-person Unity Tour to Israel initiated by Rabbi Philip Scheim of Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation.

"We need to go to Israel. We need to show our solidarity... [but] most importantly, the Jewish community of Toronto needs to unite. If anything's going to destroy Israel, it's going to be the Jews themselves, unless we work together. Religious friction is becoming a sore point there and here."

Yet he says he's optimistic, if only because historical precedent speaks for Jewish survival. On a positive – and more current – note, he said rabbis from all denominations come together for Israel Bonds as well as within chaplaincy roles.

Baycrest residents prove age no barrier to finding happiness

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — For the first time that anyone can remember, two Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care residents have met and married.

Rwyka Braun, 79, and Abraham Nyman, 85, were wed in a recent ceremony officiated by Rabbi Israel Silverman.

About 30 family members and friends watched as the bride, in a cream-colored suit, marched down the aisle with the aid of a flower-covered walker and the groom came down in his wheelchair. A luncheon and reception followed in the Fireside Lounge.

Braun, whose husband died about two years ago, came to Baycrest Centre in March 1995, after recuperating from a stroke. She met Nyman, who arrived in the summer of that year, after her daughter noticed him in the lobby and introduced them.

"That day, they had the first of many coffee dates," says Braun's daughter, Brigitte Levine.

The only member of her immediate family to survive the Holocaust, the Polish-born Braun says she "never dreamed I would get married again. I never envisaged this day. I am a religious woman, however, and when we began seeing each other regularly, I told him I would not be a girlfriend, only a wife."

After being married for 47 years, Braun says she was heartbroken when her husband died. "But I came here and I realized that good things can happen in our golden years. Life keeps going on – there is always something good waiting around the corner."

Nyman, who owned the Perfect Junior Dress Shop on Spadina Avenue for 27 years, said that when his wife died in 1989, he also did not think he would remarry. "But I am very happy, and I wouldn't back up."

Levine, who arranged much of the wedding, along with her husband Lorne, says "I think it's wonderful that these two people have found each other. I believe that when older people are happy it can help to lengthen their lives. They have a purpose and meaning to their life."

Braun thinks that fate plays a large role in everyone's life. "I believe in destiny and feel that there is a reason for everything.I believe that if we are charitable and give of ourselves, we will get back what we give out. If we make others happy, G-d will make us happy back."

Rwyka Braun and Abraham Nyman were recently married.

Associated Hebrew Schools to honor couple

By LEILA SPEISMAN

TORONTO — Sheldon Goodman, president of Associated Hebrew Schools, and his wife Rosalinde (Lindy), co-chair of the school's Vaad HaChinuch, will be honored at a gala evening on Feb. 7, 8 p.m., at the Ontario Science Centre.

Parents' Association president Sally Zigler told The CJN that the Goodmans are being honored as part of a tribute to volunteers that is being sponsored by her organization.

A light dinner will be followed by brief ceremonies, a viewing of the film Cosmic Voyage in the Omnimax Theatre, and then a live auction, coffee and dessert.

At the end of evening, those who buy tickets will have the opportunity to smash a giant, candy-filled balloon.

Both Goodmans are graduates of Associated.

Dietary laws will be observed.

For rabbinic approval

The report of the seven-person committee, ostensibly examining the issue of conversions in Israel, chaired by Finance Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman, has been submitted to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

The committee's main recommendations are:

• the establishment of an institute jointly run by the Orthodox, Conservative and Reform establishments in Israel to instruct and teach conversion candidates. According to reports, the curriculum at this unique college "will emphasize the uniqueness of the Jewish people and its Torah that unites the Jewish people in its variations and streams."

• the establishment by the Chief Rabbinate of special rabbinical courts that will perform the actual conversions.

The prime minister received the report last week with effusive words of warm praise and commendation for the panel that labored long and hard, as reported in the media through 70 sessions of more than 150 hours of formal discussions, to produce the compromise proposals. He also unambiguously expressed the hope that the chief rabbis will accept the committee's recommendations.

The principles underlying the compromise, were explained in the past by one committee member, Prof. Alex Lubotsky, himself Orthodox, a teacher of mathematics at the Hebrew University and a member of the Knesset for The Third Way. The Conservative and Reform establishments in Israel would receive formal recognition, but halachic norms and standards acceptable to the Orthodox establishment would apply in matters of personal status, such as conversion.

The mere proffering of the proposals is itself a watershed in Israel's social development. It marks the very first time that the main streams of Judaism sat officially and formally together at the same table, striving towards a common solution to a common problem.

But the submission of the report last week is only the beginning, and an incomplete one at that. Even though the recommendations represent the unanimous agreement of the committee, five of whose members were Orthodox, the report itself has not been signed. As of this writing, the committee is awaiting the report's formal approval by the chief rabbis before they officially sign the protocol.

But approval from the chief rabbis may not be imminent. Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Yisrael Lau's first public comments on the report were only guarded. Moreover the recommendations must come before the 16 rabbis of the Chief Rabbinical Council for study and direction before the two chief rabbis will officially pronounce upon its acceptability.

For the sake of the unity of the Jewish people in Israel and in the Diaspora, we urge the Chief Rabbinical Council to approve the Ne'eman Committee's recommendations. We urge them to heed his plea, plainly and poignantly expressed: "The command of the hour is unity. It is agreed upon to have a government conversion procedure according to the law of Torah that will accepted by all of Israel." In their deliberations, we humbly offer to the council the words of the former chief rabbi, the great Avraham Isaac Kook:

"Hearken, O my people
From the very depths of my soul
I speak unto you.
From the core of life where lies the tie
That binds us one to the other,
With devotion, deep and profound,
I declare unto you
That you, each one of you,
All of you, the whole of you,
Your very souls, your generations
...are the essence of my life."

Even after the council's approval, the task of nurturing and consolidating feelings of intra-communal unity will be great and demanding. But at least it will have begun.

Opposes catalogue list of 'genuine' Jews

While in Israel during the second week of January 1998, I read with great discomfort the proposal to catalogue a list of "genuine" Jews. The proposal conflicted with everything considered important in Jewish history.

Those who have sought to destroy world Jewry must be gloating with glee as they witness Jews ignoring at the same time, the rich and tragic history that we as a people have experienced. Those who are Jews by ancient and direct lineage, and those who are Jews by marriage and conversion have all shared in the joys and catastrophes of the Jewish people.

This initiative to catalogue "genuine" Jews is an insult to the history and legacy of the Jewish people. If implemented it will erode the commitment of world Jewry to a State of Israel. Canadian Jews of all denominations should vigorously oppose this perverse initiative.

Freud's patient a fighter for women

There was an interesting and informative article (CJN, Jan. 14) outlining the sensational events in the life of Bertha Pappenheim.

Pappenheim tirelessly campaigned against what she considered injustices against women in law, in society and in the Jewish community. Although the issue of "white slavery" became her later focus, her campaigns to have women in leadership roles of Jewish charities, and her campaign for women's vote in the Gemeinde should not be overlooked. Jewish women were not allowed to vote or run for office for the central regulating body of the Jewish community, although they worked and paid taxes.

As regards Pappenheim's psychological illness (she was a patient of Freud), speculation ran rampant among her contemporaries as to the case of the hysterical woman who became a well-known feminist. Whether or not Pappenheim was cured, is a moot point. Because of her illness, Pappenheim developed a sensitivity to injustice and a strong social consciousness. She fostered cooperation with German society through interaction. This should be her legacy and not her so-called psychosis.

Sacrifices of veterans are forgotten

I applaud greatly the efforts of Oscar Adler and all others who are compiling the Canadian Jewish Book of Remembrance (CJN, Dec. 25, 1997), so that we Jewish Canadians shall never forget the sacrifices made by our Jewish veterans; so that we could live in freedom and peace.

Yet in the face of these sacrifices, there are those in Canada, and in Jewish society, who would dishonor these veterans by creating and propagating historical revisionist lies, as in the series The Valor and the Horror, which greatly tarnish the sacrifices made by our veterans. This for the almighty dollar.

The bitter irony is that without the efforts made by these soldiers, sailors and airmen, the creators of these lies would not be alive today.

Objects to letter about Rabbi Stern

I am responding to a letter to the Editor (CJN, Dec. 25, 1997) which attacks Rabbi Moshe Stern personally over the conversion issue.

While Rabbi Stern makes a strong case for the Orthodox community (CJN, Dec. 4, 1997), Bob K. Hundert attacks the rabbi on a personal level without addressing or rebutting any of the rabbi's substantive issues.

Although, generally, I am not in favor of censure, I would expect the editor of The Canadian Jewish News to exercise some discretion before publishing a letter against a rabbi.

I pray for the unity of the Jewish people.

Objects to Bishop's sermon on Israel

Re: "Ottawa Bishop's sermon angers Jews" (CJN, Jan. 8).

Why did Bishop John Baycroft single us out? Maybe I shouldn't ask.

He also neglected to mention thousands of people slaughtered by their co-religionists, in Algeria and other places.

When I visited the campus of Tel Aviv University, I came across Arabic-speaking students and couldn't help wondering if there would ever come a time when Israelis will be free to speak Hebrew on campuses of "friendly" countries like Egypt or Jordan.

Maybe Bishop Baycroft should have mentioned tolerance in his sermon.

Chief Rabbinate must now decide

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Israel's Chief Rabbinate was slated to convene Monday for what some Israeli legislators viewed as "make-or-break" deliberations on a recommended solution to the crisis over conversions performed in the Jewish state.

But amid uncertainty over whether the rabbinate would endorse the recommendations, Avraham Burg, the chair of the Jewish Agency for Israel, offered an alternative that could temporarily ease the crisis if the Ne'eman Committee's recommendations were rejected.

Burg announced Sunday that the three major streams of Judaism had reached a "technical understanding" on the registration of individuals converted in Israel.

Under the arrangement, those converted in Israel by the non-Orthodox streams would be listed as Jews on their identity cards, but the population registry would keep a record of the type of conversion.

This arrangement would not affect a convert's rights as an Israeli citizen, but the Religious Affairs Ministry could continue to deny recognition of their marriages and burials because they were not converted under the aegis of the Orthodox.

While Orthodox authorities would probably not recognize such converts as Jewish, an agreement to record them as Jewish on identity cards would be a significant breakthrough for the non-Orthodox movements.

Rabbi Yehuda Gilad, who acted as a representative for Sephardi Chief Rabbi Eliyahu Bakshi-Doron in the discussions organized by Burg over the past several months, stressed that "this solution means one thing for the state and another entirely for the religious authorities."

Burg said the plan is "not intended to replace the Ne'eman Committee's work by any means, but to offer an alternative, if necessary."

Meanwhile, the recommendations of the Ne'eman Committee, which came after seven months of deliberations, may provide a solution to a protracted crisis that has the potential to bring down the Netanyahu government.

In a letter to the prime minister, Finance Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman, who heads the committee, termed the compromise a "breakthrough for the unity of the Jewish people" and expressed hope that Israel's Chief Rabbinate would view it the same way.

But there was considerable uncertainty over whether the rabbinate would indeed agree.

Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Yisrael Lau denied reports this week that he had rejected the Ne'eman Committee recommendations out of hand, saying he had yet to review them.

And Rabbi Bakshi-Doron, while welcoming the work of the committee, still evaded questions over whether he would agree to meet with Reform leaders, saying that he would not refuse to meet "any Jew."

If both the Ne'eman Committee's proposal and the "technical understanding" are rejected, Israel's religious political parties are likely to demand renewed legislative action on the Conversion Bill, which would codify the Orthodox establishment's sole authority over Jewish conversions in Israel.

Coalition partners from the Third Way and Yisrael b'Aliyah parties said Sunday that if the committee's proposal is rejected, they would vote against the Conversion Bill – even if it is presented as a no-confidence vote against the Netanyahu government.

"As far as I am concerned, the Ne'eman Committee proposal meets the requirements of halachah," or Jewish religious law, said Third Way Knesset member Alex Lubotzky. "If the Chief Rabbinate and Orthodox parties do not accept the recommendations, I know I for one am ready to vote against the Conversion Bill."

Lau: positive development

By HERB KEINON
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Yisrael Lau, in his first comment on the Ne'eman Committee's recommendations, said that if the Conservative and Reform representatives on the committee agree that only conversions performed by the Chief Rabbinate will be recognized, "then this is a positive development.

"If all agree to this, meaning that any other [conversion] efforts are insignificant, then this is an achievement," he said.

Finance Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman presented the unsigned recommendations to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last week. The agreement of the Chief Rabbinate is necessary before they can be implemented.

Rabbi Lau said the Chief Rabbinate has not yet formally been given the recommendations.

The panel's two main recommendations are the establishment of a joint conversion institute to be run by the three major streams of Judaism to instruct prospective converts, and the establishment by the Chief Rabbinate of special rabbinical courts that will perform the actual conversions.

Rabbi Lau denied television reports that he had already rejected the committee's proposals, saying that the reports are "baseless lies. Someone should check who is behind reports that the ball was thrown into the rabbis' court, and that we will say no to everything."

He said the matter needs to be discussed by the Chief Rabbinical Council, a body of 16 rabbis that sets policy for the Chief Rabbinate.

The council was to meet Monday, but Rabbi Lau said that since there are already a number of issues on the agenda, it is not clear if the conversion issue would be discussed. He said the rabbinate is waiting for Netanyahu to formally present it with the committee's recommendations.

Since the Ne'eman Committee had seven months to come up with its recommendations, Rabbi Lau said, "Nobody should be standing over the rabbis with a stopwatch now. Let us study the issue, and clarify matters."

Rabbi Uri Regev, head of the Reform Movement's Israel Religious Action Centre and a member of the committee, said he is "doubtful" the rabbis will accept the findings.

MK Avraham Ravitz of United Torah Judaism said he does not see how the Chief Rabbinate can accept the Ne'eman panel's proposals, since the committee recommends establishment of a joint institute that would teach Judaism in all its variations and streams.

"This implies recognition of the idea that Judaism is a pluralistic religion," Ravitz said. "We don't accept that. Judaism is not pluralistic; it is absolute."

Ravitz said that presenting the recommendations to Netanyahu in such a way that it is dependent on the rabbis for approval is a "tremendous trick."

What it does, he said, is place the onus for torpedoing the agreement on the rabbis. This is significant if the religious parties try to go ahead and push for passage of the Conversion Bill, which would stipulate that the only conversions performed here that will be recognized are those approved by the Chief Rabbinate.

'Ne'eman's deal is needed'

Opinion

By DAVID WEINBERG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

It's time to mobilize the forces of moderation in this country and abroad – Orthodox, secular, Reform and all other shades of Jews – behind the plan concluded last week by the Ne'eman Committee on conversion. Because it's a good deal for the Jewish people. And because the agreement is rickety.

Essentially, the committee dealt with two problems, and found that their solution is coincident: the Reform/Conservative demand for a role in Israeli Jewish life, and the Jewish identity of 200,000 Russian non-Jews now living here.

The proposal squares the circles by creating a pluralistic conversion study process while upholding authentic halachic standards, under Chief Rabbinate supervision, for the actual conversions. Orthodox members on the Ne'eman Committee believe that 5,000 to 10,000 Russian youth could be converted each year through an entire network of new conversion batei din. The discussions have sensitized the dayanim (judges in rabbinical courts) to the necessity of making this feasible. That's Ne'eman's real achievement.

But narrow organizational considerations have complicated the committee's work all along, and the fragile consensus reached at the last minute could yet come unraveled. The deal needs to be defended.

Reform leaders feel the Ne'eman package is an inferior bargain from their perspective, and they would not be too sorry to see it dissolve – as long as the Orthodox get the blame. After all, the proposal strengthens the Chief Rabbinate and sets Halachah as the standard. Moreover, the provision granting Reform and Conservative rabbis the opportunity to preside over weddings has been put off for now.

Ne'eman's package infers a Reform role in Jewish life here through the joint conversion college, which is one heck of an Orthodox concession, but doesn't shout it from the rooftops. There's no flashy American Jewish victory over the hated Israeli Orthodox religious establishment. And for the Reform that's simply inadequate – not after getting everybody on the other side of the Atlantic so extraordinarily riled up for the battle of the century against the "fundamentalists."

Some Reform leaders can't wait to start filing appeals to the High Court of Justice directed at dismantling the Chief Rabbinate's hegemony, or to once again rev up the federation system to fight the pluralism wars.

This explains the last minute Reform haggling over their right to conduct unhalachic, unofficial conversions on the side, despite the deal, and their insistence on a photo-op with the chief rabbis. The Reform need to accept that this is the very best deal they can hope to achieve. Ne'eman has fashioned an inclusive model for intra-denominational Jewish coexistence and problem solving. It's historic. Stick with it.

It's also time for the chief rabbis to bite the bullet. Until now, they've followed things from the sidelines, acquiescing in the inclusiveness of the committee, tolerating the Orthodox-Reform dialogue without endorsing it, nor committing to any conversion arrangements.

I see little reason for the Chief Rabbinate not to give the Ne'eman package a try. Halachah becomes formally accepted by klal Yisrael – by Eric Yoffie, Dedi Zucker and the Council of Jewish Federations – as the yardstick for civic and religious membership in the Jewish people in the Land of Israel. No more accusations of coercion in this regard.

The accord positions the Chief Rabbinate back at the center of consensus at a time when the clamor for civil naturalization and alternative marriage procedures has threatened its legitimacy in the eyes of many. At the very least, the pact should buy a couple years of calm, free of constant legislative and judicial attempts to wear away the Chief Rabbinate's areas of authority. It buys a modicum of Jewish unity, here within Israel, and in Israel-Diaspora relations – without really recognizing any alternative religious stream as much more than brothers.

A mild statement welcoming the Ne'eman effort, and expressing an openness to give the new system a fair trial should suffice. Rabbis Yisrael Lau and Eliyahu Bakshi-Doron – the nation awaits your word! Don't let hardliners dissuade you from backing the historic deal.

The woeful alternative is sifrei yochsin – privately-run haredi genealogy registries for "strictly kosher" Jews, run out of Bnei Brak, and the total fragmentation of world Jewry. Such a situation would amount to the meltdown of Jewish peoplehood, and mark the marginalization of Orthodoxy into virtual ghettos of splendid isolation. It also would auger the eventual evaporation of Reform Jewry into a haze of assimilated, amorphous non-identity.

That's why Ne'eman's deal is so needed. Non-Orthodox Jewish leaders abroad, and Orthodox Zionist rabbis and leaders in Israel who recognize the merit of the Ne'eman accord need to be heard. Moderates the Jewish world over, speak up and be counted!

A new spirit of giving

"For many leading Israeli businesspeople, the words investment, profit and partnership are not merely financial terms." This recent ad, presenting a corporate-community partnership led by two leading Israeli business concerns, may be more wishful thinking than an accurate representation of reality. Nevertheless, a new wind is blowing through the Israeli business community as non-profit groups seek support in new creative ways and businesses are beginning to discuss the merits of greater community responsibility for their bottom line.

By Shira Herzog in Toronto

During a recent visit to Israel, Bob Dunn, president of Business for Social Responsibility, a 1,400-member organization based in San Francisco, described some of the pressures that have led American businesses to view their relationship with the community and employees in a more positive light. Among these are the harsh scrutiny of the media in their practices worldwide, consumer preference for socially responsible businesses, and enough evidence that socially responsible actions can improve their companies' profitability.

None of these conditions exist in Israel in any significant way. The media have paid scant attention to the intersection between business and the community; in a recent survey, only 40 percent of consumers said they would prefer a company that donated a percentage of sales to a worthy community cause (compared to over 80 percent in the United States); and social norms that favor such conduct have barely developed. Moreover, there are few examples of "best practices" that demonstrate a financial benefit.

As a result, there is no formal framework of corporate social responsibility that is part of the tradition of the Israeli private sector. In practice, there are many "random acts of kindness" that usually consist of ad hoc acts of corporate philanthropy. In a recent Gallop survey of 199 companies, 74 percent said they had been involved in some kind of community activity, but for 86 percent of these, the activity was limited to a donation, which was undertaken in a non-strategic fashion.

At the same time, there is widespread agreement in the Israeli corporate sector that the country is going through a critical transition as it seeks an appropriate vision and sense of community for the future, and an acknowledgment of the role business can play in this process. In turn, the globalization of Israel's business community has led to an understanding that a growing number of American and European companies will be requiring their business partners to evidence a commitment to social responsibility, and that early adopters of these principles will have an advantage.

An important first step would be an improvement in the tax incentive for corporate giving. In a holdover from the early socialist days when the state provided for all its citizens' needs, the cap for tax-deductible corporate contributions has been set at IS 300,000 (approximately $130,000 Canadian), rather than as a percentage of income. As a result, most corporate giving is expressed through sponsorships, which are recognized as a legitimate marketing expense.

Corporate giving will not be a panacea for the financial needs of Israeli non-profits. Just as in Canada, the private sector cannot fill the hole created by government's retreat from the community sector. But the need for a new relationship between the two sectors is clear. Some leaders are showing the way. A few examples: Delta Textile supports community projects in the communities where its employees live; Tnuva has partnered with the Society for the Protection of Nature to save wild animals; Elite has announced that it will focus its giving on larger contributions to a smaller number of organizations each year; Phoenix is known as a patron of the arts; and Co-Op commits IS 5 million annually to the community. Two new national campaigns are challenging the corporate community to contribute to scholarships for post-secondary education for combat soldiers, and for family violence, children and the elderly respectively.

Unfortunately, discussions of philanthropy in Israel often elicit one of two reactions among North American Jews. It either "isn't good enough," or it means "that they don't need us." Neither is accurate nor appropriate. Israel's private sector is relatively young and is just discovering its power as a force for social change. It is open to successful models that speak to the values and concerns of business everywhere and it will adapt these to the indigenous Israeli experience. For philanthropists from abroad, this should be seen as a welcome development. In future, rather than being the "donor" supporting the Israeli "doer," they may well find opportunities for partnership with Israelis in both giving and doing. This, in turn, will lead to a more balanced relationship in the joint commitment to a stronger Israeli community.

Our brothers' and sisters' keepers

The ice storm is over, though as I write, many homes on the South Shore of Montreal remain without power. Yet it is surprising that such a calamity can somehow have positive consequences.

By Morton Weinfeld in Montreal

People demonstrated qualities of altruism and self-reliance. Shelters sprang open. With only a few exceptions, those with power instinctively and aggressively sought out relatives, friends, neighbors and even strangers to welcome into their homes. The friends with whom we stayed had gas heat and a gas stove, but no electricity; nevertheless, at one point they were sheltering three additional families. By and large, the supply of shelter volunteers and homes matched the demand. The odd stories of price-gouging by merchants paled in comparison to the stories of selflessness and cooperation.

For many or most Montrealers, who have experienced neither warfare nor major natural disasters, a week or so with no power in the dead of winter is the closest we will come to being tested in both a moral and a physical capacity. Suddenly and dramatically, people were thrust out from their normal routine, which Wordsworth so aptly described as "getting and spending." Without power, fancy homes, elegant clothes and trendy gadgets counted for little. What mattered was food, firewood, candles, batteries, water, heat and – most important – other human beings.

People responded with their own survival strategies. We had no power in our home for a full week. I decided to keep a full or near full tank of gas in my car and stocked up on bottled water. I heard of someone else who went me one better by filling up a bathtub with water, just in case.

The Jewish community responded with energy. The Mortimer B. Davis Jewish General Hospital set up several shelters. Shelters were also established at Bialik High School and in synagogues. Those synagogues that did not have formal shelters had lists of members who were offering their homes to any who needed them. There is no denying that part of this response is a result of the moral legacy of the Holocaust – people in need of safe refuge simply must be helped.

Many of the Jewish-sponsored shelters took in large numbers of elderly Jews, including Holocaust survivors. I recall chatting with three survivors at one shelter, where the topic of conversation quickly turned to the best analogy from their wartime experience to the conditions in the shelter. An Auschwitz survivor reasoned that the shelter was obviously much better. So did a survivor of Siberian work camps. The third claimed that the best fit was to her post-war experience in DP camps.

The shadow of the war was not far away. In one of the shelters, a non-Jewish Frenchman recounted how his aunt, a nurse, had cared for camp survivors in post-war France. He noted the irony that some 50 years later, he was being cared for by Jews in Montreal.

Yet for all the media talk of "solidarity" and accounts of selflessness, the altruism was not random. Because of the pattern of residential segregation in Montreal and the mainly French areas outside Montreal, anglophones and francophones for the most part relied on members of their own group, as individuals or institutions, for help. The majority of those seeking help in Jewish-sponsored shelters were Jews, and it is likely that very few Jews sought shelter in churches.

In addition, on talk shows, some callers would very occasionally speculate about possible conspiracies. Others tried to score political points. Some anglophones speculated that English areas were given a lower priority by Hydro Quebec; some francophones asserted – inaccurately – that Westmount somehow was hardly touched by the blackout. All this is not surprising. Rumors and suspicions are common in periods of uncertainty. And people rely on their existing networks for help in moments of need, and these networks inevitably reflect ethnic and religious concentrations.

None of this should detract from the predominantly uplifting response. From the ground up, people helped people, in shelters and neighborhoods, regardless of language or background. Looting was practically non-existent (though family abuse apparently increased). Help poured in to the stricken areas from across Canada and the United States. Montrealers rose to the occasion.

The Supreme Court and Midrash

At times, the rulings of the Canadian Supreme Court arouse widespread discussion. A decision in early December is in that category, and I am one of those who heartily approve its conclusions.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut in Toronto

The decision dealt with an Aboriginal land claim in British Columbia. The native group had claimed that a large area of land was theirs and that a long oral tradition of their people confirmed this. Their tradition held that the Aboriginal rights had never been abdicated and had been taken away without treaty, without consent and without right.

The trial had ruled that the Aboriginal people could not bring factual evidence to bear on their claim; and then the Supreme Court made its historical observation: Oral history too can be trusted under certain circumstances, especially when it arises in a culture that knows no written records, is consistent and has a likely factual basis.

Said the court: "The Aboriginal historical tradition is an oral one, involving legends, stories and accounts handed down through the generations in oral form…The purposes of repeating all accounts from the past is broader than the role of written history in western societies. It may be to educate the listener, to communicate aspects of culture, to socialize people into a cultural tradition, or to validate the claims of a particular family to authority and prestige…This contributes to a sense that there are many histories, each characterized in part by how a people see themselves, how they define their identity in relation to their environment and how they express their uniqueness as a people."

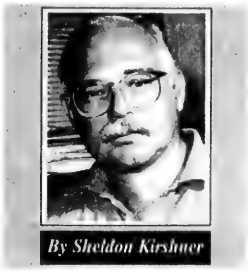
This judgment struck a familiar chord with me, as it must have done with other Jewish readers. For we Jews too, for a very long time, were the bearers of a significant oral tradition. In fact, much of our Halachah was at one time based on such tradition, until it was written down into the Mishnah. There was also another oral tradition that continued even after the mishnaic codification. It was called Midrash and while it is not history as we understand it today, it often is the bearer of significant memories.

Take for instance the biblical story of the destruction of Sodom and Gemorrah. The text does not say why God's judgment came down upon them, but according to a persistent Jewish tradition, the major contributing factor to their demise was their absence of social morality. Thus, says the midrash, though Sodom's streets were paved with gold, its citizens were unwilling to share any of their riches with other people. The midrash says that this occasioned God's interference.

What the midrash observes here is not only an interpretation of why Sodom perished, but – equally important – it teaches that the absence of social morality can contribute to the destruction of society. Some will call this an interpretation while others will call it oral history. And since much of our tradition belongs in this category, I felt that the Supreme Court of Canada had asserted a truth that Jews had long known. To be sure, not all oral history is trustworthy just because people repeat it, but some of it is indeed when one looks more closely.

The Kirshner File

A new interpretation of Jewish history



By Sheldon Kirshner

No, it's not a coffee-table book, definitely not, Nicholas de Lange insists, referring to The Illustrated History of the Jewish People, published by Key Porter recently. With its lavish cover, glossy color photographs and illustrated plates, it certainly resembles an example of the genre. But, as we all know, appearances can be deceiving.

"You don't leave it lying around to impress anyone," de Lange, the book's general editor, said. "You read it. You dip into it."

Playing the devil's advocate again, I asked de Lange — a Cambridge University scholar who specializes in rabbinics and Hebrew — whether The Illustrated History of the Jewish People, weighing in at 433 pages and aimed at a general readership, is not in fact old wine in a new bottle.

He seems to have anticipated the question. "It's not a blow-by-blow account," he said. "Most books like this have a time line. This is an interpretation of Jewish history, written by specialists on the cutting edge of the latest research. Their essays are more than linear, factual accounts."

Composed of eight chapters, the book traces the saga of the Jews from their emergence as a distinct Middle Eastern people to their dispersion to places as diverse as Egypt and France. It describes the relationship between Jews and Christians, on the one hand, and Jews and Muslims, on the other. The concluding chapters deal with anti-Semitism, the Holocaust, Zionism, the rise of Israel and, finally, the state of the Jewish world today and what the future may hold in store.

The Illustrated History of the Jewish People was conceived by, among others, Toronto publisher Malcolm Lester. Given a free hand to select the contributors, de Lange chose British, Canadian (Michael Marrus of the University of Toronto), American and Israeli scholars.

He expects good sales. "It's attractively packaged and priced ($50) and responds to a particular gap in the market." His last book, An Atlas of the Jewish World, has sold more than 120,000 copies and has been translated into several languages.

As a historian, de Lange believes that Jewish history is constantly being rewritten. "No two versions are the same," he observes. "In part, the reasons are personal. Each author has a different perspective. Advances in our knowledge, due, for example, to discoveries of new documents, play a large part too. But the most significant differences result from the changing needs of the times."

A century ago, the dominant mood in Jewish historiography was one of hope, despite the spectre of Russian pogroms and the spread of racial anti-Semitism. "There was real confidence in progress," he said. Political emancipation, intellectual enlightenment, social openness and technological breakthroughs appeared to augur well for the future.

But in the aftermath of the Holocaust, the atmospherics have changed. "Everything is colored by the Holocaust. Even the great achievements of the past are poisoned by this perspective."

Although he understands and empathizes with this mindset, he believes it is a passing trend. "Jews are a practical people with enormous powers of adaptability," he mused, pointing out that the Mishnah, the early rabbinic legal code, appeared after the destruction of the second temple, and that the Shulchan Aruch, the code of Jewish law, was compiled by Joseph Caro following the expulsion of Jews from Spain.

Born in Nottingham, England, de Lange, 53, is a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge and Leo Baeck College. He has written numerous monographs and has been a visiting scholar and a professor in Hungary, France and Germany.

He regrets to say that Jewish studies at the university level in Britain are dwindling, not being supported by the Jewish community. Yet the calibre of Jewish studies programs, particularly at London University, Cambridge, Manchester and Oxford, remain high.

"But we can't encourage our good students to go into the field, there being so few available teaching positions," he adds.

In addition to his role as an historian, de Lange has a second career as a Hebrew-to-English translator, having worked on the Israeli novels of Amos Oz, including My Michael, Black Box and Under This Blazing Light.

"We met when we were both starting out in the early 1970s, and we've gotten used to each other."

Deriving enormous satisfaction from this sideline, de Lange likens a translator to a violinist who can magically lift the notes of a Bach sonata off a music sheet and make them soar.

The strange case of Robert Maxwell

The late Robert Maxwell was the wealthiest self-made man in Britain after World War II, a press titan who mingled with the creme de la creme of international society.

Robert Maxwell

After his mysterious death in November 1991, he was given what amounted to a state funeral in Israel. But no sooner had he been buried than revelations surfaced about the insolvency of his far-flung publishing empire.

According to biographer Tom Bower, Maxwell – a Czech Jew whose family perished in the Holocaust – was a man who ignored the norms of morality throughout his life. In Maxwell: The Final Verdict (HarperCollins, $16), a plodding but scrupulously-researched account of his last years, Bower claims that Maxwell's fortune was built on "deliberate transgressions."

Describing him as a person whose theatricality, egocentricity and vanity were unsurpassed, Bower suggests that he fraudulently concealed his debts; used listening devices in negotiations and telephone conversations with his executives; and relieved his sexual appetite by summoning well-endowed and compliant secretaries to his office.

For many years, Maxwell denied that he was Jewish, but after visiting Israel in 1985, he embraced Judaism and grew close to London's Jewish community. Bower adds that Maxwell's French Roman Catholic wife, Betty, encouraged him in this direction.

Due to Maxwell's investments in Israel, his circle of acquaintances included the mighty and the powerful. He employed the services of lawyer Yaakov Neeman, the current Israeli minister of finance, and had a good working relationship with the then prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir, who entrusted him with a secret mission to Moscow, related to Iraq's aggression in Kuwait. In this connection, Bower repeats the allegation that Maxwell was "a Mossad source."

In a reconstruction of his sudden death, Bower claims that no foul play was involved. Aboard his yacht in the Mediterranean, Maxwell suffered a heart attack, toppled forward, fell into the sea, struggled frantically and drowned. An ignominious demise for a larger-than-life personality.

Shtetl: The Life and Death of a Small Town & the World of Polish Jews*, by Eva Hoffman (Houghton Mifflin Company).

In post-Holocaust memory, Poland holds an exceptional place. That was where most of the world's Jewish population lived before the war and that is where the mass extermination of European Jewry occurred. When the war began, there were three million Jews in Poland; when it ended, between 250,000 and 300,000 remained.

How Poles reacted to the persecution of Jews varied considerably. Many of them turned a blind eye to horrors visited on their neighbors. Many even informed on Jews and welcomed the Nazi killings. But the author, in this elegiac and firsthand survey of Jewish-Polish relations through the centuries, reminds us that "every Jew who survived in occupied Poland did so with the help of individual Poles and of organizations set up for the purpose of aiding Jews." Moreover, this help involved enormous risk. Those found guilty of harboring Jews were summarily executed.

The world of Polish Jews

For almost 600 years, Poland was among the most important centres of Jewish life and culture. Jews began to settle in Poland as early as the 11th century and arrived in larger numbers in the 14th. By the late 17th century, nearly three-quarters of the world's Jewry lived in the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth. In the 18th century, before the various partitions, Jews constituted about 10 percent of Poland's population, which made them that country's largest minority. This proportion rose to about 13 percent in 1939.

Despite the terrible pogroms of the 17th century that uprooted 700 Jewish communities and led to the murder of 100,000 Jews, "Polish Jews created impressive religious institutions, political movements, a secular literature, and a distinctive way of life. In modern times, Polish Jewry gave rise to Yiddish and Hebrew culture, which crucially influenced Diaspora cultures in Europe and the United States."

In Shtetl, the author indicates that her parents left Poland in 1929 to settle in Vancouver and that she herself was born in Krakow. She has written several highly acclaimed books and is a former editor of the New York Times Book Review.

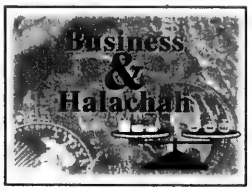
In this soberly written book, the author focuses on the village of Bransk, 110 miles east of Warsaw, which had 4,600 inhabitants before 1939, of whom half were Jewish. There are no Jews left in Bransk today.

The author maintains that – despite their long history together – the Jewish and Polish communities rarely shared common ideals or cultural values. Jews engaged in an "ethos of separateness" that was echoed in the feelings and actions of their neighbors. There were deep and painful ambivalences. Had both sides been willing to share more willingly and fruitfully in their common needs and struggles, there might have been greater affection and understanding and less indifference on the part of Poles to Jewish suffering.

Even today, Jews and Poles look at the Holocaust with different eyes. Both feel their moral truth has been violated. "Poland lost three million non-Jewish citizens during the war. It put up the most concerted resistance of any occupied country and had its independence wrested away by infuriatingly unjust means. The Poles have felt that none of this has been recognized...the Jews have felt just as outraged and wounded when the Poles have emphasized their wartime heroism while giving scant attention to the genocide committed on their soil and to their own contributions to Jewish suffering and losses."

The author's thesis is controversial and arguable. After all, it was only in Poland that Jewish survivors were murdered when they returned to their homes. Anti-Semitism in Poland, often furthered by Church and State, was especially virulent and deep rooted.

Today, there is a modest revival of Jewish life in Poland and widespread interest in Jewish history and culture. Perhaps "it is time for Poles and Jews to recover the memory of generosity and the generosity of memory" and to face the future with a new sense of friendship and mutuality.



Towards reasonable prices

By RABBI JAY KELMAN

There is no doubt that the cost of leading a Jewish life adds extra expense to a family's budget. The cost of sending three children to a Jewish day school roughly equals the yearly wage of the average Canadian worker. Additionally there is the cost of religious articles such as tfillin, mezuzot, sukkot, not to mention the extra cost of keeping kosher.

Since the demand for many religious articles is inelastic, meaning that the observant consumer will pay practically any price for the commodity needed, some controls are necessary to prevent price gouging. With limited competition in many areas, what measures can be taken to prevent exorbitant pricing policies should they exist?

The earliest case of rabbinical intervention in regulating the sale of religious artifacts seems to be regarding the price of korbanot (sacrificial items). The Torah tells us that as a token of thanksgiving, a mother had to bring a korban for each child born, consisting of either animals, or if that proved too expensive, a pair of birds. Opportunistic farmers began to raise the price of these items in order to capitalize on the captive market.

Rabbi Simoen ben Gamliel therefore decreed that one sacrifice would suffice for five births even though this went against what was explicitly decreed by G-d in the Torah. His bold declaration had the desired effect and immediately prices dropped, enabling mothers to bring the proper number of sacrifices.

Throughout the ages, rabbis have modified religious practices if the costs became too high. Decrees have been made forbidding the purchase of fish for Shabbat when merchants were charging too much; insisting on having only one set of lulav and etrog for the entire community; and even limiting the amounts that could be spent on streimlach (fur hats worn by chassidic Jews). These laws were binding on both rich and poor.

In order not to entice envy (of Jew and non-Jew alike), or cause those who could ill afford it to spend beyond their means, rules were often promulgated limiting the expense that one could pay for a simchah.

These restrictions have as their precedent the rabbinical rulings standardizing funeral practices. Originally the rich would bring foodstuffs to the house of mourning in gold and silver vessels and the food would be served on fancy china. The poor, who were unable to afford such trimmings, felt embarrassed and the rabbis therefore outlawed such displays of wealth.

Before money could be spent on new religious initiatives, it had to be ascertained that existing communal institutions would not suffer. A prime example is setting up a new synagogue that will draw members and resources from an existing synagogue capable of catering to the entire community. In fact, Rabbi Moshe Feinstein issued an injunction forbidding the opening of a new synagogue in a case where an existing shul had just committed to large capital outlays. This injunction, which would be reviewed after a period of 10 years, applied irrespective of the fact that certain of the synagogue customs would be different in the new shul.

An area that has received scant attention is the issue of moving out

The path to freedom

By RABBI MICHAEL DOLGIN

We read this week of the beginning of the most important journey ever travelled by our people, the journey from Egypt to Sinai.

While the exodus is an event in history, it is also beyond history. Every generation must see themselves as having gone forth from Egypt. Every generation must travel the road from dependence to responsibility and from the slaveries of their day to freedom to serve the Holy One of Israel.

While the path may look different than it did in the ancient wilderness, many of the same obstacles and temptations remain.

Consider the interactions between Moses and Pharaoh before the latter finally lets our people go. As last week's parshah concludes, Pharaoh begs Moses to stop the hail and promises to set us free, only to renege once the immediate danger is passed. But as parshat Bo begins, Pharaoh's tactics change.

When Moses announces the coming of the locusts, Pharaoh and his courtiers realize that the battle will eventually be lost. When Moses is recalled, Pharaoh asks him, "Who among you will be going?"

The Torah tells us that Pharaoh was only willing to allow the men to go. Imagine the temptation. After centuries of slavery, even a partial exodus may have sounded like progress. With only a simple yes, Moses himself would have been one of those to go forth.

Moses knew better. He knew that a great future lay ahead, not for a select group of free individuals, but for a covenant people. He knew that our strength lies not in achieving swift progress but in moving ever closer to Sinai as a whole healthy community.

In a time when so many temptations threaten to fragment our people, the Torah's words must echo in our minds: "We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters."

The path out of Egypt is not available to individuals. It offers itself only to those willing to work and wait, to serve and sacrifice so that we might yet walk that road together.

Rabbi Dolgin is the spiritual leader of Temple Sinai Congregation in Toronto.

(15th of Tevet)

Your smile, your laugh, your warm dancing eyes,
Your kindness, your words, you were always so wise.
The fun that we had, the love that we shared,
We'll always remember how deeply you cared.

You entered a room, and the room came to life,
Your absence is felt, it cuts like a knife.
In all of our lives, we'll never forget,
The values you taught us, examples you set.

As a Wife, Mother, and Bubba, you were the best,
Our lives were enriched, we were all truly blessed.
Our sunshine is shadowed, since we've been apart,
You will live on forever, in all of our hearts.

Web packed with Yiddish sites

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

Is Yiddish a dying language? Not if the Jewish Highway has a thing or two to say about it. The World Wide Web is packed with sites about the mameloshen. What comes through on the dozens of sites devoted to the language is that there are many people of all ages around the world who clearly live and love Yiddish.

We may think we know where Yiddish comes from, but the sources of the language are not so clear. And clarifying the language's roots could affect the way European Jews look at their own heritage. That's because the spread of Yiddish sheds light on where the Jews of eastern Europe came from. Traditional thinking says Yiddish originated in western Europe. But new questions are being raised about whether the massive Jewish populations of eastern Europe really could have originated in the west too. These theories are explained in an excellent New York Times article that also traces the renewed popularity of Yiddish [http://www.santafe.edu/~johnson/articles.yiddish.html]. For a brief overview on the state of Yiddish today, see What is Yiddish [http://www.bergen.org/AAST/Projects/Yiddish/English/yidish.html].

There are a few online Yiddish dictionaries [http://sunsite.unc.edu/yiddish/diction.html] although none is as comprehensive as one you'd get in the store. However, you may enjoy the Travlang Dictionary because it speaks to you [http://www.travlang.com/languages/yiddish].

One of the hottest areas of Yiddish pride is in the pronunciation. If you say kugel and I say kigel, we may be headed for a bit of a tzimmes. The Yiddish Atlas Project at Columbia University is an attempt to document and record the varieties of Yiddish speech [http://www.columbia.edu/cu/cria/Current-projects/Yiddish/herzog.html].

There is a link on this page to the online audio archive which you can sample.

We all know that Yiddish words have permeated the English language. Someone has taken the time to search all the words in the Oxford English Dictionary with "Yiddish" in the etymology field and came up with over 100, such as heimish, narrishkeit, tchotchke, zaftig and glitzy [http://liberty.uc.wlu.edu/~hblackme/oed/yiddish.html]. But I particularly like a list of words in "Yinglish" or "Yidlish." These words sound like they came from Yiddish, but really are English [http://rtt.colorado.edu/~biasca/fake_yid.html]. Some examples: bedridden, boxkite, canticle, conniption, epistle and farfetched. (Try them out loud!)

Ready for a test? Try the online Yiddish quiz [http://www.joods.nl/jiddisj/jidquiz.html]. Sample question: Someone who falls on his back and hurts his nose is a: (a) kvetch (b) shlemazl (c) shlep or (d) shmuz.

Not surprisingly, the vast majority of Yiddish Web sites are American.

But I was particularly interested in pages from a bit further afield. Imagine the irony that a Yiddish page from Poland is created by a non-Jew. Magdalena Sitarz loves Yiddish and teaches it at the Jagiellonian University. She created the Unofficial Cracow's Yiddish Page for her students as an introduction to Yiddish language and culture [http://www.cyf-kr.edu.pl/~ufsitarz/yiddish.htm]. She also includes some of her favorite Yiddish proverbs, such as "Varf di kats vi du vilst, blaypt zi alts shteyn af di fis." (You can throw a cat however you want, it always stays on its feet.) [http://www.cyf-kr.edu.pl/~ufsitarz/proverb.htm].

Also, don't miss Der Yapanisher Yid, newsletter of the Japan Yiddish Club [http://super.win.or.jp/~jhalpern/jyc.htm]. The club seems to be made up mostly of lovers of Yiddish who now find themselves in Japan for the short or long term. But you don't have to be Jewish or even Japanese to be intrigued by the article Fascinated by Jewish Languages [http://www2.gol.com/users/tsuguya/jewish-languages.html]. In it Tsuguya Sasaki explains how as a young student in northern Japan, he began to learn foreign languages, including Hebrew. And how his curiosity eventually brought him to Israel where he studied and eventually taught Yiddish. According to Sasaki: "Maybe it was all bashert, who knows?"

of a "dying" neighborhood. While freedom of movement is a basic right that we take for granted, Jews must always be concerned with the welfare of the community they are leaving behind. A Jewish community can force a member to hire or find a replacement before allowing him to leave for the High Holy Day period if his departure would leave the community without a minyan.

Regarding our modern neighborhoods, Rabbi Feinstein ruled that one may not "flee" a neighborhood and leave behind fear amongst those who must remain and a community infrastructure that must be rebuilt at considerable expense.

It is clear that in observing our "rituals," great care must be taken to consider the impact the observance will have on our fellow human being. Service of G-d can demand no less.

Joe Ain dedicated his life to aiding Jewish immigrants

MONTREAL — Community leader Joe Ain, who died recently at age 85, was remembered especially for his dedication to Jewish immigrants and others in distress worldwide.

Ain held several key community positions, including chairship of Montreal's Combined Jewish Appeal in 1971, the national presidency of Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS) from 1971-73, the presidency of Allied Jewish Community Services (AJCS) from 1975-77, and the presidency of United Israel Appeal of Canada Inc. (UIA) from 1980-82.

He was by profession an engineer, and became one of the biggest builders of shopping centres in Quebec.

Born in Poland, Ain knew firsthand what it meant to be an immigrant. He joined his sisters and uncles in Montreal in 1930, and soon found work as a bus mechanic for Montreal Tramways, going to school at night.

Ain had studied mechanics at the ORT school in Vilna. One of his first communal interests was the ORT organization here, and he eventually became its president (1959-61) and remained an honorary member of the World ORT Union central board.

From 1935-39, he studied civil engineering at McGill University and after graduating, worked on the construction of airports for the federal Department of Transport.

After the war, he formed his own construction firm, Ain and Zakuta, and prospered with the housing boom and later moved into development of commercial properties.

Joe Ain

But the community was his greatest interest. He volunteered his services to JIAS, which had helped him when he first arrived, and served as its Eastern region president from 1963-65, and later national president. He was also a vice-president of the international Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society (HIAS), and was active with the Joint Distribution Committee, which at the time aided Jews in 33 countries, serving on its executive.

He became involved with AJCS in the mid-'60s, and within four years was an executive member and by 1973, chair of the executive.

During his presidency, Ain was known for spending more time in AJCS's Cummings House than his business office.

"Joe was a fine gentleman, a good friend. He respected people and was always optimistic that solutions could be found to issues and problems facing the community," said Manny Weiner, who was associate executive director at the time.

Ain was also quite an intellectual, he said, well-read and very knowledgeable about Jewish history.

During his term, Ain oversaw a number of important construction projects during that period, including the Golden Age Association on Westbury Avenue and the Harry Bronfman Square apartments for senior citizens across the street.

After leaving the top job at AJCS, he chaired Project Yeruham, a campaign to improve the quality of life in that poor Israeli town. During the same period, he was honorary president of the YM-YWHA and vice-president of the New York-based Council of Jewish Federations.

In 1982, he was appointed a member of the board of governors of the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem. Through this position, he took a keen interest in the migration and absorption of refugees to Israel..

Ain's commitment to learning was appropriately commemorated by the UIA with the construction of a library in Israel named for him and his wife Fay. He was also made a member of Keren Hayesod's World Board of Trustees.

In addition to his wife Fay, Ain is survived by sons Aaron and his wife Joy, Steven and his wife Rosanne, and daughter Susan Werner and her husband David, and eight grandchildren.

Orlikow fought for social justice

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — David Orlikow, a Jewish member of Parliament for 26 years and a tireless fighter for social justice, died last week of pneumonia. He was 79.

Orlikow served as an NDP MP, representing the riding of Winnipeg North from 1962 until 1988. Prior to his career in federal politics, he served in the Manitoba legislature as a Winnipeg alderman and as a school trustee.

"He never really cared about personal recognition," his daughter Leslie told The CJN. "He did what he could for anyone who asked."

Federal NDP leader Alexa McDonough praised Orlikow as "a champion for working Canadians and their families, who will long be remembered."

Born in Winnipeg, Orlikow graduated from the pharmacy school at the University of Manitoba. He joined the CCF, the NDP's predecessor, in 1934, the year it was formed. He would later become active in labor unions and human rights organizations.

He served as a Winnipeg School Board trustee from 1945 to 1950, and was elected alderman for Ward 3 in 1951.

In 1958, he won the provincial seat of St. John's and held it until 1962, when was elected an MP.

At the time of his election to Parliament, Orlikow was national director of the now-defunct Jewish Labor Committee.

David Orlikow

His father, Louis, who came to Winnipeg in 1904, had been a founder of the city's Jewish Workman's Circle, whose school Orlikow attended as a child.

He once credited his parents with introducing him to socialism, saying it was members of their generation who brought Jewish social democratic traditions with them when they immigrated to Canada from eastern Europe.

In Parliament, Orlikow lobbied on behalf of Soviet Jews and many other issues which affected the Jewish community.

His main interests were employment equity, education, labor and immigration policy. He helped draft Canada's early human rights laws.

In later years, Orlikow played a key role in winning compensation from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) for his wife Velma (nee Kane) and eight other Canadians who claimed to have suffered permanent emotional damage as a result of CIA-backed brainwashing experiments at a Montreal hospital in the early 1950s.

The suit was settled in 1981 for $750,000 (US) and Velma Orlikow won a further settlement from the Royal Victoria Hospital, where the mind-control experiments were carried out.

Velma Orlikow died in 1990.

U of T obtains Hebrew manuscript, book collection

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — A rare manuscript of the Zohar that dates from the early 1400s and may once have belonged to the 17th-century messianic pretender Shabbetai Tzvi is the "crowning jewel" in a large collection of Hebrew manuscripts and printed books recently attained by the University of Toronto (U of T), according to Barry Walfish, a Judaica specialist in the U of T library system.

The collection was a gift from Albert (Dov) Friedberg, head of the Bay Street-based Friedberg Group of Companies, which are the oldest and largest independent futures and foreign currency brokers in Canada, with offices in Toronto and New York. An Orthodox Jew, Friedberg has been collecting rare Hebrew manuscripts and books for at least half of his 50 years.

Modern scholarship has assigned authorship of the Zohar to Moses De Leon in the late 13th century. Only two known Zohar manuscripts predate Friedberg's Zohar, but both are fragmentary while Friedberg's contains most of the full text. As well, its first page bears an inscription that indicates the manuscript was acquired for Amira, an epithet denoting Shabbetai Tzvi, thereby enhanzing its historical interest immeasurably.

"The Zohar manuscript is the most valuable item [in the collection] and the one of greatest scholarly interest," Walfish said. "It's the best manuscript of the Zohar in existence, to our knowledge. It's a very important work for the study of Judaism."

In all, Friedberg donated 35 manuscripts, about 100 printed books of exceptional quality, and three dozen fragments from the Cairo Genizah. Items include a Bible manuscript written by the scribe Joseph ben Judah ibn Merwas, originating in Toledo, Spain, in 1307; and a two-leaf fragment from the Mishnah from the Cairo Genizah, which scholars have variously dated to the 9th and 11th centuries.

Gift from Friedberg

The collection also includes two rare manuscripts by Rashi, one a commentary on the Torah and the other a commentary on the Prophets. Both are of German provenance, date from the 13th century, and are considered of great scholarly importance since Rashi manuscripts from that period are very rare.

According to Walfish, the National Library in Jerusalem was seeking microfilmed copies of the collection in the early 1990s and asked him to be the liaison. However, after receiving numerous requests from scholars to study the Zohar manuscript and other items, Friedberg "decided these things were too important to be in a private library," Walfish said. "That's when he arranged to donate them to us."

(The collection has not been microfilmed, although an Israeli company has been negotiating for the right to publish a facsimile edition of the Zohar manuscript.)

Neither Walfish nor Friedberg would comment on the value of the collection, but it is purportedly worth millions of dollars. The Friedberg Collection of Rare Hebraica has been placed in the Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library in the University of Toronto library system.

Minsk surgeon released

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO —A Jewish surgeon from Minsk, Belarus, who faced retrial on a murder charge, is now a free man, thanks to the efforts of a group from Beth Tzedec Synagogue and its Men's Club.

The group, along with Dr. Carolyn Bennett, Liberal member for St. Paul's, were planning a major effort on behalf of Dr. Albert Lavrenev, 41, when they received word that all charges against him had been dropped.

The Jan. 15 CJN story about the campaign is credited by Herb Landis, vice-chair of the synagogue's Soviet Jewry committee, with freeing the Minsk surgeon, who now plans to emigrate to the United States with his wife.

"The Belarus ambassador to Canada read The CJN story and was unhappy about the unfavorable publicity his country was receiving," Landis said.

Shortly after the story appeared, Berta Dukarsky, a cousin of Lavrenev in Florida, called Genya Intrator, chair of the Soviet Jewry committee, to announce that the charges had been dropped.

"I was in on the conference call with Dukarsky and she was ecstatic about her cousin's release. She was sure The CJN story did it," said Landis.

"It sure has saved us a lot of work because we were in the midst of writing letters to members of the Canadian parliamentary affairs committee," Landis said.

Lavrenev had been acquitted of the charge of murder against a neighbor, Olga Vasilieva, but through a quirk in the Belarus legal system, was facing the same charge again.

The new charge was the result of a complaint by Vaslilieva's son, Nikolai Victorovich Palaznik who reportedly had a grudge of long standing against Lavrenev.

Ukrainian couple gets medical aid

TORONTO — The question of health coverage for an elderly Ukrainian Jewish couple is still in limbo, but at least their urgent needs are being attended to, according to the family.

The couple, Georgi Ilvovski, 91, and his wife, Polia, 83, were denied refugee status but allowed to stay on a minister's humanitarian permit. They have been denied OHIP because they were inadmissible to Canada on medical grounds. The husband has kidney cancer and needs prostate surgery, while his wife is paralyzed on her right side.

Their daughter, Mila Filatova, a concert pianist, said she cannot afford to pay their medical bills.

The couple have been treated at the Lawrence Heights Community Clinic on Flemington Road by Dr. Nina Malayoil, and nursing services have been provided at St. Elizabeth Chronic Hospital at no charge to the family, said Filatova.

In addition, Dr. Arthur Ross has voluntarily done urgent dental work required by Polia Ilvovski.

An appeal to the Ontario Ministry of Health for coverage of the couple was adjourned Jan. 20 until March or April by Jennifer Lothier, hearing chair.

The adjournment was granted because the ministry did not have counsel present, though the Ilvovskis were represented by Patrick McCool, lawyer for Northlea United Church. McCool did not object to the postponement as he has only recently been retained. The ministry was represented at the hearing by Margaret Dougall, a policy analyst.

The right to equal treatment for the Ilvovskis under the Human Rights Charter will be raised at the appeal, McCool told The CJN. He has been asked to represent them by the church, which has assisted the family in other ways.

An important consideration is that the Ilvovskis did not sign a form indicating they were not entitled to health coverage, although later people granted stays on permits were required to do so, McCool said.

A concert in aid of the Ilvovskis held at the church raised $5,000 for the family, Rev. Carolyn Miller said.

The uncertainty of their status under OHIP is a terrible burden, their daughter told The CJN.

Rev. Miller said Polia Ilvovski's condition is so serious she should be in a chronic hospital.

NCJW project aids women in need

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — When a Toronto mother of five recently moved out of a women's shelter after a three-month stay, all the family had to start their new life was the clothing they were wearing.

National Council of Jewish Women of Toronto (NCJW) was there, however, to help them fill their home with many of the necessities.

Rachel Ornoy, chair of Women's Shelter, NCJW's 2-year-old project, says the project originated because the organization wanted to help these women "who often flee their homes with nothing but their children and the clothes on their back."

In the shelter, she says, the family's needs are taken care of, but when they move out on their own, it is usually into an empty apartment. "We thought that if we collected items and drove them to the shelter for distribution, we could help many women in need."

NCJW collects such items as pots, pans, blankets, pillows, curtains, towels, highchairs – "anything that is easily transportable and can be stored at our office until distribution," says Ornoy.

When seeking donations, she asks people to think about the recipient families. "Their lives are in turmoil. They have left the only home they know, with nothing. Many women do not speak English and have no way of making a living. Anything we can do for them is greatly appreciated."

Ornoy seeks the community's help in getting donations and in helping to sort the items received. "It is an ongoing task. Every month we have to go through what we have and make arrangements to have deliveries made."

To donate items or time, call NCJW at 633-5100 and leave a message for the chair of Women's Shelter.

Brian Morris named new CIC head

simply seeks normal relations with other countries.

"Israel is used to being ostracized. Its foreign policy has always had, as a strong component, normalization and recognition. Basically, that's what's happening [with Canada-Israel relations.]"

Now, Israel and Canada need each other, at least at the United Nations.

Canada is lobbying for a seat on the UN Security Council. In return for its support, Israel has asked Canada to help it become a member of one of the large regional voting blocs at the UN.

Israel is the only nation at the UN to be shunned from all voting blocs, and is thus ineligible from sitting on any UN committees. Foreign Minister Lloyd Axworthy has pledged to try and bring about Israel's membership in the Western Europe and Others Group.

The CIC takes some credit for that, and in trying to sway Canada's vote at the UN, with mixed results. It's now concerned that Canada will "temper" its vote at the UN in order to win the Security Council seat.

Also seeing mixed results is the CIC's work with the media.

"Success in that area has not been as great as with government" Morris allows. "I don't think the press has been fair to Israel at all."

Other items on the CIC's agenda in the coming months include:

- Getting Canada to persuade Israel to approve reciprocal enforcement of foreign child support and custody orders.
- Securing a tax treaty to help Canadians who spend part of the year living and working in Israel.
- Relieving the Canadian embargo on the sale to and purchase from Israel of military goods. Last year, Ottawa lifted the ban, but Morris says it is unofficially still in force, preventing Israel from buying Canadian equipment.
- And possibly, bringing Canadian MPs to Israel in conjunction with parliamentarians from South Africa, Britain and Australia.

WLU paper apologizes for Holocaust denial ad

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The student newspaper at Wilfrid Laurier University (WLU) in Waterloo has apologized for carrying an ad that questions the Holocaust.

The ad "goes against everything our paper stands for," said Katherine Harding, editor in chief of the Cord. "It horrified the entire staff."

Harding, 23, said the newspaper's advertising manager accepted the camera-ready ad thinking it "was the exact opposite of what it was." The ad got into the paper without further scrutiny from the editorial staff.

"I feel completely horrible," she said. "We do not endorse this. It disgusts me. I feel bad for people who read our paper and think this [reflects] our policy."

The ad was submitted by the Committee for Open Debate of the Holocaust (CODOH), a U.S.-based organization run by Bradley Smith. The ad offers a $50,000 reward to anyone who can arrange 90 minutes of airtime on network television to run a video about Auschwitz. The ad refers to "the disputed Auschwitz 'gas chamber'" and "'gas chamber' stories."

Smith is well known among those who track the extremist right for targeting student newspapers in North America to promote a Holocaust-denial message. In November, the Varsity, the student newspaper at the University of Toronto, carried the ad. The paper subsequently apologized and ran several articles to attempt to counteract the ad's message.

The Cord is adopting a similar approach, Harding said.

The Cord will do the following:
- it will print a front page retraction and apology;
- it will run a story submitted by Canadian Jewish Congress on Holocaust denial;
- it will print a feature story on hate literature on the Internet in Canada;
- it will run an article on two Waterloo-area Holocaust survivors;
- it will open up extra space on the letters page for comments about the ad;
- it will donate the $110 cost of the ad to the Waterloo County Holocaust Education Committee;
- it will send e-mail warnings about the ad to other university and college newspapers;
- it will implement a policy on screening controversial ads for content.

Harding said that until the CODOH ad, the Cord did not have a set of guidelines on scrutinizing advertising copy. The paper did have editorial parameters against racist, homophobic and sexist articles, she said, but in the aftermath of the ad, the board of WLU Student Publications adopted a set of advertising guidelines as well.

Tom Hrubes, president of WLU Student Publications, said the new advertising guidelines would ban ads that are considered racist.

Members of the Jewish community said they were gratified the staff of the paper quickly recognized they had made a mistake and were attempting to rectify it.

"It's a shame that it happened in the first place," said Michael Soberman, director of community services and youth activities for Canadian Jewish Congress. In a letter to Hrubes, Soberman pointed out that Smith and CODOH are among the "most virulent and prolific Holocaust-denial groups in North America."

Heath Applebaum, founder and former president of the WLU Jewish Students Association, said he received 30 to 40 phone calls from students and faculty concerned about the ad. He immediately contacted Harding and she agreed to carry an interview of two Holocaust survivors by Applebaum, former international editor of the Cord and currently a staff writer at the newspaper.

"We thought the best form of damage control would be to educate people that Holocaust denial is not open for debate, that it is promoting hatred," he said.

Torah text study encouraged

By SUSAN JACOBS
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — A new educational initiative launched by Hillel aims to encourage college students to study the Torah's text directly.

Thanks to a recent $5 million grant, the Joseph Meyerhoff Centre for Jewish Learning will emphasize informal study of Jewish texts. Sessions may take place in dormitories, dining halls and student unions.

The centre is based at the Washington headquarters of Hillel, the Foundation for Jewish Campus Life.

The uniqueness of the program is its emphasis on traditional Jewish texts.

"Students will respond, they'll connect to the original text, the words, the story," said Richard Joel, president and international director of Hillel.

Traditional sources, especially those in Hebrew, are often intimidating, Joel said. The centre's programs, which will be distributed to Hillels on campuses across the country, "will allow them to encounter text by having a one-on-one relationship with the Torah."

Joel made a distinction between Jewish study and Jewish learning. He characterized study as the occupation of formal classroom instruction, now available on many college campuses, in part, because of Hillel's influence. Jewish learning, in contrast, is informal interaction with traditional sacred texts.

While individual campuses have had text-based learning programs for years, the Meyerhoff Centre hopes to makes this standard programming on a national and international basis.

The centre "takes what is anecdotal and idiosyncratic" on college campuses and "makes the entire franchise respond to it," said Joel.

Vancouver-based shaliach promotes Israel programs

BY DAVID J. LITVAK
Pacific Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Ran Harash, shaliach for Pacific Northwestern Jewry and regional coordinator for the Habonim Dror youth movement, travels in the region promoting Israel-based programs and the Israeli way of life to Jews in British Columbia, Washington and Oregon.

"I try to maintain a constant connection with Israel for the northwest region," says Harash, a native of Kibbutz Yiron in the Upper Galilee. "Basically, I promote any Israel affiliated issues in this region, such as giving information on aliyah, trying to help people find jobs in Israel and helping to promote the Web sites that are related to Israel."

Harash believes that involvement with local youth movements such as Habonim Dror is a good way to promote Israel. "Exposing Jewish children to Israeli culture and programs has been proven to be an effective way of helping to maintain people's Jewish identity, trying to prevent assimilation and intermarriage, and staying within the local Jewish community."

His involvement with Habonim Dror also entails being an administrator for Camp Miriam, a non-profit Jewish camp located on Gabriola Island, off the coast of Vancouver Island, which attracts Jewish campers from around the region, as well as from Alaska, Florida, New York, and even Israel.

The aliyah-in-stages premise implemented two years ago, just prior to Harash's arrival in Vancouver, operates on the principle that aliyah "is a process that has to take some time, and therefore, an attempt is made to provide a suitable program for each applicant."

Harash says that part of the rationale of the aliyah-in-stages process and the Israel Experience programs is to help make people aware of the fact that a trip to Israel helps to "promote Jewish continuity."

Those who travel to Israel, he says, are able to experience living a "fully Jewish life" in a country that is predominantly Jewish. Even those who don't make aliyah, he says, "become more dedicated leaders of their own Jewish communities.'

Although Harash is based in Vancouver – he shares an office in the Vancouver Jewish Community Centre with the Canadian Zionist Federation – he travels to Seattle monthly and to the Mittleman Jewish Community Centre in Portland, Ore., every two months. His Seattle visits are sponsored by Rabbi Dan Bridge and Linda Karlin, employees of Hillel House at the University of Washington.

Harash provides information to local residents about a variety of opportunities including a hockey camp in northern Israel, kibbutz programs, and one-year work/study programs such as WUJS, which is offered to young Jewish professionals.

He also travels to Israel fairs in both cities and has helped to plan Israel's 50th anniversary celebrations in Seattle, Portland and Vancouver.

Harash says he has observed similarities between the Jewish communities of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia. He believes that "partially because of their isolation from major Jewish centres, all three communities are facing similar issues in their daily lives."

Among those issues, he says, is the decentralized nature of the Jewish communities in the region, the broad range of Jewish beliefs and the high intermarriage and assimilation rates.

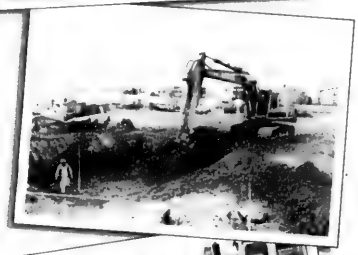
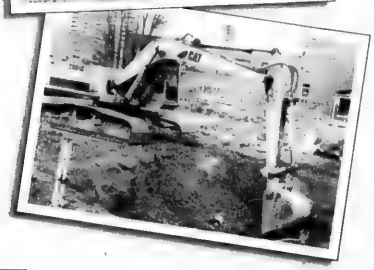
Shaping the Future

The shovels are in the ground!

The hoarding is up and the digging is underway. As of November 18, 1997, construction officially began on the new Apotex Centre, Jewish Home for the Aged and The Centre for Cognitive Disorders*. The project is expected to take two years to complete.*

By September 1998, just eight months away, the entire concrete structure from ground to roof should be built. By November, the brick exterior should be finished. It will then take approximately 10 months to a year to complete the interior of the building and prepare it for occupancy.





MILESTONES

1998

February	Demolition of west wing (the former hospital) complete
March	Excavation complete
April	Foundation complete
September	Concrete structure from ground to roof complete
November	Bricking of exterior walls complete
December	Roofing complete

1999

February	Interior walls and framing complete
June	Elevators installed
July	Interior finishes complete
August	Exterior landscaping complete
Fall	Building cleanup in preparation for moving day

Desperately seeking Khatami

By BRIAN MORRIS

American and Israeli officials must be wondering what all the fuss was about. In his much anticipated interview with CNN, Iranian President Mohammed Khatami certainly projected a more sophisticated style than his revolutionary predecessors. But the obvious questions remain: Where is the evidence of moderation in Iranian behavior to warrant an easing of U.S. economic pressure on Tehran? Where is the evidence of interest in a serious rapprochement with Israel?

Guest Voice

True, one should not diminish the symbolic importance of Khatami's appearance on U.S. television or the fact that the entire interview was broadcast in Iran. At the same time, one is struck more by the smoothness of Khatami's delivery than by the substance of his remarks.

For example, while regretting that the 1979 hostage-taking at the U.S. embassy in Tehran had "hurt the feelings of the great American people," Khatami never got around to actually apologizing for the incident. Rather, he insisted that it must be understood in the broader context of the youthful hostage-takers' "revolutionary fervor" and Iran's historic grievances against the United States.

Predictable was Khatami's denial that Iran was actively pursuing a nuclear military option. Unfortunately, the CNN interviewer did not challenge Khatami about Iran's efforts to acquire other weapons of mass destruction (including biological and chemical warheads and long-range ballistic missiles) or the open cooperation between Tehran and Moscow in the transfer of sophisticated military technology.

Equally amazing were Khatami's pronouncements about international terrorism. Iran, he declared, deplores and condemns all forms of terrorism as contrary to the precepts of the Koran. He also denied that any Iranian official ever was involved in funding or otherwise supporting terrorism – this despite Tehran's open relationship with Hezbollah and other Muslim extremist movements.

In an impressive display of "double speak," Khatami drew a distinction between terrorism and national liberation. Iran, he declared, is morally justified in supporting the efforts of all "oppressed peoples" – especially the Palestinians, who are "engaged in combatting [Israeli] state terrorism." This contradictory logic reinforces the need for careful analysis of every word uttered by Iran's leadership.

According to Khatami, Iran opposes the Middle East peace process only because it is "morally flawed and destined to failure," and not, he implied, because of an inherent aversion on the part of revolutionary Islam to living in peace with Jews. He condemned anti-Semitism as a racist Western concept alien to the Middle East and reminded viewers that Muslim and Jew "have lived harmoniously together for centuries." He did not mention that in Islamic countries, Jews were always subordinated to second-class status.

For Khatami, the problem is not with the Jewish people but with Jewish nationalism – Zionism – and Israel, which he called a "racist, terrorist regime." He charged that Israelis and world Zionists had manipulated anti-Semitism "into a tool for the imposition of a whole range of improper policies and practices on the people of the Middle East and Muslims in general... Certain foreign policy decisions of the United States are in fact made in Tel Aviv and not in Washington."

These offensive and inflammatory remarks reveal Khatami's true biases and the essence of Iran's current Middle East policy. Iran remains fundamentally opposed not only to the Oslo process but to the very concept of independent Jewish sovereignty anywhere in the Middle East.

Perhaps one day, true rapprochement with Iran will be possible and perhaps Mohammed Khatami is the man to deliver it. However, such rapprochement will have to be premised on a substantive transformation in Iranian behavior rather than merely a superficial – if carefully crafted – change in style. The international community, including Canada, must continue to press Tehran to provide firm evidence of its permanent commitment to political liberalization at home and moderation abroad.

Montreal agencies coping after storm

MONTREAL — Le Mercaz, the Jewish agency that normally supplied second-hand clothing and other goods to the community's needy, took on an expanded role during the ice-storm aftermath.

The return of power to the West End where most Montreal Jews live only marked the beginning of the great demand of Le Mercaz's resources. With many Quebecers on the South Shore and beyond still without power, the agency expanded its mandate beyond the Jewish community, playing "matchmaker" between corporate and individual donors of food, clothing, blankets and other supplies, and relief organizations.

At times, Le Mercaz was the clearing house for goods to a variety of institutions: toys to the Montreal General Hospital, baby food and undergarments to the Old Brewery Mission, linens to the Salvation Army, blankets to Montreal Harvest, as well as food and clothing to a half-dozen shelters.

Le Mercaz itself is now in need of assistance to replenish its supplies of food and clothing. The staff foresees the demand for food increasing at the end of this month because those on social benefits have likely exhausted their funds with the extra expenses associated with the storm.

Project Genesis advises welfare recipients who lost power for a minimum of 24 hours to go to their welfare office where they will be given a questionnaire to evaluate their individual situation and determine the amount of compensation they will receive.

The maximum claim for perishable food lost for a single person is $150 and for a family $400, depending on the family composition.

Claims can also be made for household appliances destroyed or damaged as a result of the outage up to $1,500 for individuals and $4,000 for families. Proof of the value of the goods must be provided.

A guarantee of payment will be issued rather than cash. This guarantee can be used at any grocery store, which will remit the paper to the welfare office for reimbursement.

Welfare recipients cannot receive both the reclamation from welfare and the $10 a day compensation offered to certain storm victims through the municipalities.

Tenants who want to be compensated for the period of time they had to abandon their homes should negotiate first with their landlords, Project Genesis suggests. If that fails, they can try applying to the Rental Board for a rent reduction.

Auberge Shalom...pour femmes, the shelter for battered women and their children run by the National Council of Jewish Women, is grateful to all those which helped it get back in operation after the storm.

Auberge Shalom was closed for eight days because of the blackout, the first time in its 9½-year history that it could not provide a safe haven to its clients.

After one night toughing it out, clients were transferred to other shelters, including Le Parados and Le Dauphinelle.

Bayefsky exhibit opens in Ottawa

By DIANE KOVEN
Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA — In the midst of the controversy about the proposed Holocaust Gallery in Ottawa's Canadian War Museum, and in the middle of a blinding snow storm, an important art exhibit opened at the museum on Jan. 16.

Reflections on the Holocaust: The Art of Aba Bayefsky consists of some 50 works representing half a century of memories and images. The exhibit, which runs until September, is a synthesis of two collections that resulted from Bayefsky's experience as a Canadian war artist when he visited Bergen-Belsen at the age of 22.

Born and raised in Toronto, Bayefsky displayed an early interest in art. He studied at the Children's Art Centre of the Art Gallery of Ontario and later at Central Technical School. At 21, two years after enlisting in the Royal Canadian Air Force, he was appointed an official war artist and assigned to depict airborne operations over north-west Europe.

During his attachment to the No. 39 (Reconnaissance) Wing of the RCAF's Second Tactical Air Force, he recorded his experiences at Bergen-Belsen, experiences that influenced his life and art.

The exhibition consists of nine works from the museum's permanent collection created by Bayefsky in May and June 1945. Another 41 drawings and watercolors and four oil paintings from Bayefsky's personal collection, are also being shown.

Since the announcement several months ago that a memorial Holocaust gallery would form part of the proposed addition to the Canadian War Museum, veterans' groups and individuals have mounted protests, saying that the venue is not appropriate for such a gallery. The current exhibition appears to contradict this sentiment because the images on display record the Holocaust, yet they were created as part of the artist's duties in his service to Canada.

"I don't think there is any question that war is war and that this is an appalling experience for anyone to see," says Bayefsky, "It seems most appropriate that this experience of the Jewish people be identified with war because it was war ...I feel it is appropriate for this gallery."

When making a donation for all occasions, please remember

CJA campaign pledges up

By MYRON LOVE
Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The usually cheerful Gerry Koffman has good reason to be upbeat this year. The executive director of Winnipeg's annual Combined Jewish Appeal (CJA) campaign reports that the 1997-98 campaign is the first one in years to show an increase over the year before.

As of the middle of January, he says, total pledges are just over $3 million, compared to $2.8 million at this point last year and $2.9 million when the campaign was officially closed in April. Pledges for the local community are near $2.1 million, as compared to $1, 850,000 last year.

(Winnipeg is the only community in North America that has a two-line card offering donors the option of determining how much they want to give to Israel and how much to the local community.)

Koffman attributes the increased giving this year to several factors.

The opening of the Asper Jewish Community Campus in September has given the Jewish community a shot of renewed self-esteem, he suggests. As well, the Manitoba economy is noticeably better than it has been in years.

"I also think that because we have two lines, a number of people who are unhappy with the current government in Israel are directing more of their gift to the local community," he says.

Arafat, Albright meeting planned for Europe

By JAY BUSHINSKY, MARGOT DUDKEVITCH, and MOHAMMED NAJIB
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Palestinian officials said Sunday that Palestinian Authority (PA) Chairman Yasser Arafat would meet with U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright in Europe in two weeks to discuss U.S. proposals about how to move the peace process forward.

Albright briefed Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu by telephone on the discussions that U.S. President Bill Clinton and she conducted last Thursday with Arafat.

She was expected to propose a date for another round of talks with Netanyahu within the next two weeks.

Sources said they believed the meeting would be held in western Europe.

Netanyahu told the cabinet Sunday that the United States has moved closer to Israel on the issue of redeployment in the West Bank in that it may settle for a handover of a smaller percentage of territory to the Palestinians than before last week's talks in Washington.

"Regarding the redeployment," the cabinet communique said, "there still is a gap between Israel and the United States as to its scope, although the gap between these positions has been reduced."

"The main thing is the U. S. realization that no government in Israel can withdraw from territory before we see a Palestinian crackdown against terrorism and revision of the Palestinian Covenant," said David Bar-Illan, Netanyahu's communications adviser.

Referring to the threats of violence "made by some members of the Palestinian Authority," Netanyahu said they are extremely serious and "Israel will respond aggressively should the Palestinians engage in violence or threaten to do so."

In Jericho PA negotiator Saeb Erekat said the Palestinians would agree to international arbitration to get the peace process going again.

Arafat's adviser Marwan Kanafani said Sunday that Arafat had told Clinton he would ask the "PLO's Executive Committee to meet to confirm the cancellation of the mentioned articles in the PLO charter."

Israeli satellite falls to watery grave

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Space Agency technicians are still trying to figure out what went wrong with the rocket booster that failed to put the $50-million Ofek 4 spy satellite into orbit, but the agency's head insisted the malfunction has not harmed the reputation of Israel's space industries.

"Israel Aircraft Industries and all the other space industries in the country still have a good name," said Avi Har-Even, director general of the Space Agency. "We are gritting our teeth and going on.

"What we know is that the malfunction was in the missile, the satellite launcher called the Shavit, and not in the satellite. The satellite simply did not get into orbit," Har-Even told Army Radio last weekend.

The secret launch took place last Thursday at around 2 p.m., but the failure was put under heavy censorship until just before midnight.

Har-Even said that when the Ofek 4 failed to reach orbit, it fell back to earth. "It continued in a ballistic trajectory and fell, in this case, into the sea."

Israel is the only country which launches satellites into a western orbit. The reason is that it would prefer its satellites or other payloads to fall into the sea in case of malfunction.

Har-Even said they would not try to locate and retrieve the satellite. "That is impossible. It is a long way away," he said.

The Shavit is a small launcher that puts satellites into low earth orbit and is built by IAI's MLM Division plant in Be'er Ya'acov, where the Arrow anti-ballistic missile is also produced.

"The launch of Ofek 4 was set to coincide with the end of Israel's first spy satellite, Ofek 3, which was launched in April 1995.

Ofek 3 was designed to last about two years, but it has already exceeded the expectations of its builders.

"Usually the limitations depend on their power sources and the aging of parts," Har-Even said. "This sort of low earth orbit satellite – between 400 and 700 kilometres – lasts for 3 to 3.5 years. For the time being, the [Ofek 3] works well beyond our expectations."

Western sources said the 280-kilo spy satellite's cameras send back high resolution black and white photos in real time.

Har-Even refused to elaborate on its functions.

"This sort of satellite can be loaded with all sorts of things. It is a platform and the rest you use for your needs, be they science, agriculture, ecology, communications…IAI had a number of aims. Some of them are still in the stage of commercial secrets. We are sorry about what happened. It is not the satellite's fault."

He said satellites are usually covered by insurance, since there are always fears launches will fail.

"If [the launch] had succeeded, it would have been used for all sorts of commercial aims," he said.

"We still have great benefits. What is nice with us is that with our relatively small budget, we are able to do what space agencies of other countries do with budgets four, five, and six times ours."

Hussein, Mordechai meet

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai was to meet with King Hussein in Amman Monday evening at the monarch's invitation. He was also to meet with Crown Prince Hassan and other Jordanian officials.

Mordechai had been invited last month, but his visit comes a day after King Hussein's surprise trip to Egypt, where he met with President Hosni Mubarak.

Mordechai and King Hussein are expected to discuss the peace process and the redeployment being offered to the Palestinians, defense sources said.

They added that Mordechai will also raise the matter of terrorism and seek to enhance the cooperation between security bodies in both countries.

King Hussein has reportedly rejected an Israeli request to reopen the Mossad office in Amman, closed since the September Mashaal affair.

Mordechai will be traveling with a small entourage including David Ivry, his top adviser; Brig.-Gen. Ya'acov Amidror, his military aide; and Avi Benayahu, his media adviser. No Israeli journalists were invited to cover the event.

Covenant revision refused

By MARGOT DUDKEVITCH and MOHAMMED NAJIB
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Palestinian officials rejected Israel's demands to amend the Palestinian Covenant, insisting that articles calling for the destruction of Israel had already been annulled in 1996.

In Jericho, top Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat said Arafat presented U.S. President Bill Clinton with a letter last week, specifying what was annulled.

"After receiving our clarifications, there was an American understanding of our position regarding the...charter and security issues," he said.

"The PNC [Palestine National Council] will not reconvene. It convened in 1996 and cancelled the articles which contradicted the mutual letters of recognition."

But Israel's insistence that the covenant be revised by the PNC was reiterated Sunday by Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's communications adviser David Bar-Illan.

"Just because they refuse to do it doesn't mean that we have to accept that," he said.

Bar-Illan contended that the covenant's revision was a "sine qua non" for any IDF redeployment.

"That is the only way it can be changed – by a two-thirds majority of the PNC," Bar-Illan said.

Family of Monica Lewinsky belongs to California temple

By TOM TUGEND
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

LOS ANGELES — Monica Lewinsky, the former White House intern alleged to have had an affair with U.S. President Bill Clinton, is the daughter of a prominent Los Angeles Jewish physician.

Dr. Bernard S. Lewinsky and Monica's mother, Marcia, joined Sinai Temple, an upscale West Los Angeles Conservative synagogue, in the mid-1970s, and Monica later attended the temple's religious school. The Lewinsky family holds a current membership at the temple.

Monica grew up in Beverly Hills, Calif., and attended Beverly Hills High School, which is fictionally portrayed on the television show Beverly Hills 90210. She then transferred to Bel Air Prep, an exclusive private school from which she graduated in 1991.

Monica attended a junior college in Santa Monica, Calif., and then transferred to Lewis and Clark College in Portland, Ore., from which she received a bachelor's degree in psychology in 1995.

The New York Times reported that Monica's former neighbors in Portland described her as an outgoing young woman who studied a lot and babysat for families in the neighborhood.

Lewinsky, now married to his second wife, Barbara, is an oncologist who lives in the upscale neighborhood of Brentwood in West Los Angeles.

He is affiliated with the Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hospital and the UCLA Medical Centre, and maintains private offices in Sherman Oaks and West Hills, two San Fernando Valley communities in suburban Los Angeles.

Monica showed her support for the Democratic Party in 1996, when she donated $250 to its coffers. Her mother contributed $1,000 to the Democratic National Committee the same year.

LAKE SUCCESS, N.Y., Jan. 21 (JTA) — The British government notified the United Nations today that it would not comply with the UN recommendations that the British withdraw from a port in the Jewish area of Palestine by Feb. 1, in order to facilitate Jewish immigration.

Britain does not intend to admit into Palestine more than the present quota of 1,500 Jewish immigrants a month until the termination of the mandate. Sir Alexander Cadogan, British representative at the UN said the British navy will continue to intercept all ships carrying "illegal" Jewish immigrants to Palestine until the mandate is surrendered.

He was modest to an extreme

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

Without a doubt Zevulun Hammer was the most accessible cabinet member. Reporters felt free to phone him at any time and disturb him at home. He may have been busy and preoccupied, but the voice on the other end was always more than polite. It was friendly to the point of giving the impression of delight at hearing from a friend.

The calls didn't always have to do with business. He also was available to hear opinions and gripes about the educational system and would take what he heard seriously. Though politically one of the most powerful figures in public life, Hammer was never higher than thou. In fact, it was almost the reverse. He was modest and unassuming, nearly to an extreme.

Hammer was often derided, especially during his first stint as a minister in the 1970s, for sounding like a bar mitzvah boy, innocently rolling his eyes heavenward. But there really was something of the bar mitzvah boy in him; he was very sincere, idealistic, and easily moved by any story of personal hardship – often to tears.

At the same time, this sentimental, ostensibly naive man was a political heavyweight who helped change the country's entire political configuration. When he first appeared on the National Religious party (NRP) scene, the NRP was run by European-born politicians whose main objective was to bend with the prevailing political winds blown by the omnipotent Labor party, and to somehow win concessions for various religious demands. The NRP was then far more religious and far less nationalistic. It was the object of ridicule for its accommodation and compromises. It was accused of corruption and shady dealing.

Hammer was a reformer and always squeaky clean, both personally and politically. He helped create a different NRP. He was, significantly, the first sabra NRP leader and he paved the way for a party more sure of itself in society's mainstream, less of a special interest group, less for sale, more nationalistic, and extremely vocal on issues far removed from local religious council politics.

His young guard, which undermined and then toppled the old NRP establishment, also shook and then cast aside the alliance with Labor. Gush Emunim, which Hammer helped found, was responsible for the great settlement movement in the territories, and the NRP in turn nurtured and protected the Gush. The NRP at times appeared to the right of the Likud, and Hammer stayed in the opposition during the Labor government of 1992 to 1996.

But Hammer should not be seen as unequivocally and inflexibly far-right. He was more complex than that. He started out by putting a renewed emphasis on the first initial in his party's acronym, but he was a moderate hawk and a pragmatist. He retreated from militant positions for a time, and especially took to heart the heavy casualties among hesder yeshivah students in Lebanon.

Hammer was always very carefully attuned to his party. His political fingers were constantly on its pulse. This is not to say that he was a weak figurehead. In fact, for the past 20 years Hammer was the uncontested leader of a party which had once been torn by internal strife and malignant intrigue.

After he took over, he did away with the warring factions. He evinced an uncanny ability to reconcile the deep differences between many of the NRPs disparate components. He was in full control of a party that was difficult to control, but he was never arrogant and never dictatorial. Hammer led but he also listened. He was very sensitive to every nuance and mood swing in his very ideological party.

Overwhelming sentiment in the NRP made him appear to veer rightward again, especially since the Oslo accords. Yet Hammer could voice the same opinions as his more outspoken party colleagues, while seeming to send a softer-spoken message. He didn't ignore reality and was open to negotiations, while at the same time resolutely sticking to his ground.

That made him a unique phenomenon in the political arena – he could communicate with the secular and the religious, the hawk and the dove. Despite his very distinct positions, he was capable of verbal tolerance and a healing dialogue. He was as accessible to his political foes as he was to nagging reporters.

NRP leader dies at 61

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Zevulun Hammer, described as an embodiment of the religious Zionist movement, died last Tuesday morning of cancer. He was 61.

Hammer, the leader of the National Religious party and Israel's deputy prime minister and education minister, was remembered across Israel's political spectrum as a dedicated public servant.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, in Washington at the time for talks with President Bill Clinton, said in a statement that Hammer's life was shaped by his love for Israel and Jewish values, which he worked to instil in younger generations.

President Ezer Weizman recalled Hammer as someone who in his life and work understood the connection between Jewish tradition and the new Israel. He described him as someone who integrated his religious Zionist heritage to serve the state with faith and passion.

Canada/Israel commerce jumps following trade deal

Indeed, high-tech helped fuel the boost in numbers, accounting on its own for fully 43 percent of all Israeli imports from Canada, and 27 percent of all Israeli exports to Canada.

Instead of looking at percentages in individual categories, the trade commission examines which categories account for the largest percentage of overall trade.

Almost a quarter of all Israeli exports to Canada were precious stones, including diamonds. And diamonds, probably for industrial use, accounted for the single biggest increase in Israeli imports from Canada last year over 1996.

Israel also did a booming export to Canada of hides and leathers, as well as headgear and footwear, the latter including the popular Naot sandals.

The arrival in Israel of Loblaws' President's Choice label is being credited with helping to boost Israel's imports of Canadian prepared foodstuffs by 38 percent. At the same time, however, exports of all Israeli foods to Canada dropped by seven percent.

The free trade deal lifted duties on all industrial goods, with two exceptions: women's swimwear, at Canada's request, and certain cotton fabrics, at Israel's request. Varsano-Barzilay said those are scheduled to be phased out over the next two years.

Yael Varsano-Barzilay

The "clear trend" in trade, Varsano-Barzilay said, is in software, high-tech and biotechnology.

The treaty includes trade with the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, although Canada is pursuing separate agreements with the Palestinians.

Apart from boosting trade, the trade pact also delivered a shot in the arm to Canadian companies doing business in Israel, and vice-versa. Among the deals last year:

• Northern Telecom of Canada bought 21 percent of Telrad, one of Israel's largest telecommunications firms, for $45 million.

• Icon, an Ottawa-based software company, signed a million-dollar agreement with Israel's Yael Software for applications Icon is developing.

• Motorola Communications of Israel signed a deal to supply Toronto-based Clearnet with customer billing software.

• Nice Systems of Israel, which develops telephone hardware and software, acquired Dees Communications of Vancouver for $8 million.

• Toronto's Consumer Packaging Inc. bought 25 percent of Phoenicia Glass Works in Israel for $4.3 million.

• NMF Canada Ltd. signed a $15-million deal with Israel Aircraft Industries to supply the skins for Galaxy and Astra aircraft wings.

• Newbridge Networks of Kanata, Ont., joined with the German giant Siemens AG to buy Radnet in Israel for $107 million.

• Canadian Highways International Corp. became one of two finalists in the tender to build a $1 billion cross-Israel toll highway.

Other Canadian companies pursuing ongoing deals in Israel include Bombardier Inc, which wants to sell Dash-8 planes to Israel's Arkia airline; and TransCanada Pipelines Ltd., which is pursuing construction of a natural gas pipeline.

Meanwhile, the Canada-Israel Industrial Research & Development Foundation, founded in 1994 to promote joint R&D, has to date invested nearly $6 million in 16 projects.

cities and rural areas, and are not Jews according to Halachah. This has prevented their complete integration into Israeli society, because – in part – it keeps them from marrying Jews in Israel. We are speaking of a difficult humanitarian problem – national and personal – that urgently needs a suitable solution."

The recommendations said that the "command of the hour is unity. It is agreed upon that it is suitable to have a governmental conversion procedure – according to the law of Torah – that will be accepted by all of Israel."

The joint institute, according to the panel, will represent Judaism in all its variations and streams.

"The curriculum will emphasize the uniqueness of the Jewish people and its Torah, and what unites the Jewish people in its variations and streams."

In addition, the panel called for the establishment by the Chief Rabbinate of the special conversion courts.

"Conversion in Israel will be performed according to the laws of Torah," the panel wrote, adding: "The state institutions will recognize only these conversions."

Israel prepares to welcome tourists for 50th birthday bash

By DAVID LAZARUS
Staff Reporter

JERUSALEM — Israel is gearing up for its 50th birthday bash, hoping that Jewish tourists will flock there in healthy numbers, Israeli tourism officials are saying.

From posh resorts in Eilat and the Dead Sea to the stark beauty of the Timna Valley to the traditional sites of Jerusalem that have drawn millions to the Holy Land, Israel offers something for everyone.

And there will even be more to offer this year, when Israel marks 50 years since it became a state, with community-run programs all over the country. On Independence day, April 30, an estimated 50,000 are predicted to be on hand to witness concerts and audio-visual productions as part of the celebrations.

Yet Israeli officials who met recently with a visiting delegation of Canadian Jewish media on a trip sponsored by the Tourism Ministry, continue to struggle against the perception that Israel is unsafe.

They readily concede that tourism was down six percent in 1997, in part attributable to a spate of terrorist attacks, one of which took place on Jerusalem's tourist pedestrian mall, Ben Yehuda Street.

But that decline, they stressed, was nowhere close to the 30 or 40 percent predicted by what they portray as media doomsayers – including Israel's home-grown media.

It's true, Israeli tourism marketers tremble a bit every time a terrorist bomb explodes.

But terrorism, tourism officials explain, tends more to affect long-term plans, not individuals who have booked a flight a couple of months in advance.

Officials bridle at the message the media is sending.

"Everyone thought tourism would be a disaster," David Ben-Zion, director of the ministry's North American operations, told the group.

"But it is not the way the media like to portray it. No matter what people say, there is still only one Holy Land, and it is a safe destination for everyone."

Canadian numbers tell the tale.

Traffic to Israel from Canada in 1997 hovered around the 50,000 mark, consistent with previous years yet fragile, and in 1998, Ben-Zion hopes for a "much better year."

One of the biggest challenges for the Tourism Ministry is to make up for the slack seen since the peace process faltered, according to Roby Harly, director of the ministry's overseas offices and marketing department.

Between 1991 and 1995 – the years of the Labor government and the signing of the peace deal with the PLO – the giddy mood that prevailed doubled the number of tourists and set off a boom in hotel construction by international hotel chains.

Estimates that tourism would stay at that level, however, proved to be presumptuous, Harly admitted. Hotels were caught off guard with too many staff and too much infrastructure set up for the number visits that did not stay at predicted levels.

That being said, record numbers of tourists from Europe are anticipated this year.

Record number of tourists from Europe are anticipated

Harly expressed a desire for "more of our Jewish friends" to come, but it is a market, he conceded, that his ministry has tended to take for granted.

"The Jewish market is always with us," Harly said, and difficult to reach beyond a certain level.

In is estimated, for example, that about 50 percent of American Jews have visited Israel. But that remains a percentage that is proving hard to improve upon.

"The fact that a potential visitor is Jewish should give Israel an advantage, but there has been nothing we have been able to do about it," Harly said.

In the United Kingdom, Harly said, the ministry placed advertising in the Jewish media but it had no effect.

"So I said instead, let's go after tourists and Jews who do not read the [London Jewish] Chronicle."

"I'm not saying we should not advertise in the Jewish press," Harly said, only that there is more potential success to be had among "integrated" Jews who come as tourists, and not necessarily as Jews.

Ben-Zion echoes the sentiment that the Jewish market, ironically enough, has always been the toughest one to crack, although he is quick to add that "Canada has not been a problem."

Idit Caro, the ministry's public relations and marketing director, said that even if some Jews cancel in the wake of a terrorism incident, eventually they do come. "Three months later and they forget about it and they come," she said.

So who else is coming?

Well, Europeans, by the planeload, especially to resort areas like Eilat and the Dead Sea. Both are booming, with five-star hotels, spas, warm winter weather and numerous tourist attractions. It's a tougher task to draw North Americans because if it's just the sun they're looking for, Florida, Mexico and the Caribbean are closer. But from Europe, tourist traffic is up 25 percent. Eilat has sun 350 days a year.

Christians, too, come in huge numbers to visit the holy sights. Harly said a recent call by the Pope for Catholics to visit both Vatican City and Israel should bring in about 4.5 million tourists in the years bracketing and including the new millennium. Even the Pope himself, it is hoped, might make his first trip.

That target group, Ben-Zion indicated, will include a marketing focus on Quebec, with its 90 percent Catholic population.

"We are mounting a huge operation," Harly said, including studies of Jerusalem's holy sites to prevent bottlenecks from forming at the most popular.

Still, except for specific target groups such as Christian pilgrims, tourism officials are resisting marketing Israel solely for its obvious religious connections, or in Harly's words, "as a monastery."

"The majority of people also come to have a good time," Harly said. And that means besides promoting Israel as the Holy Land, it should also be promoted for its great restaurants, its beaches and its unique history and culture. Simply, to show Israel for what it is, a "modern, great country."

There are also flexible packages that include the religious and recreational, combining, for example, Jerusalem and Eilat, and perhaps Petra, across the Gulf of Aquaba in Jordan.

While plans for Israel's 50th anniversary have been toned down, Caro said Israel's jubilee year will also be one of the natural marketing focuses.

One of the problems in terms of promoting Israel for the 50th anniversary, Harly said, has been that marketing campaigns must get underway as much as two years in advance

But despite the many reported budgeting and organizational troubles, it will still be Israel's birthday.

"We will not be doing huge festivals," Caro said, "but we will definitely show what Israel has accomplished."

Hormone replacement not required for all women

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Menopausal women considering hormone replacement therapy must weigh the risks and benefits, "and they're not the same for the person sitting beside you as they are for you," cautioned a Toronto physician at a recent meeting.

Dr. Christine Derzko, an associate professor in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the University of Toronto, called hormones "a wonderful miracle drug," but noted that not all women have to take them.

She and Dr. Jenny Heathcote, a University of Toronto professor of Medicine, were speaking at a Weizmann Women & Science program entitled Challenges Facing Women: Their Careers and Their Health.

Hormones lower the incidence of heart attack, strokes and bowel cancer, minimize joint aches, arthritis, bone loss, the risk of Alzheimer disease and even wrinkles, noted Derzko.

So why, if hormones are so good, do women not want to take them? she asked. Thirty percent of women don't even fill their prescription, she said.

The most common reason is fear of breast cancer, even though the number one killer of women is heart disease, said Derzko. "Every woman knows she has a 1 in 9 [lifetime] chance of getting breast cancer. It's not recognized they have a 6 in 9 chance of getting heart disease and a 4 in 9 chance of getting osteoporosis."

"With hormones we lower the incidence of heart attack by about 50 percent. There are fewer deaths and less progression of established disease."

Hormones can also stop bone loss and even increase bone density in women with osteoporosis. "That's very, very gratifying. Furthermore, women die of consequences of hip fractures, and so by reducing fractures we in fact save lives."

Some studies show an increased risk of breast cancer with hormones, but the risk "does not increase dramatically" with "short-term" (five years or less) use.

Although she believes the benefits of hormones far outweigh the risks – particularly with new modes of treatment – she advised women to re-evaluate their needs on an on-going basis.

"Five years later [a woman not taking hormones] may find her bones are bad or there's heart attack in the family, or conversely she may be on hormones and have someone close to her who has breast cancer, and that frightens her too much."

Physicians are looking at alternative therapies with great interest, she said, although "the studies aren't in yet.

She cautioned against giving developing young women more than a couple of servings per week of soya products. "It does have very potent estrogen effects...this might be good for the rest of us."

Derzko also cautioned that hormones are "no excuse for lousy living.

"It's important that we take charge of our lives and our lifestyles and our health. I think it's important that we not smoke, that we exercise, that we address the proper eating habits that sometimes we forgot during our growing years. It's important that we deal with stress...and with medical diseases. And then you should consider whether you should take hormones."

Showing a glamorous slide of Elizabeth Taylor, Derzko said, "I can't promise you that with hormones you'll look like this.

Heathcote discussed career issues for women in medicine, particularly gastroenterologists. Because of the increasing number of women in medical school and the low percentage of women specializing in gastroenterology, Heathcote predicted a scarcity of gastroenterologists unless women are encouraged to enter the field.

DNA test planned for meningitis

TORONTO — Through a new study, researchers at Sunnybrook Health Science Centre have begun to develop a DNA test that will rapidly and accurately diagnose meningitis. The test will allow health professionals to diagnose the disease within three to four hours, rather than the standard 24 to 48 hours. Additional funding is needed to continue this and other research into meningitis.

The test, called multiplex polymerase chain reaction (PCR), gathers information about a patient's DNA. Sunnybrook researchers are adapting the test to diagnose bacterial meningitis quickly and more accurately. They will also be able to determine the exact type of bacteria causing the meningitis.

The DNA test, also used for forensic legal cases, has already been adapted by Sunnybrook researchers to rapidly diagnose other infectious diseases such as necrotizing fasciitis (flesh-eating disease) and other antibiotic resistant organisms.

"Sunnybrook is conducting what we believe to be the first study in Canada to develop a test for rapid diagnosis of meningitis," says Dr. Andy Simor, head of Microbiology at Sunnybrook Health Science Centre and leader of the research study.

According to Simor, it is common to receive false negative results from the current standard culture used to detect meningitis. "Often patients may be taking antibiotics which mask the meningitis in a standard test, but the antibiotics aren't actually treating the disease," he says. "The new test we are developing will not share this problem since it deals with the bacteria's DNA."

Like the standard test, the new DNA test will be initially taken from cerebral spinal fluid through a lumbar puncture. Simor also plans to study the use of simple blood tests to obtain DNA samples.

Meningitis research, including Simor's study, is funded at the centre through the Orly Watkin Meningitis Research Fund, a fund set up in memory of the young dancer.

Four years ago, Shlomo Watkin lost his 15-year-old daughter Orly to meningitis, the same strain that has taken the lives of two Kitchener area teens in recent weeks. To keep Orly's memory alive and to raise money for meningitis research, Watkin established the Dance For Orly and the research fund.

The Dance For Orly, now in its fourth year, is a dance competition that to date has raised more than $200,000 for meningitis research. This year, the Dance For Orly will take place on April 26 at the Minkler Auditorium, Seneca College.

Grimm classic has modern overtones, kids' author says

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Award-winning children's author Maurice Sendak was the guest speaker at the Canadian Opera Company's Face to Face lecture series held recently at the Joey and Toby Tanenbaum Opera Centre.

Interviewed by Richard Ouzounian, CBC Radio's host of Say it With Music, Sendak, also a renowned illustrator and theatrical designer, spoke of today's troubled children and of his own experiences that influence his designs, including those for the production of Engelbert Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel, directed by Frank Corsaro.

The Brothers Grimm tale is being performed at the Hummingbird Centre for the Performing Arts until Feb. 7.

Sendak, 68, said this classic fairy tale has contemporary overtones for him.

"My main purpose in doing this opera, and in doing it now, at this age, is that I'm overwhelmed by the plight of children."

He said he considers Hansel and Gretel a powerful analogy to modern-day child abandonment and cruelty, an opera about pertinent forms of neglect. It is about the human condition.

Maurice Sendak

Sendak has authored more than 80 books including Where the Wild Things Are, In the Night Kitchen, Outside over There, and Higglety Pigglety Pop.

He has designed and costumed sets for Tchaikovsky's The Nutcracker ballet, The Magic Flute, and The Love for Three Oranges. In 1997, he was awarded the National Medal for the Arts by U.S. President Bill Clinton.

Sendak said as a child he was immersed in books and music and it was then that he developed his love of opera. He discovered there were few books for children. As a young child, he illustrated stories his brother wrote and he wrote poetry and illustrated it. He said the oral folk tales of the Grimm brothers "extrapolated emotion in pictures" for him.

As a child, he learned a great deal from his Polish immigrant father who told his three children many frightening stories about the Old Country, Sendak said.

In his youth, he met a man in Central Park who told Sendak he didn't know how to tell his son he had terminal cancer. This made Sendak realize that parents did not know how to speak to their children.

"But children are perceptive and you don't have to speak to them in code. Kids think all the time – they sense everything and their radar is incredible."

His father's tales and this chance meeting in the park led him to include realism in his children's stories.

He explained that his works are about "kids who get through that moment," the moment when they must decide what to do when they are faced with something they never experienced before – they are forced to make a decision.

"Nothing has changed," Sendak said. "Children have no money or power and embarrass us by their frankness. But they are extraordinarily strong and even in the midst of trouble they have fun or they will go nuts."

Although some of his work is based on Christian writings, he said being Jewish gives him a "different feeling." He told The CJN his Jewishness affects all of his work. "All of my family perished in the Holocaust except my parents.

"What do you think this meant to me when I designed the Witch's oven in Hansel and Gretel?" he asked.

Sendak's children deal with rage, frustration and anxiety; Sendak translates these emotions to his characters through his writings and his art elevates them to heroic figures.

Arts Council grant will help bring biblical-based play to the stage this fall

By JAMES PASTERNAK
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — One of the two 1997 Emerging Artists Awards given by the Ontario Arts Council Foundation has gone to actor Alon Nashman to support his live theatre project The Song, inspired by the biblical Song of Songs.

The award of $7,500 will go towards bringing The Song to full production by this fall.

The Song, written and directed by Adam Nashman (no relation) and staring Alon Nashman, is the premiere project of Theaturtle, a production company committed to producing new works.

The Song portrays one man, Alan, an accountant who is haunted by the loss of his wife two years earlier. Jobless, purposeless and drunk, he faces a life without meaning. Unable to love, unable to be inspired, Alan is visited by ancient teachers such as Rabbi Akiva and King Solomon.

Nashman referred to the financial award as "extraordinary," and pointed out that "actors are mercenaries and agitate for whatever role they're hired in."

The Emerging Artists Awards are funded by the K.M. Hunter Charitable Foundation. The winner is selected from up to 70 theatre productions, after a rather onerous review process.

"We are given either play scripts or an outline of the [intended] project and hope they can realize it," said Martin Hunter, one of the custodians of the foundation. He said the final jury of three seasoned artists gave unanimous support to Nashman.

"I don't care if they [the recipients] become stars," he said. "The point is they continue in their work."

The other winning artist for 1997 is Linda C. Smith in the music category.

The little gifts store that grew

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It's 9:30 a.m., and Bronson's China and Gifts is just opening. Before sitting down for an interview, Ilene Bronsteter quickly finishes examining a display shelf and suggests a rearrangement of the crystal serving pieces to one of her staffers.

Seventeen years ago, Bronsteter was a recent graduate in lab technology who decided weekend and midnight shifts weren't for her. Turning her sights to the retail sector, she launched her own business following an unsuccessful job search. "I created my own job," she laughed.

Along with her sister-in-law Bonnie Silver, Bronsteter opened a china store on Steeles Avenue west of Yonge Street. The store — stockroom, office and washroom included — was one-tenth the size of Bronson's current 9,000-square-foot location.

Although Bronsteter had worked part time for a competitor for five years from the time she was 18, neither she nor Silver (president and vice-president respectively) had any formal business training. Despite the lack of a business plan, they were able to secure a bank loan.

At the time, Bronsteter and her husband had just bought a home in Thornhill, and Silver was also living in the area. "We just knew this was a growth area," Bronsteter recalled.

Her business has grown with the area. Bronson's moved to its present corner location after five years at the first address, two plazas over. They have expanded three times, and recently renovated part of the downstairs level.

Bronsteter prefers not to divulge sales or inventory figures, but noted that "you can't sell from an empty basket." A variety of upscale merchandise fills two stores — the Thornhill location and a 3,000-square-foot store at Lawrence Plaza, where Silver is based.

The flagship store in Thornhill is full but not cluttered, with shelves, tables and display cases holding attractively arranged crystal, china, silverware and giftware.

Bridal registry forms a "huge" part of Bronson's business, but Bronsteter, who is often found on the sales floor, prefers to think of herself as being more generically in the customer service business. "I happen to sell china," she said.

She credits her staff as "some of the most professional sales people in the city. I do hire some students, but an 18-year-old sales clerk can't properly advise someone who's just renovated their kitchen. The majority of my staff have set tables. They do dinner parties."

Bronsteter tells her staff to treat customers as they'd want to be treated themselves, but admits that, because of varying preferences, "defining customer service is the challenge of the decade."

Incentives for Bronson's customers include a point program, with a $25 gift certificate for every $1,000 spent, a North America-wide toll-free number, a price-matching guarantee and a half-price policy for customers replacing broken dinnerware purchased from the store. "We don't want to benefit from your mistakes," said Bronsteter.

"It truly is a nice business if you just give everyone what they want, and meet and exceed expectations," said Bronsteter. "I don't think there's anything I dislike about what I do."

A mother of three, Bronsteter often brings paperwork home. She credits "good staff, a good support network and a good husband" with providing her the flexibility to juggle work and home.

She would advise young entrepreneurs to have realistic expectations and well thought-out business plans, and to study business before striking out on their own. "The more you can gain from school, the less you're going to learn from the school of hard knocks.

"I've learned it along the way, but I would have preferred to have it behind me. Knowing how to do business plans, and the accounting part, would have been a major advantage. And times have changed. Retail is a lot more sophisticated now."

Authors & Poets

When Pesach arrives this spring, so too will the second annual CJN Literary Supplement. We therefore again invite the authors and poets among our readers to submit their works to us. We are looking only for works of fiction or poetry that explore Jewish themes.

The works must be original and previously unpublished. The fiction cannot be longer than 1,500 words. We must receive your works no later than March 16, 1998 at The CJN, 1500 Don Mills Rd., Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return them, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so. We look forward to receiving your submissions.

The editor.

CD will have you dancing in the aisles

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

Dancing In the Aisles, by the Klezmer Conservatory Band is the most aptly-named CD I've heard in a long time. The band bursts forth with an irrepressible liveliness and rhythm. Adjectives like beguiling and foot-tapping simply don't suffice. You want to get up and dance.

Half of the 14 tunes on this outstanding CD are delightful instrumentals, while the rest are songs featuring the band's pure-voiced Yiddish vocalist, Judith Bressler. Give a listen and you may exclaim, "Oy, S'iz Gut!" – Oh, It's Good!"– to borrow the title of one of the songs. They are lovely little pastries that you want to eat all at once.

Two of the vocal numbers, Oy, S'iz Gut and Farges Mikh Nit (Don't Forget Me) were popular Yiddish hits originally sung by the legendary Yiddish actress Molly Picon in the 1930s. There's also Mayn Freylekh Lid (My Joyful Song) and Hopkele (Dancing In The Aisles), two treasures composed by Alexander Olshanetsky, the first quite neglected until the Klezmer Conservatory Band picked it up.

The traditional Druze Arabic love song Miserlou has an intoxicating rhythm and beguiling lyrics that tear at your heart. Although it's meant for a man, Bressler's sweet voice gives it an irresistible edge.

The instrumental numbers include the Freylekh Fantastique (arranged by Miriam Rabson), which is klezmer's hilarious homage to Beethoven, Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Grieg, Rossini and Mendelsohn. There's also Doyne/Freylekhs, a traditional Romanian-style wedding lament, and the sad and lovely closing piece, In Memoriam: For Yitzhak Rabin, written by band leader Hankus Ketsky.

There's a mystical intelligence behind this music, which plays so well on the strings of our emotions. The Klezmer Conservatory Band proves that klezmer doesn't have to be the same old thing, ridden with cliches. The band brings an astonishing diversity to this music. It's clear that the musicians know this music inside out: they seem to breath new life into it with their very souls.

Polish-born cantor Louis Danto, who has been singing at the Beth Emeth Synagogue in north Toronto for 25 years, recently released his 19th recording, Music from the Soul of A People. This collection of 13 liturgical songs includes Chasdei Hashem by Israel Alter, Birkat Kohanim by Jacob Rapaport, Shema Yisraël by Leib Glantz and Tanya by Rapaport, in an arrangement by Olshanetsky.

Danto, as always, is in great voice. The CD also features Senya Trubashnik on oboe and English horn, Natalya Tyomkina on piano, and Charles Heller on piano; Heller is also an arranger.

In the hands of Itzhak Perlman, the violin is the princess Scheherezade, spinning out a story that can make you laugh, cry, shiver and rejoice. In his latest CD, Cinema Serenade, Perlman performs recent classics of the silver screen with the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra conducted by the noted cinematic composer John Williams.

Remembered here are wonderful themes from such films as The Color Purple, Scent Of A Woman, Yentl, Il Postino, The Age of Innocence, Schindler's List and Cinema Paradiso. Why should we hear these lovely compositions only within the confines of the movie theatre? As it happens, they stand up exceedingly well under repeated listening at home.

These compositions are meant to tell stories and convey emotions. The orchestrations are lush and dramatic, and Perlman's violin carries its trademark romanticism. There's no post-modern jarringness to get in the way in this balanced collection of tunes that fully deserve the full-blown lyrical treatment they get here.

BROTHER-SISTER TEAM ENTER LAUGHING

Brother-Sister Act: Josh Garbe, best known for his portrayal of Max on CBC's Max Glick, is currently performing in Encore Entertainment's production of Enter Laughing, on at the City Playhouse, 1000 New Westminster Dr. in Thornhill, until Feb. 1.

Josh is especially happy to be in the production because his older sister Lea Garbe, a 21-year-old student at York University, is its producer. Lea also produced last year's production of The Diary of Anne Frank for the City Playhouse. Tickets to Enter Laughing are $14 to $18. 905-709-4057.

* * *

Judith Cohen on CD: Toronto musician Judith Cohen, along with Tamar Ilana Cohen Adam, Rob Simms and Suzannah Wilde have recorded a new CD with Radio Canada, containing Sephardi and Yiddish songs, as well as music from Balkan, French-Canadian and other traditions. The CD is called Dans Mon Chemin J'ai Rencontre (And On My Way I Met...).

A CD release party has been scheduled for Feb. 1, 8 p.m. at the Flying Cloud Folk Club (Tranzac Club), 292 Brunswick Ave., Toronto. 533-2666.

* * *

Valentine's Day Special: Sweet Hearts, the first-ever black and Jewish Valentine's Day show and dance, features Tweed MacDonald, Gloria Valentine, Ada Stout, Howard Jerome, Paul Mathew and Nina Shapilsky and deejay Gene Hi-Fi.

Feb. 14, 9 p.m. (doors open 8 p.m.). Workmen's Circle, 471 Lawrence Ave. W. Refreshments available. Admission $10 in advance, $12 at the door. Rosemary Jervis, 416-266-9834.

Arts Briefs: Cindy Williams, most famous as Shirley in TV's Laverne and Shirley, will star in the comedy Moon Over Buffalo, Feb. 19 to Apr. 26 at the Stage West Hotel and Theatre Restaurant. 905-238-0159.

•Journeys, a collection of photographs by Beverley Abramson, depicts the pastoral lushness of Tuscany and Provence, the stark silence of Northern Scotland and the vibrancy of Israel. Scaramouche Restaurant, 1 Benvenuto Place. Until Mar. 15. 961-8011.

•Brave Old World plays klezmer at the Ford Centre for the Performing Arts, Jan. 28, 8 p.m. $30 to $20. 872-2222.

•Kronos Quartet, avant-garde musicians, combines medieval, Renaissance and contemporary music Feb. 6 at the Ford Centre for the Performing Arts. $35 to $24. 872-2222.

In The Spotlight: Winnipeg-born Jacqueline Park, a former CBC scriptwriter and editor, spent 10 years writing The Secret Book of Grazia dei Rossi, a sweeping historical epic of the Italian Renaissance seen through the eyes of the title character, a Jewish woman.

Published recently by the prestigious American publishing house Simon & Schuster, Park's first novel has won wide critical acclaim; one reviewer called it "a Sistine Chapel of a novel, larger than life, richly conceived and majestic in its exaltation of humanity." German publication rights were recently sold for $400,000.

A professor of writing at New York University who still maintains residences in Toronto and Miami, Park was in town late last year to give a reading at Indigo, the megabookstore at Yonge and Eglinton. She told me that her original manuscript was about 1,400 pages long, which would have made it longer than Gone With The Wind; by comparison, the printed book is a trim 570 pages.

"I've been educated in the high cost of paper," the energetic 72-year-old remarked. Fortunately, that hasn't deterred her from beginning work on a second novel.

Eitan Rosenberg

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Although Eitan Rosenberg has never taken a private singing lesson, the 11-year-old will be making his first solo appearance in the Canadian Opera Company's The Cunning Little Vixen.

The opera, which will be performed until Feb. 8 at Toronto's Hummingbird Centre, will feature Rosenberg as Pepik, the forester's grandson.

The Cunning Little Vixen, by Leos Janacek, is the story of a charming vixen whose life is intertwined with the lives of a gamekeeper and his family.

"I am honored to have been chosen by the Canadian Opera Company to appear as a soloist in this enchanting opera," Rosenberg says. "The chance to interact with, and learn from professional actors and singers such as Rebecca Caine of Phantom of the Opera fame, is like a dream come true."

Rosenberg is a member of the Canadian Children's Opera Chorus (CCOC), the only permanent children's opera chorus in Canada to commission and produce operas for children on a regular basis.

It provides a training ground for children between the ages of eight and 16, introducing them to the fundamental techniques of musical training, professional discipline, public performance and the complex world of opera.

CJN Purim Art Contest

It's time again for our fourth annual Purim Art Contest and we are looking for drawings about Purim from students in elementary school.

Who can enter: Children from grades 1 to 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes: The judges will choose one drawing from two different students in each grade. These "winning" drawings will be published in The CJN on March 12. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a cheque for $25.

How to enter: You may submit as many drawings as you want. However, they should not be too small or too large. Please paint, draw, or color bright, bold, colorful pictures. You may use markers, crayons, paint or pencils. And you can even give them a title. Please send us your name, address, phone number, school and grade along with your drawings.

You may mail or deliver your drawings to: CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 1500 Don Mills Road, Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 27, 1998. We will undoubtedly receive many wonderful submissions from children all across the country. But only 12 of the drawings will be chosen for publication as "winners." The judges will base their decision on a number of factors such as: the use of color, the imaginative quality of the drawing and the way it tells an aspect of the story of Purim. The judges' decisions will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and quality of submissions received.

How the Winner will be announced: The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of Shabbat on Friday, March 6, 1998.

When the prizes will be awarded: The "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN of March 12, 1998. Have fun and good luck.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Régie des Loteries et courses du Québec.

TRAVEL TALK

BY BILL GLADSTONE

ANCIENT WONDERS IN EILAT & THE NEGEV

Skies were overcast the day I boarded Arkia's domestic flight south from Tel Aviv to Eilat, the country's Red Sea tourist port. The prop-plane was filled with young Israelis, many dressed as though they were going to the neighborhood shopping mall, not flying halfway across the country.

I studied the terrain from the window, watched the last bit of greenery give way to scrubland, then an even more arid landscape of sandstone-colored mountains and vast empty stretches of sand. After less than an hour, we touched down in Eilat, famous for its perennial blue skies. The morning's grayness was a fading memory.

A desert boomtown, Eilat is a premier sun-and-sand destination that attracts dozens of European charter flights each week. Astonishingly, it began as a military outpost after the War of Independence, its first building erected only in 1951. Now it has some 38,000 residents, almost all involved in the tourist industry.

"When I came to Eilat in 1959, there were 600 families here," my guide, Nachum Netzor, told me. "I came as a teacher and my wife came as a nurse.

"Nobody believed that you could have flowers or trees here, because of the climate. When I came to Eilat it took 12 hours by bus from Tel-Aviv, and we had only three buses a week. Plus two army Dakota planes to bring milk for the children."

We were driving north from Eilat across a plain of sand and scrub, the dry middle of the Arava rift valley. Separated by an indeterminate number of kilometres, two parallel mountain ridges ran on either side of us, one in Israel, the other in Jordan. Paradoxically, despite the desert conditions, a yellow highway sign warned of floods.

A distinctive-looking man with a thick white beard, leather hat and trademark pipe that was usually unlit, Netzor gave detailed, thoughtful answers to my questions. He explained, for example, that Eilat's water supply comes from wells and springs in the desert. However, since the water is slightly salty, desalination plants had to be built. But there was more to it than that.

An acacia tree in the Negev. [Bill Gladstone photo]

"To properly answer your question I must start with the geological situation of 22 million years ago, when this area was covered by one big sea from the Mediterranean down to the Red Sea – the Tetis Sea. Then a big earthquake opened a rift and pushed the mountains to either side; the Tetis Sea drained out to the Red Sea."

Eventually, we reached Timna Park, the site of ancient copper mines worked by Egyptian slaves. We passed a natural sphinx – a rock formation resembling a sitting lion, sculpted by the wind. Another peculiar formation, made of reddish rock, resembled a giant mushroom. Netzor pointed out ancient graffiti and drawings of men and chariots, the first known depictions of chariots, carved into a rock face roughly 3,000 years ago.

There is water here, if you know where to find it, he explained; 18 settlements thrive in the Negev, including a dairy farm. Two millennia ago, the region was more a savannah than a desert. The Nabateans farmed here.

Some hikers were scouring the desert floor as if for treasure. Ancient artifacts? Rare minerals? I asked Netzor what they were looking for, and he handed me a small closed box resembling a miniature box of chocolates.

Inside, arranged neatly, were six chalky seashells, each no bigger than a thumbnail. "Yes – seashells. From the Tetis Sea of 22 million years ago. It's illegal to pick them up, but many people do it."

We drove to Solomon's Pillars, a mountainous formation once wrongly believed to be the source of the marble used in the Temple. Beside these imposing pillars, archeologists found a small Egyptian shrine and a section of vertical rockface, high up, chiselled smooth as a movie screen.

Evidently, ancient Egyptian audio-visual technicians manipulated bonfires into spotlights to project shadows onto this wall, possibly for light-and-sound shows for imperial visitors.

Returning to Eilat, Netzor offered one last anecdote on the subject of water. "You know the story of Moses? How he knocked on the rock and the water came out? Well, I can do the same.

"In the rocks is a substance called bitumen. It's clay that has become very hard, and it covers the rocks from outside like plaster. Now if you take a hammer or a knife and you break it open, between the bitumen and the rock there is water. A bedouin showed me this, and now I know how to find the rocks with water in them. Moses lived 40 years in the desert, so he knew how to make these kinds of miracles, too."

The chorus consists of 75 boys and girls who perform operatic and choral repertoire under music director John Tuttle. Rosenberg will be joined on stage by some of his colleagues from the CCOC.

Lynn Janes, the musical director of CCOC's Apprentice Choirs says, "Eitan has a most powerful voice for a child his age. With its rich, round and warm tone, Eitan's voice projects a confidence that is often lacking in young singers. He is very passionate about singing – that's what makes him so special."

Rosenberg, a Grade 6 student at Bayview Middle School, has been singing in choirs for the last three years. Upon the suggestion of his choir master at Toronto's Hollywood Public School, Rosenberg, who also plays drums and piano, auditioned for two local children's choirs and was accepted to both.

Israel and the Jewish World

Remembering the '35' from Gush Etzion

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

"We were the ones who came back," says Haganah veteran Uri Gavish, recalling the night he took the path to survival.

"We sat behind a tree in the shade of the moonlight. We waited until they disappeared and we didn't hear them anymore, as they headed southeast."

Fifty years ago on Jan. 17, 35 soldiers were killed as they tried to bring supplies and reinforcements to the besieged kibbutzim in the Etzion Bloc, south of Jerusalem. Gavish is one of three survivors of the original company who stayed alive because they had to drop out of the mission along the way. The massacre of his comrades was a devastating blow in the early days of the struggle for independence. The Etzion Bloc fell four months later.

Yet the Lamed-Heh (the Hebrew alphabetical equivalent of 35), the name by which the group is now known, became heroes. Monuments have been dedicated to them, a kibbutz and a highway have been named in their memory and they were commemorated in a song by Palmach poet-laureate Chaim Guri.

The story of the Lamed-Heh has been fading from memory, overshadowed by subsequent and more successful heroics. But the repercussions of this tragic episode still resonate.

The Etzion Bloc remains in many ways an isolated cluster of settlements whose fate in the post Oslo era is uncertain. The neighboring villages of Jaba and Tzurif – whose residents were blamed for killing the 35 and mutilating their bodies – have a notorious reputation that was reinforced recently when Tzurif sheltered the Hamas terror cell that killed 11 Israelis in a series of ambushes, kidnappings and suicide bombings last year.

And Gavish is still haunted by his good luck. "Every war is ruled by chance," he says fatalistically. "Those who get hit, stay hit, and those who come out of it, stay out of it. There's nothing you can do about it."

The four kibbutzim of the Etzion Bloc – Kfar Etzion, Masuot Yitzhak, Ein Tzurim and Revadim – had been excluded from the future Jewish state in the partition plan. But the Haganah commanders considered the bloc a vital buffer against a southern attack on Jerusalem. Arab gangs cut the road to the area and from December 1947 on, the 450 settlers and Haganah fighters there were under siege and constant harassment.

On Jan. 14, over 1,000 Arab irregulars organized by Palestinian commander Abdul-Khadr Husseini, father of PLO leader Faisel Husseini, assaulted the bloc. They were thrashed by Jewish settlers and Palmach forces. The Arabs withdrew with heavy casualties.

The Haganah decided to send in a platoon of reinforcements with much-needed ammunition and medical supplies, which would help prepare the bloc for an expected onslaught by Jordanian forces later in the spring. Forty of the finest soldiers from the Haganah Field Corps and the Palmach were organized under the command of Danny Mass, a former commander of the bloc.

Gavish was an officer in infantry intelligence at the time. He lives in Beersheva today. On the anniversary of the massacre, he retraced some of his steps of that fateful night half a century ago.

According to Gavish, the Lamed-Heh fighters were all carrying 20-kilo packs and were armed with what was considered great firepower at the time: four heavy machine guns, 16 rifles, 15 submachine guns, pistols and over 3,000 rounds of ammunition.

"We were a small group, very organized, very responsible and mature – and all those other nice words which today are more nostalgia than reality," he says. "To go to the bloc as reinforcements – just to get there was an extraordinary experience. We even had a hitchhiker, Yitzhak Ginzburg, who joined our platoon. We didn't want to take him, but he succeeded in persuading us."

They set out under cover of darkness from the Jerusalem neighborhood of Bayit Vagan and planned to continue southward to Ein Tzurim. But they were delayed in climbing down the terraced hillside and were detected by Arab villagers and shot at. With the night nearly over and still far from their objective, Mass ordered the detachment's return to Jerusalem by the shortest possible route.

"Back then," says Gavish, "a rule of thumb was never to return to a mission along the same route. So a different approach was chosen.

"It was agreed that the group would make a second attempt the next night. Although I am a very cautious person, we were all very enthusiastic about trying again."

The 40 soldiers drove to the isolated moshav of Har Tuv near what is today Beit Shemesh. They had to hide their weapons in the armored truck in case the British stopped them. They were behind schedule, and it was 11 p.m. before they were ready to set out. Two soldiers who were not armed were left behind.

The commander of Har Tuv urged Mass not to set out because it was too late, warning that even if the detachment encountered no obstacles, it would not reach its objective before daylight. But Mass insisted, saying Jerusalem had informed him that he would receive a message by plane if the mission was to be delayed.

"It's true," recalls Gavish. "He did warn us. There are always people who want to be the guys who say, 'I told you so.' So what? We said it among ourselves too. We thought that a two-hour delay was enormous, but we decided that we could get there without mishap.

"The truth was that with this battle force and its manoeuverability, we felt we could charge ahead even if they tried to block us. But no one ever thought that they would swarm over us."

As he says this, Gavish stands atop the ancient ruins of Beit Shemesh overlooking Nahal Sorek. He explains how the unit had to take a circuitous route to the bloc to bypass British police at Taggart Fort, which today serves as the Israel Police's regional headquarters.

In a matter-of-fact manner, Gavish rattles off the names of six of the 35 men who were classmates or who had been with him in underground training. "It was a small country and most people knew each other," he says.

Gavish describes how one soldier, Yisrael Gafni, badly sprained his leg crossing a fallow field. They kept moving, he says, but Gafni's injury slowed them down. Finally, Mass decided to send him back with an escort, Moshe Hazan. Hazan demanded another soldier to help and Mass chose Gavish. These three, all still alive, were spared the fate of the Lamed-Heh. On the ridge of Zanoah, near where the present-day moshav of the same name is located, Gavish, Hazan and Gafni watched as the 35 young men disappeared into the valley.

Then the three got up and headed back to Har Tuv. When they approached the settlement, they started singing in Hebrew and cursing and making a racket so the guards there wouldn't shoot at them thinking they were Arabs. But as they got closer, they saw no guards on duty and none were alerted.

Meanwhile, the detachment walked through the night. According to some accounts, they were detected at dawn by an Arab shepherd who fled and spread the word among the villagers of Tzurif. Another account says they chanced upon two women collecting sprigs. In any case, the unit was in the heart of enemy territory with no way to call for help.

As soon as the battle began, Mass undoubtedly realized that his men could not break through to the Etzion Bloc. They quickly split into two groups and with one group covering for the other, they climbed to the top of what appeared to be the highest hill, an advantageous defence position. Here they defended themselves against the fierce attacks of an enemy who slowly whittled them down. The hill was actually lower than surrounding ridges and during the day, hundreds of Arabs from the neighboring villages took up positions and began closing in on the Jewish fighters.

As Gavish sees it, the Lamed-Heh detachment made two logistical mistakes: not expecting such an early encounter with the local population and not properly estimating the swiftness of their reaction.

"It was winter. The Arabs slept with their clothes on. So all they needed to do was grab their rifles and head out."

Towards evening, the large supply of ammunition the Lamed-Heh had carried in their packs was depleted. The battle ended with the death of the last man, who, having exhausted all his ammunition – so the legend goes – died with a rock in his hand.

On Jan. 17, 1948, the Jerusalem Command sent the following message to the Etzion Bloc: "We have just received word of 35 bodies lying on a path between the villages of Jaba and Tzurif."

The news of the massacre struck the besieged Jewish community of Jerusalem like a heavy blow.

With no trace of the 35, and with wounded Arabs flooding into Hebron, a British police inspector dispatched a platoon of the Royal Sussex Regiment to Tzurif. After threatening and exhorting the village mukhtars and notables, the British were finally led to the site of the battle. There they found the stripped and mutilated bodies of the 35 strewn over the hilltop. The state of the bodies was so bad that only a dozen could be identified.

The British decided to bury them in the Etzion Bloc instead of in Jerusalem, for fear the Jews would retaliate. Thirty-five graves were dug in the stony hillside and the British escorted the families of the soldiers to the Etzion Bloc for the funerals. They also handed over to the families for safekeeping photographs taken of the butchered bodies, which to this day are never shown, but are stored in the Etzion Bloc archives.

It was not until 1967 that some key questions about the fate of the Lamed-Heh were answered. For years, it was believed that they had died in the hills near Jaba and Tzurif. But following the 1967 war, village elders were coaxed into revealing the true site of the battle, which was actually fought inside the Green Line along the old patrol road. Today, a small sign and a monument mark it as Givat Hakrav (Battle Hill), south of Moshav Mata.

The residents of Tzurif, which lies just over the Green Line, feared Israel would take vengeance for the slaying of the 35 and the mutilation of their bodies.

Few of the villagers are willing to talk about the massacre. One who is – although he prefers not to be named – describes the fear in the village in June 1967.

"I was 17 then. At the beginning of the war, the Jordanian soldiers stationed here told us they were going to Hebron but would return," he recalls. "But they never did, they just fled. The Israelis came in and told the villagers to take to the hills or flee [the country]. Some went to Jordan, but our family, we hid out in a cave. I was 17. The soldiers came and blew up a few houses."

No Arab today will publicly say he participated in the battle and subsequent mutilation of fifty years ago.

"Each village tried to pass it on to the other village," says Dov (Dubak) Weinstock, 51, head of security for the Etzion Bloc. "And those from Tzurif and Jaba said it was carried out by a group of Arab irregulars who came from far-off villages in Samaria and Galilee."

In his muddy, antenna-bedecked Land Rover, Weinstock patrols the hills where the Lamed-Heh fought. He has devoted himself to teaching youngsters about the battle for the Etzion Bloc, of which the Lamed-Heh episode was but a part. He often hosts soldiers at seminars in the Kfar Etzion Field School.

Gavish believes the Lamed-Heh legend combines actual heroism with efforts by relatives to commemorate the fallen soldiers' role in it.

"Zionism, patriotism, self-sacrifice, helping others – these are the facts," says Gavish. "They just amplified it. Back then, the families of the 35 were mostly the elite of Jerusalem, and they sought a way to commemorate their sons by glorifying them. Today's parents would just jump all over the battalion commander."

Gavish says he has never visited the villages. "I did give a young fellow a ride once and he told me he was from Tzurif," he says. "We only exchanged small talk. The problems between Arabs and Jews – about that we didn't talk."

Levy should land in Football Hall of Fame

By HARLAN C. ABBEY
Special to The CJN

BUFFALO — The retirement of Marv Levy as coach of the National Football League's (NFL) Buffalo Bills means the departure of the most visible Jew from the North American sporting scene.

Levy, probably the only coach in the history of the NFL with a Phi Beta Kappa key and a master's degree (in history) from Harvard, stepped down at the age of 72, apparently dismayed by the major rebuilding job ahead for the team he led to four successive Super Bowls.

Although he may be remembered for the most part for losing all four of those championship games, Levy has many accomplishments that should take him into the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Chicago native went from being the nation's youngest (31) college head coach at the University of New Mexico (UNM) to becoming the second oldest coach in NFL history.

He was named Skyline Conference Coach of the Year in 1958 and 1959 while at UNM, was Southern Conference Coach of the Year with William & Mary in 1964-65 and joined the NFL in 1969 as special teams coach of the Philadelphia Eagles.

Loyalty was one of the foundations of Levy's coaching philosophy and one of the reasons for his resignation after Bills owner Ralph Wilson reportedly insisted on changes among Levy's assistants.

Levy did win two "Super Bowls," but they were in Canada and were called Grey Cups. His Montreal Alouettes won them in 1974 and 1979. With the Bills, Levy won Coach of the Year honors twice and four American Football Conference championships, became the only Bills coach to win over 100 games, went to the playoffs 10 times in 12 years and conducted himself at all times with dignity and class.

As with most Jews involved in sports at the top levels, Levy did not attend synagogue on a regular basis, nor was he a temple member in Buffalo. However, he always identified as a Jew. He and quarterback Jim Kelley attended a Chabad fundraiser early in their Bills careers. Levy was guest of honor at a United Jewish Appeal Fund dinner in 1993 and made an appearance at the Buffalo UJA's "Super Sunday" phone-a-thon in 1996.

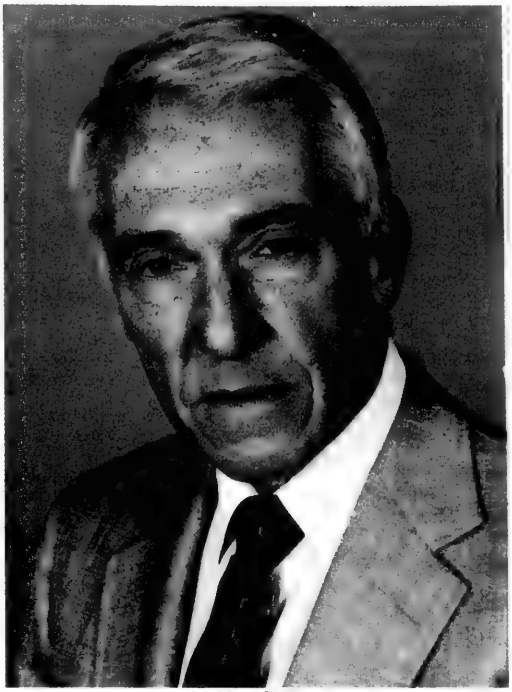
At the dinner, Levy declared that the Bills' rallying from a 32-point deficit to beat Houston in the playoffs that year wasn't the miracle. "It was nowhere near the miracles wrought in the land of Israel by the Jewish National Fund and the people who work that land," he said.

Proceeds from the dinner went to establish a Marv Levy Forest in American Independence Park, near Jerusalem.

Levy also recalled that when he was growing up in Chicago (he attended South Shore High School), his grandmother, who had come from Russia, (his father came to Chicago from London, England) was in correspondence with her six brothers on a weekly basis.

"But after the Nazis invaded Russia, she never heard from them again," he recalled. "If there had been an Israel then, maybe this sad tale wouldn't be told."

He also noted that he lived near a golf course and could picture the work that went into creating its green lushness: "That's a microcosm of what has been done in Israel," he said. "You [those attending the dinner] are honoring the State of Israel and the hard work and dedication that's gone into building Israel – and hard work is a trait valued by football coaches."



Marv Levy

Neither Levy's first wife, Dorothy, nor his present wife, Fran, is Jewish. Fran has a daughter, Kimberly, who is an attorney in Chicago.

After three years in the Air Force, Levy attended Coe College in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He enrolled in the Harvard Law School, but after four weeks, he said, "I knew law wasn't for me."

After receiving his master's, he began his coaching career at a country day school in St. Louis. If his parents were disappointed at his career choice, they didn't seem to show it.

"My dad had been a star basketball player, but as was common in those days, he took a job right after graduating from high school to help support his family," he remembered.

"When I told him I wanted to be a football coach, he only said, 'Be a good one.'"

Levy's major national exposure, other than on game days, was in a Snickers commercial. He also did some volunteer work for Literacy Volunteers and regularly visited hospitalized veterans – without a news camera present. He also spoke out against hunting.

A physical fitness buff, Levy keeps his weight at about 180, 10 pounds heavier than when he was a Coe halfback and sprinter.

"Reading history remains my only hobby, usually for an hour or so after my coaching day is over. I'm not a golfer or tennis player or even a vacationer. I like authors who can dramatize history, like Barbara Tuchman, David Halberstam and William Manchester," Levy said.

When asked what football mementos were most prominent in his home or office, Levy said, "I have no trophy case. They're all down in the basement. To me, if you put up a trophy, you're starting to kid yourself.

"You don't worry about trophies: you worry about this week's win. The getting ready, the expectancy of victory, that's what means the most to me."

The Inside Back

A Bissel Modern Midrash

By JORDAN MAX

Last Laugh

According to the popular press, modern-day midrash is the latest craze sweeping the continent. Not wanting to be left out of this trend, may I humbly offer a few midrashim on the Book of Shmot (Exodus), which we are now reading.

The Burning Bush — This is the first historically known instance of man-G-d communication using an intermediary device. Unfortunately, insulated wiring had not been invented yet, and therefore a primitive cellular phone that spontaneously burst into flames was used.

Moshe/Pharaoh conflict — This long simmering conflict was really a labor dispute between the Slaves Union and Pharaoh's Senior Management Team over working conditions, outsourcing and health benefits. The current agreement was still in effect, but talks broke down when Pharaoh abrogated the famous Joseph clause, leading to a wildcat strike by the Slaves Union.

The Ten Plagues — A series of "natural" disasters affecting Egypt, with the curious exclusion of the Goshen district. This led to the development of the insurance industry, and in particular, the creation of exclusionary "Act of G-d" perils clauses.

Splitting of the Reed Sea — Pharaoh had neglected to pay the country's water bill, so Moses, acting as creditor for the Water Company Multinational Conglomerate, shut off his supply. Unfortunately, by the time Pharaoh had arranged payment to his creditors and the water supply was restored, his army was already in the sea chasing his runaway employees. Since his army had failed to take swimming lessons or to wear life jackets, it was severely downsized, dehired and delayered.

La Grande Kvetch at Marah — Moses got into some trouble here because he inadvertently wound up at the mineral water concession booth of the competition of the Official Water Sponsor of the Exodus.

Manna from Heaven — Bnei Yisrael, once they had been released from slavery, suddenly became instant gourmands. It wasn't enough that they had been fed only bread and water in Mizrayim. Now they wanted not only food, but of course something original and different each and every day. Even though the manna tasted like whatever one wished, they were still not satisfied.

Revelation at Har Sinai — The Jews were the only ones to receive the Torah because all other nations slept in, were busy playing soccer at the time, hadn't put it in their appointment books or couldn't find notepaper or pens to write down the details. The other nations who did show up had poor memory skills due to excess consumption of lead and heavy metals in their Bronze Age diet.

The Golden Calf incident — Really a big misunderstanding since Datan and Aviram and their followers merely wanted to create a team mascot for Camp Bnei Yisrael.

Building of the Mishkan/Sacrifices — This was the first prototype of a shul. However, in this instance, everyone wanted to pay the building fund. As for the korbanot (sacrifices), the animals who volunteered for the job were professional stunt actors who had signed all the necessary waivers and had not been subjected to any cosmetic testing.

SO EASY COFFEE CAKE
WE SELL Inglis FOR LESS

2 loaves frozen bread in dough form, partially defrosted
1 stick margarine, melted
1 cup sugar (white or brown) melted
2 tsp. cinnamon
chocolate chips, raisins, nuts (optional)

Cut each partially defrosted loaf of dough into about 14 pieces. Mix together melted margarine, sugar and cinnamon. Dip each piece of dough in mixture and place in one-piece tube pan on top of each other. If desired, sprinkle raisins, chocolate chips or nuts over. Cover with towel and allow to rise about 8 hrs. Bake at 350°F for 30 min. Turn out onto dish. Pull apart - no need to cut. Tastes best while hot!

About jobs

Dear Lisa,

I have two sons age 13 and 17. My older son thinks he wants a career in architecture and he will only take courses he thinks will help him in that type of work. My younger son is equally focused and equally stubborn. I am concerned about their futures, but they refuse to listen to me or their mother.

Dear Reader,

Some schools and community organizations are responding to your concerns – and those of other parents and teachers – by offering workshops designed to help teens explore the ever-changing world of work. Topics addressed include labor market trends and what people in a variety of occupations really do. The format is lively and responsive to the developmental needs of adolescents.

An excellent program will begin on March 17 at the Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC) in Toronto. Career counsellor and educator Charlotte Goldfried will facilitate groups for teens in grades 6 to 8, 9 and 10, and 11 to OAC.

"The program will focus on helping kids see how important it is to keep their options open as long as possible," says Goldfried. "They'll do a lot of discussion among themselves so they'll get to hear many different points of view. And they will be motivated to seriously consider their own situations."

Each student will leave the course with a workbook and a certificate of completion that they may choose to list on their resumes.

Call the BJC soon to reserve a spot in one of these programs.

Outside Toronto, contact your school and/or your local Jewish community centre to learn about a similar program near you.

Job Search is a monthly column by career educator Lisa Galet Klug. Readers are invited to send any questions they have for Lisa to The CJN.

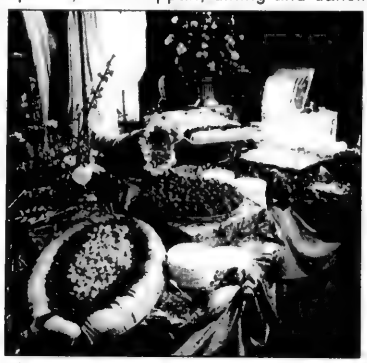
Experience Key To Worry-Free Weddings

The biggest concern in booking a wedding is trusting the event manager. Will they ensure a hassle-free event to remember?

"We've been handling Kosher Weddings for over twenty years", says Kim Cohen, Kosher Catering Specialist at the Regal Constellation Hotel. "Our facilities were actually designed with Kosher Weddings in mind."

All the banquet rooms are located on one level. "We are especially well laid out for Orthodox Weddings," says Cohen. "Our main ballrooms can be divided into smaller rooms which are ideal for separate receptions, the Chuppah, dining and dancing."



Should you wish, there are two skylights over the ballroom foyers, which open for natural light at your Chuppah. The elegant foyers can be completely closed off to ensure the utmost privacy. The designated Yichud room is located near the ballrooms and is a full suite.

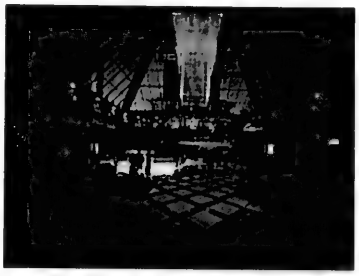
Kitchen facilities were built with a separate permanent Kosher kitchen, complete with Kosher china and flatware. Meals are prepared under strict supervision of the Kashruth Council, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

With over 20 years experience himself, in Kosher food preparation, Chef Josef VonLanthen can customize a menu for your Simcha to suit all tastes and budgets while still maintaining Regal quality standards. "You'd be surprised at how affordable the Regal Constellation really is," emphasizes Cohen. The Regal provides the best value for your Simcha of any hotel in greater Toronto. Providing your own liquor is a further cost savings available at the Regal.

To ensure a successfully memorable day, the Regal's talented team of professionals will walk you through every detail. "Often people feel they have to make compromises when planning their wedding," according to Ron Merpaw, Kosher Catering Specialist at the Regal Constellation, "Our facilities are so complete and versatile and our staff equally so, that your Simcha can be as unique as you want." Ballrooms at the Regal Constellation can accommodate 200 to 1,000 people. For overnight guests, there are 700 + bedrooms available.

On your special day the Regal extends a complimentary Bridal Suite, Yichud room and a Premium guest room for each set of parents.

For everyone's enjoyment it's best to make things as easy as possible, including finding the wedding. "You can't find a better location for out of town guests," affirms Merpaw, "We're just minutes from Pearson International Airport and near all the major highways." There is regular Airport Shuttle Service and parking for over 2,000 cars.



Versatile facilities, experienced, caring staff and a convenient location will ensure your once in a life time event is magical. The Regal Constellation Hotel has a ballroom waiting for your next worry-free Simcha. To arrange an appointment and tour, call Kim Cohen or Ron Merpaw at (416) 798-6400.

Deblins Linens graces every room of newlyweds' new home

If the idea of marriage conjures up images of a happy home with a white picket fence and the proverbial two kids, you will find Deblins Linens filling an important role in practically every room.

The bedroom. With Toronto's largest selection of high-quality sheets, pillowcases, duvets, duvet covers, bedskirts, and matching accessories, Deblins is supremely well-equipped to dress your beds in the styles, colours, and textures of your choice, from the eminently practical to the lushly romantic.

Virtually every leading sheet manufacturer is represented: Revman, Croscill, Crowncraft, Veratex, Burlington, Fieldcrest . . . the list goes on and on. Most stores would be happy to merely have these designer names "in stock", but Deblins goes a significant step further: no fewer than 24 bed settings, each in a vignette with matching bathware and accessories, grace Deblins' Orfus Road showroom. Even children's bed settings are on display. If you have no concrete ideas when you arrive at Deblins, your only problem once there will be deciding which of the myriad of options are most suitable. The Veratex, Crowncraft and Revelle lines are printed or woven in Israel.

10,000 square feet of quality merchandise make Deblins' Orfus Road Superstore a fun place to shop

Nothing combats the frigid cold of a Canadian winter quite as romantically and cozily as a duvet, and Deblins has a vast selection of the finest white goose down duvets, as well as high-quality synthetics for those allergic to down. There is a huge stock of first-quality pillow coverings for the nine different styles of pillows that Deblins carries.

The bathroom. Functional first and foremost, towels offer a great opportunity to add a dash of colour to your home — especially when purchased from Deblins' painter's palette of colours. Whether you opt for the exquisite Fieldcrest Royal Velvet towels, available in 24 solid shades, or other top lines from designer names such as Fieldcrest and Bibb, you'll be able to coordinate with any shade of paint or wallpaper imaginable. Matching seat covers, elusive elsewhere, are a snap at Deblins. You'll also find shower curtains galore, ranging from the simply elegant to the opulently detailed.

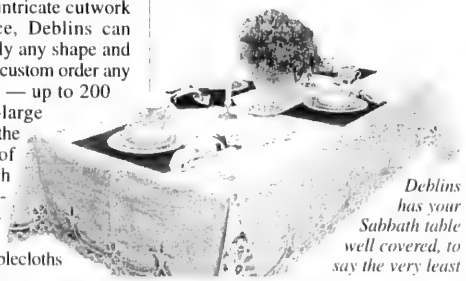
Cozy and romantic, duvets are a particularly popular item on Deblins' Bridal Registry

The kitchen and dining room. Whether you're planning to start a family or just enjoying your newly extended one, what greater symbol of family unity is there than the Sabbath table? To say that Deblins has you covered in this respect is an understatement. From the finest cotton damask to the most intricate cutwork and Battenburg lace, Deblins can accommodate literally any shape and size of table, and can custom order any length of tablecloth — up to 200 feet for the extra-large mishpoche! Nor are the day-to-day needs of breakfast and lunch ignored: Deblins carries a wide assortment of cotton and easy-care synthetic tablecloths in every conceivable colour and print. Tablecloths, napkins, napkin rings and table pads abound, at the lowest prices anywhere. Tea towels, kitchen knicknacks — you name it, if it's for the home, Deblins has it.

Insofar as price is concerned, Deblins is so confident they'll meet or exceed your expectations that they unabashedly suggest you buy elsewhere if you can find an identical item at a lower price. You'll find that nine times out of ten Deblins will come out ahead in price, and ten times out of ten in quality, selection and service.

The windows. No need to schlep around town with colour swatches hunting for drapes and blinds to match your linen purchases . . . Deblins has drapes, curtains and valances specifically chosen to match all sheet designs.

Deblins ships worldwide, so if the wedding's in Israel, exporting naches can be as easy as a phone call. It's just another little touch that separates the Deblins experience from the run-of-the-mill.



Deblins has your Sabbath table well covered, to say the very least

IF YOU FIND LINEN AT A BETTER PRICE ANYWHERE ELSE

BUY IT

A lot of stores today offer a price guarantee. That means if you find a lower price anywhere else, they'll match it. So after running around to find a better price, all you're left with is the option to pay the same price somewhere else.

But isn't the best price what you're really looking for? Then shop at Deblins Linens. We don't match prices.

Our goal is to offer you the lowest price in the first place. Sure, you might find an odd item at a lower price in another store, but don't come rushing back to Deblins to pay the same price. Just buy it. We're confident that when you compare both quality and price, nine times out of ten you'll get the better deal at Deblins .... not just the same deal.

A Capella Music Available for Sabbath Celebrations

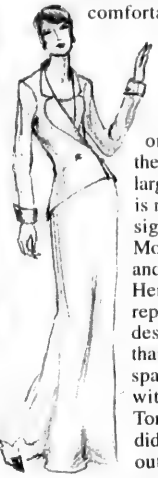
Adele Wechsler's singular skills a boon to brides, mothers, bat mitzvah girls

In a bridal market crammed with gown options and price temptations, it's refreshing to know that there are still a few places where craftsmanship rules at accessible prices. It's all well and good to have hundreds of gowns to choose from, but so much better to have one good one — the one that's right for you.

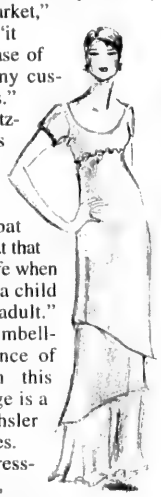
In her spaciously elegant yet unassuming shop on Avenue Road, Adele Wechsler has parlayed her background in fashion design, an extensive knowledge of fabrics and an obsessive attention to detail into a bustling bridal business.

Though she carries a selection of ready-to-wear, Wechsler's singular focus is on custom-designing garments that will enhance her clients' best physical attributes and minimize their shortcomings. Brides with concerns about being "shoehorned" into a gown that's beautiful on the mannequin but not quite right for them will find themselves particularly well-served by Wechsler's diligence in arriving at the right style and fit, her imaginative use of detail, and her perfectionism in executing the finished product.

The attention to detail that is Wechsler's trademark is characterized by unusual, often unique highlights that bring out a bride's best qualities in a subtle way. "There's a fine line between 'statement' and 'overstatement,'" says Wechsler; "it's the designer's job to be a master of detail, not a slave to it." A Wechsler creation therefore eschews clutter in favour of a few details that really count. For the wearer, the result is a garment with both precision and flair, a romantic elegance that evokes the "Bogie and Bacall" era yet timelessly transcends any period look with clean lines enhanced by a few striking nuances. Last but not least, it's comfortable; no need to flower the walls when you can flower the dance floor.



Bridal gowns tell only a small part of the Wechsler story. A large part of her work is now devoted to designing dresses for Mothers Of The Bride and bat mitzvah girls. Her already enviable reputation as a bridal designer has grown thanks to a number of sparkling successes witnessed at recent Toronto functions. "I didn't consciously set out to expand my market," says Wechsler; "it was simply a case of responding to my customers' requests." Designing bat mitzvah dresses is especially gratifying, says Wechsler, because the bat mitzvah girl is "at that special time of life when she's no longer a child but not yet an adult." Capturing and embellishing the essence of her subject in this transitional stage is a challenge Wechsler clearly relishes.



A skilled dressmaker herself, Wechsler employs a small staff of dedicated, talented sewers that enables her to make all the necessary alterations under one roof. Just big enough to meet the growing demand for her services, but always small enough to care — and, from all reports, a pleasure to deal with — Adele Wechsler has quietly but indelibly etched her name on the "who's who" list of bridal designers.

Park Plaza: setting the tone for elegance

You're looking for a very special place to hold your wedding — one place to hold the ceremony and reception, dine and dance, and offer out-of-town guests Toronto's finest accommodation. But you also want a European ambience of relaxed, low-key elegance, and staff who are attentive, courteous, and prompt without rushing — who treat a bride and groom as queen and king.

You now have two options: dismiss your expectations as unrealistic — or call the Park Plaza Hotel.

In midsummer 1998, following extensive renovations, the Park Plaza's North Tower will reopen as a virtually new hotel, setting the tone for Toronto in everything from cuisine and service to the staff's stylish new uniforms.

The Roof Restaurant at the Park Plaza Hotel: superb cuisine and the city's best view

Faithful to tradition of service

Nor is this a one-time makeover. "Constant upscaling," says Catering Manager Don MacDiarmid, "is the norm of the future." Mindful of the Park Plaza's rich heritage, however, MacDiarmid notes that the style of service which Torontonians have enjoyed for generations will be painstakingly preserved. "Many of our customers' parents and grandparents had their weddings and bar mitzvahs here, and we consider it not only our privilege but our obligation to carry on this tradition. We're not doing away with the "good old days", merely upgrading the facilities in which they take place." In that spirit, Don invites you in to see and touch everything for yourself: decor, linens, china, silver, fixtures and furniture — everything has been hand-picked with an eye to making the Park Plaza of today a worthy successor to the Park Plaza of yesterday.

If you're arranging accommodations for out-of-town guests, your choice of The Park Plaza is certain to score big brownie points with them. The North and South Tower will offer 348 spacious refinished guest rooms, with fax, cable, daily paper, laundry or dry cleaning, and refreshments; there are non-smoking floors and handicapped rooms as well. Amenities include 24-hour room service, concierge, multilingual staff, business centre, valet parking and complimentary shoeshine. Wedding guests enjoy special room rates.

Recreation facilities will include the Greenhouse Spa, swimming pool and exercise room; nearby are movie theatres, Yorkville shopping, parks and other attractions. Subway entrances are half a block away, Pearson Airport half an hour.

There will be four fine restaurants and lounges: the Roof Restaurant with its panoramic southeast city view, Morton's Steakhouse, the Roof Lounge with Mezzanine Lounge and Toronto's only outdoor tall bar. The ample meeting and banquet space will include two ballrooms, one rooftop salon, and four boardrooms and seven meeting rooms for corporate events.

An interior colonnade will connect the North and South Towers. Between them will be a courtyard with a shimmering tiered fountain, the main lobby entrance graced by two faceted skylights, and the entrance to the North Tower and meeting rooms.

The refurbished Kosher kitchen will open along with the North Tower. Kosher wedding packages include hors d'oeuvres, bar, four-course meal, sweet table, and Kosher toasting and dinner wine. Of course, there will be room for the chuppah. Dinner is served sit-down plated style.

Refurbished Kosher kitchen

To help make your wedding a success, take advantage of the amenities that can be found here, all under one roof. The Park Plaza's experienced catering staff is happy to assist you in planning the event by recommending florists, decorators and entertainers. First and foremost, however, you'll want to plan the menu to end all menus, and only true professionals like those at the Park Plaza can deliver the kind of quality on which a 70-year reputation is built. You can reach the Catering Department at (416) 924-5471. Don MacDiarmid, Catering Manager or Carole Dekoker, Catering Sales Manager, will be happy to assist you.

From One Generation To The Next

Ritché. the name has come to mean "beautiful bride." For over 40 years, three generations of Canadian brides have had the Ritché family assist them with the most important decisions of their bridal attire.

After receiving his fashion training in Europe, Jack Ritché came to Canada, quickly establishing himself as a leading couturier designer. In the years that followed, he has outfitted international and local celebrities and thousands of brides from across the country.

In 1981, his daughter, Vivian, joined the family business, and soon after Ritché expanded to the present Avenue Road location.

Jack Ritché maintains his couturier status by still attending to mothers and brides, while his daughter, Vivian and her husband, Arthur, have come to oversee operations.

Vivian tells us, "Women of the 90's are smart and sophisticated. They are professionals and business people, who have come to appreciate value and service. We relate to our customers and strive to exceed their expectations. This is a very personal business and we really get to know our customers. They're like part of the family."

Just enter through the signatured double glass doors and you quickly realize that this is no ordinary store. Beautiful gowns and dresses are everywhere. The upper level, entirely dedicated to bridal wear, is adorned with testimonial thank you letters and photos of beautiful Ritché brides. Here brides choose from exciting Ritché Original Designs in fine fabrics and laces from around the world, and from the best selection of Canadian and international designers. From simple to elaborate, traditional to contemporary, Ritché has a style to suit each bride's needs and every wedding theme.

Relax in private consultation rooms while you select confidently with the assistance of the friendly and knowledgeable consultants.

The main floor features an incredible selection of ready-to-wear outfits in addition to hundreds of reorderable dresses and suits. The incredible selection allows each woman to create her own unique and exciting fashion statement. Fashion consultants assist with the selection and expert fittings. Skilled dressmakers make sure the fit is just right.

Bridal Experts for over 40 years

No wedding is complete without the bridal party. At Ritché, bridesmaids can choose from hundreds of the latest reorderable styles. However, as important as they may be, no one matches the excitement of a beaming flower girl!

Ritché is always striving for new and exciting items. For instance, the store's lower level has added a large display of bridal guest books, picture frames and other beautiful accessories. They even have a colouring book designed for matching attendants! All these items have been popular for shower and engagement gifts. To top it off, the store has

"Women of the '90's are smart and sophisticated. They understand value and service."

Toronto's best selection of bridal shoes from several top shoe designers. Always something special to see - the store warrants many visits.

For almost 50 years, women have come to Ritché to look and feel fantastic for their special occasions. That's why Ritché - for three consecutive years - has been voted 'Toronto's Favorite Bridal Salon' by the Toronto Sun Reader's Choice Awards.

This year, many Ritché brides from thirty or more years ago have returned with their engaged daughters to select their bridal gowns.

Ritché. The tradition continues for the next generation.

The road to the perfect simcha leads to King Solomon's

For your wedding, or any special event where food plays a major role, you want a caterer or restaurant which serenades your taste buds with fresh, innovative cuisine and exquisite presentation while conforming to the highest standards of Kashruth. In brief, you want King Solomon's Catering.

King Solomon's Table, Toronto's only Kosher fine dining establishment, shares the same location and Kosher kitchen. From the moment you enter, the sense of quality and class is reinforced by the pure gleam of fine linen and the warm maroons and rich browns of dark wood panelling and upholstered chairs. Any dish served here is a sample of the finest culinary craft, a fact that has earned the restaurant an international reputation of sorts; parties from as far away as New York book evenings at King Solomon's, and New York's weekly Jewish Press acclaims King Solomon's as a five-star restaurant.

King Solomon's Continental menu offers tantalizing appetizers, salads and entrées. The pastas include Mongolian Fire Chicken, on the spicy side, with ancho chili garlic and mushroom sauce. The Chicken Venezia and French-cut grilled Veal Chops with rosemary sauce are heavenly, the Crispy Sesame Beef and Chicken celestial. These are but a few items from head chef Daniel Bresca's vast repertoire; for your weddings and other simchas, King Solomon's accommodates all tastes, from the mainstream to the exotic. Moroccan cuisine, Italian, Israeli — even Japanese! — your imagination's the limit. They are happy to cater vegetarian diets, too, and prepare special meals for special needs.

All cakes are baked in-house for the ultimate in freshness, and Bresca's talents as a pastry chef ensure that the desserts measure up to the entrées. Try the frozen Kahlua cake, for example: it's light, not too rich, smooth, and highly popular as an after-dinner treat.

The restaurant seats 300 guests comfortably. If you'd prefer to have your function elsewhere, King Solomon's caters to private homes, synagogues, and selected banquet halls. At the brand new, elegant Sephardic Kehila Centre in Thornhill, King Solomon's is one of a chosen few Caterers-In-Residence, and can accommodate up to 600 guests. If you're planning a large simcha, you would be well-advised to check out this location; it's an architectural masterpiece that has raised the bar for new synagogue construction.

For weddings — and other special occasions like bar/bat mitzvahs, sheva brachot, bris, pidyon haben and babynaming parties — King Solomon's offers you the best of three worlds: superb in-home catering for small, intimate gatherings; the wonderful ambience of King Solomon's Table for medium-sized functions; and the incomparable Kehila Centre for large events. Decades of service to satisfied brides

In 1979 Bronson's China and Gifts opened their spacious Thornhill store. Since then, Bronson's has established a tradition of offering you the best in quality china, giftware — and above all, service. To meet the needs of midtown customers and brides, a new location opened in Lawrence Plaza in 1996.

Bronson's has become well-known for its relaxed, friendly atmosphere and helpful, knowledgeable staff. They understand your needs and wants as a bride; they make it easier for you to manage the important details of choosing gifts for your bridal registry. This friendliness extends to your friends and family when they are purchasing from your registry.

Let Bronson's staff help you explore the extensive selection of fine china, dinnerware, flatware, stemware, kitchen items and giftware. There are contemporary and traditional patterns from around the world, and unique hand-painted ceramic designs; new patterns and accessories are added constantly.

Computerized inventory and registries keep you posted on what is in stock, and what your guests have purchased. Besides great prices on gifts and china, Bronson's offers special services including gift wrapping, same-day delivery and telephone orders. Also, there is an in-store purchase reward program.

Bronson's Thornhill store, at 2 Steeles Ave. W., is open Mon.- Sat. 9:30-5:30, Thurs. till 9, and Sun. 12 noon-5; phone (905) 881-9930. The Lawrence Plaza location is open Mon.-Thurs. 10-9, Fri. & Sat. 10- 6, and Sun. 12 noon-5; phone (416) 256-9930. For cross-Canada orders call toll-free: 1-800-387-2766.

Not Your Ordinary Bridal Registry
Bronson's is not your ordinary Bridal Registry. From our helpful, courteous bridal consultants, to our casual, relaxed and friendly atmosphere...Bronson's is unique. Gift of luggage has immediate impact

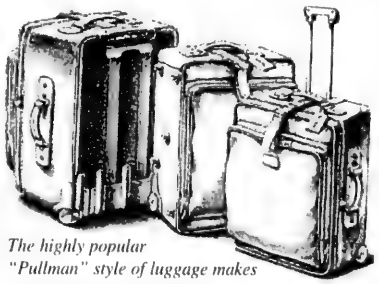
If you're looking for a novel wedding gift at a remarkably low price, Just Bags has a staggering variety of choices that offer one major advantage over most other gifts: immediate impact.

"All wedding gifts are wonderful," says owner Eric Blechman, "but when you give the gift of luggage, it gets used and enjoyed immediately. While the china and appliances are still in boxes and the money's still sitting in the bank account, the luggage you give is hopping a plane with the bride and groom. From the moment they start packing for their honeymoon until the moment they unpack, their luggage will be front and centre — a constant reminder of your generosity and good taste."

Constant reminder of giver's good taste

And when you buy the gift of luggage at Just Bags — whether you leave the store with it or use their handy Bridal Registry — you'll enjoy a combination of high quality, low price and personal service that is unparalleled in the industry. As Canada's largest luggage specialty store, Just Bags carries an incredible selection of quality brand names at prices so low "we can't advertise the labels", grins Blechman.



The highly popular "Pullman" style of luggage makes a terrific gift that will be used immediately

Volume buying and selling allow Just Bags to operate on wafer-thin margins. There's nothing skimpy about service, however, and Blechman prides himself on having "the friendliest, most knowledgeable staff in the business." Employees are thoroughly schooled in all aspects of luggage use and care, and are happy to advise you accordingly. "I suppose you could call us a "superstore" in terms of the stock we carry," says Blechman, "but we offer small-store service, and we stand behind our products."

Though many customers take advantage of Just Bags' Bridal Registry, some prefer to bring their purchase to the reception and present it personally. "A set of luggage makes an impressive statement," says Blechman. From a purely physical standpoint, it's liable to be the largest gift presented, yet at Just Bags' prices, its impact on your budget may be less than a single piece of expensive giftware.

Luggage is an eminently practical gift that will be used for many years after the wedding, but it's only the tip of the Just Bag iceberg. You'll find every conceivable kind of bag and case here, as well as a myriad of travel accessories. Duffel bags, knapsacks, tote bags, money belts — you name it, Just Bags has it, in a selection that has to be seen to be fully appreciated.

Your gift of luggage will travel wonderfully to Israel, Florida and all points in between with the lucky bride and groom, but you needn't go far to get it. Just Bags is conveniently located in Lawrence Plaza at Lawrence and Bathurst and in the Dixie Outlet Mall at Dixie and the QEW, with "everything in luggage except the price."

"Boutique Hotel" offers many wedding benefits

Making sure that a wedding goes well involves hundreds of details. Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto will take care of them all under one roof, meaning less stress on the wedding party, and more enjoyment for everyone — bride, groom, family and friends,

Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto hosts wedding parties of 40 to 180 people, starting at $80.00 per guest, plus gratuity and taxes.

When you book your function at this marvelously mid-sized downtown hotel, which offers self parking after 6 p.m. for all guests of the bridal party, you'll find something special in store for both bride and groom.

The festivities begin at 6 p.m. with a one-hour cocktail reception featuring complimentary piano player, open bar and hot and cold hors d'oeuvres. This is followed by an elegant four-course dinner with imported wine, and sparkling wine afterwards for toasts. There is a four-hour host bar after dinner, and coffee and tea service at midnight.

Also, the bride and groom receive one free room on the wedding night for every $2,000 spent, to a maximum of five nights. For example, if there are 75 guests at $83 each, totalling $6,225, there would be three complimentary rooms for the bride and groom to offer family and friends. (These figures do not include taxes and gratuity.)

Rates start at $195 for a single or double room, with special rates during the slow season. When they arrive on their wedding night, the bride and groom receive a complimentary suite and chilled champagne. Before setting out next morning on their honeymoon, they are served a continental breakfast (sliced fruit, Danish pastry, croissants and coffee).

If you wish, Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto will be pleased to organize every aspect of your wedding within the domain of the hotel, from flowers to entertainment. The catering manager will attend to every detail to ensure all goes smoothly. This level of service is in keeping with Hotel Inter-Continental's profile: it's a "boutique hotel" for individual business travellers, families, intimates and small groups (and possibly a celebrity or two in search of privacy and quiet).

Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto is located at 220 Bloor Street West, just west of Avenue Road, across from the Royal Conservatory of Music. For more information, ask for the catering manager at (416) 960-5200.

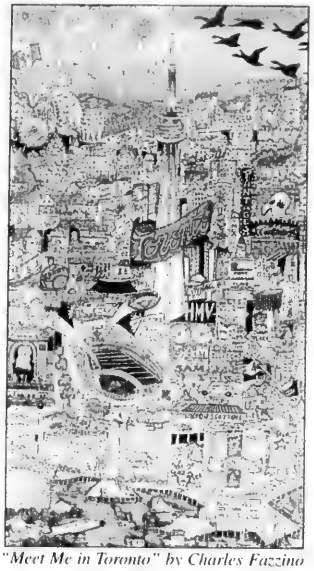
Liss Gallery a showcase for unique gifts and gift ideas

Finding a truly unique wedding gift can be a daunting task. If running the gauntlet of standard gift options leaves you with a "been there, done that" feeling, a visit to Liss Gallery at 978 Eglinton Avenue West may be just the ticket.

Primarily a showcase for fine art and a provider of custom framing, Liss Gallery has nonetheless become a favourite destination for people seeking a special gift. "When someone buys a piece of art for themself, it's a validation of my decision to acquire it," says Liss. "When they buy it for someone else, it's doubly flattering."



"Meet Me in Toronto" by Charles Fazzino

"Spring Mood" by Viktor Shvaiko

Bar/bat mitzvah gifts

Popular as gift items are Charles Fazzino's three-dimensional art pieces depicting "hot spots" in various major urban centres. Signed, framed pictures or posters of your children with their favourite sports or entertainment celebrities make ideal bar/bat mitzvah presents.

Liss Gallery has forged its good name on a wide selection of original art, limited edition prints, posters, impeccable custom framing, and friendly, down-to-earth customer service. The gallery carries many artists of international renown, such as Jason Alexander, Charles Fazzino, Howard Behrens, Viktor Shvaiko, Roy Fairchild, and Authouart. It's a fun place to browse and shop, with a price range to accommodate any budget and a layaway plan to facilitate larger purchases. Liss Gallery understands that personal tastes differ, and is therefore happy to exchange any gift item.

Less obvious as a gift item is the reframing and/or restoration of existing art. "Most people have at least one or two pieces in need of reframing or restoration," says Liss. Special occasions like wedding anniversaries are a great opportunity to surprise someone with a beautifully reframed picture.

Liss Gallery is currently making an unusual offer. Anyone can bring in a piece of art to have it inspected free of charge — a valuable service when you consider the irreparable damage caused by simple neglect.

Free art inspection

Liss Gallery is a place for people who enjoy connecting with their emotions and feelings through art. By giving it as a gift, gallery-goers help relatives and friends share in this experience.

Sam Firestone Caterers excels in splendidly renovated facility

The new magic of Shaarei Shomayim's banquet facilities, the subject of rave reviews since renovations were completed last July, is a fitting setting for the culinary excellence within.

The hall's stunning transformation is the work of designer Nurit Bloomberg and warrants a visit by anyone seeking a special setting for their next simcha. The "new look" is neoclassical with distinct architectural details. Decorative mouldings, a delicately latticed drop grid ceiling, maple panelling, columns and unique paint finishes give the room a warm, rich, natural glow. The window treatments feature an exquisite combination of sheers and swags, enhanced by soft indirect lighting. The omnipresent use of graceful, elliptical shapes ties the room together effortlessly.

The banquet hall seats parties of up to 400 with room for dancing. For auditorium-style functions, seating can be arranged for up to 650 people. Standing functions can accommodate about 1,000 people. Additional rooms are available for a wide range of functions.

Consistent first class cuisine has made the Firestone name legendary over nearly four decades of synagogue catering. Under the direction of Executive Chef Jimmy Lyras, Sam Firestone Caterers has earned an enviable reputation for unsurpassed quality and excellence in all the menus they serve. Les Firestone points out that his staff enjoys creating and preparing authentic regional dishes. "I know," he says, "that when my staff promises a dish, whether it be Moroccan, Italian, Chinese, or even Greek, it will have an authentic taste — as if it came directly from that region. I take great pride in this authenticity, and people know they can count on us for it."

Unequalled service is another term synonymous with the Firestone name. Les stresses his availability and dedication to clients. "I am always available to address any questions or concerns. The people I deal with know they can come to me at any time, and I will help them to the absolute best of my ability. My only concern is making your simcha perfect. The size of the party and the synagogue affiliation have absolutely no effect on my service. Whether your function is large or small, nothing gets in the way because nothing but perfection matters. And our prices are competitive."

Firestone and Shaarei Shomayim take pride in the additional services they offer at no extra charge, such as a beautiful bride's room, ample free parking, and a full time, on-site mashgiach. Just a few more good reasons to consider Sam Firestone Caterers for your next simcha.

A new store to service all your paper needs

Paper is one of our most common materials, for uses mundane or sublime. We toss it out daily; yet it records our deepest thoughts on major occasions. And of course, we want the paper to match the event — especially at times like weddings, when we invite friends and relatives to share our joy.

Now, there is a paper store to serve this need. Essence du Papier has two established Montreal branches, in Ogilvy's and on St.-Denis; there is now a Toronto location at Yonge & Castlefield. This is a spacious store with a European ambience, offering a huge quantity and variety of paper.

Today, women have as little time as men, and as much stress to cope with; this is even more so in planning a wedding. To help relieve this stress, let Essence du Papier's friendly, expert staff help with the invitations, and gifts for the bridal party. They will take time to work with you as an associate, helping you maintain budget and quality.

There is in-house printing; and a system provided by Crane to show you, on screen and in printout, how your invitation will look, and what it will cost. The staff can advise on printing invitations on your home computer; and many of the paper stocks are laser or bubble jet compatible.

Here is everything from handmade to recycled paper, in a huge range of designs. Quantities or single sheets are available; so if you have urgent needs such as extra invitations, Essence du Papier can help, without waiting for supplies shipped from far away.

The many featured products include the fine 100%-cotton papers of the trend-setting American company, Crane, and the handmade stocks of St.-Gilles in Quebec. There are executive, airmail and bordered stationeries, traditional invitations and thank-you notes, and fine gift wrapping paper.

There are many accessories: pens, some with quills and steel nibs; inks for every pen; candles; lamps with paper shades; table accessories; monogrammed stamps and pads with popular motifs; guest books; and albums, some handmade, all with acid-free paper so time won't damage your photos.

Essence du Papier is competitive, and will match written quotes. The staff will also recommend a florist or photographer. Essence du Papier is at 2476 Yonge St., at the corner of Castlefield. Call 932-0109; open Mon.-Wed. 10-6, Thurs.-Fri.10-7, Sat. 10-6, Sun. 12-5.

Alleged Nazi to be deported

By DAVID LAZARUS
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Mamertas Rolland Maciukas of Montreal will become the second alleged Nazi collaborator not to fight efforts by the Canadian government to strip him of his citizenship.

As a result, 74-year-old Maciukas, one of only two Quebec residents so far facing denaturalization proceedings for allegedly lying about the Nazi past to enter Canada – the other is Rosemount resident Vladimir Katriuk – will instead face deportation as soon as the federal cabinet denaturalizes him.

That process should now "move along quickly," said Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) national executive director Jack Silverstone in an interview.

"It shows that when the government is prepared to take action and implement laws, results can be obtained," he said.

"The individual in question obviously realized that his past had caught up with him. He had a 50-year free ride, so he decided to take the route that would be the least detrimental to himself and to his family."

The first Canadian not to challenge denaturalization proceedings against him was Toronto resident Ladislaus Csizsik-Csatary.

Csizsik-Csatary was a former Montreal art dealer who left Canada on his own accord last August before deportation proceedings against him could get underway. A member of the Royal Hungarian Police, he was accused of collaborating in the deportations of thousands of Hungarian Jews.

When dieting turns deadly

Feb. 1 to 7 is Eating Disorder Awareness Week. To help raise awareness, we begin a four-part series this week by examining aspects of eating disorders specific to the Jewish community.

Next week: Reducing the Risks: What You Need to Know

By FRANCES KRAFT
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Eva W. reclines on her hospital pillow, pulling her cardigan around her shoulders for warmth although her small room isn't cold. The former Jewish day school student, now 18, has been anorexic for two years. Her face is ashen and her slim hands have become bony. At 5 feet tall, she weighs only 64 pounds.

Her worried parents have been told the goal of treatment is to keep her alive until she decides to get better.

There are many Evas and countless more girls at risk of developing eating disorders.

Pearl Gropper Berman has known for a long time that body image and related issues are concerns for many of the female students she serves as director of York University's Jewish Student Federation.

But it wasn't until she became involved in organizing a symposium on Eating Disorders in the Jewish Community a year ago that she realized how pervasive the problem was. Gropper Berman says a very high percentage of the female students she sees are not happy with their bodies. "I find it amazing the number of students who've been hospitalized [for eating disorders] or know someone who's been hospitalized."

Special Report on eating disorders

First of a series

She'd venture to say it's reached epidemic proportions.

Whether or not that's the case – and research is still in the early stages – it's clear there are issues specific to the Jewish community, and within that group, issues specific to the Orthodox community.

Any subculture that focuses undue attention on weight and shape issues – such as modelling or ballet – is at higher risk, says Dr. Allan Kaplan, head of the program for eating disorders at the Toronto Hospital.

"There are certain segments of the Jewish community where there may be an undue and unhealthy focus on weight and shape. Whether it's a function of being Jewish or a combination of other factors, it's hard to say," he adds.

"I think there ...is a segment of the Jewish community who are extremely achievement oriented for themselves and their children,"

The News in Brief

ISRAEL

Divorce Web Style

JERUSALEM — Filing for divorce in Israel may soon be just a mouse click away.

Keeping pace with the times, the Orthodox-controlled rabbinical court system is putting the final touches on a Web site that will enable Israelis to file via the Internet for a get – the religious divorce required to dissolve a Jewish marriage.

Export Destination

JERUSALEM — The Palestinian Authority is now Israel's number 2 export destination, according to data published by the Central Bureau of Statistics. It imported $1.57 billion (US) worth of goods from Israel in 1997. Only the United States buys more from Israel.

MAHAL Conference

JERUSALEM — There will be a meeting of MAHAL participants, those from abroad who volunteered to fight in Israel's War of Independence.

For more information contact Omri Meron or Mikha Shagrir, April Commemoration, 13A Yahalom St. Neve Monoson 60190, or call 011-972-3-533-5838.

WORLD

Survivors Fund

WASHINGTON — The U.S. House of Representatives passed legislation last week authorizing the United States to provide $25 million to Holocaust survivors.

The action fulfils a pledge made by the Clinton administration in December to contribute $25 million to a new international fund to benefit Holocaust survivors around the world.

Arson at Jewish School

MOSCOW — Vandals have set fire to a Jewish school in a southern Russian city.

Several Molotov cocktails were lobbed at Nalchik State Jewish Day School No. 10 on Jan. 18. The attack did not result in any injuries, but did cause serious damage to the building.

Regaining Torahs

MOSCOW — A top-ranking Russian official has promised to help the Jewish community regain hundreds of Torah scrolls.

Justice Minister Sergey Stepashin told Jewish religious leaders that the scrolls, which are currently in the nation's museums, should be returned to their original owners according to a law on the restitution of religious property signed by President Boris Yeltsin several years ago.

Priebke's Meeting

ROME — Convicted Nazi war criminal Erich Priebke says he will meet with a relative of one of his victims.

Priebke, a former Nazi SS captain, said in an interview on Italian state radio that he was organizing a "face-to-face meeting" with a man his own age who was a relative of one of the victims.

WWII Deportees Honored

ROME — A Roman Catholic cardinal joined Milan's chief rabbi in a ceremony unveiling the first public monument to the Jews and anti-fascists deported from the Italian city to Nazi death camps.

The memorial plaque commemorates the 1,580 people, including 1,237 Jews, who were deported during World War II for political reasons.

Europe Annoys Israel

LONDON — A squabble has erupted between Israel and the European Union (EU).

Senior Israeli officials in Europe are reacting angrily to increasingly strident demands by the EU for a place alongside the United States at the high table of Middle East peace diplomacy.

New German Party

FRANKFURT — Leaders of a new right-wing party said recent reports of neo-Nazi incidents in the German army are exaggerated.

The leaders of the party, Union of Free Citizens – Freedom Offensive, accused German Defence Minister Volker Ruehe of overreacting to the incidents, which include distributing neo-Nazi literature and producing videos with anti-Semitic and racist content.

Russians Indicted

MOSCOW — Two former Russian military intelligence officers have been indicted on charges of spying for the Mossad, Israel's foreign intelligence service, according to a Moscow newspaper.

The two were allegedly involved in transferring classified photographs taken by Russian satellites to an Israeli diplomat stationed in Moscow, said Russian security sources.

If convicted, the two could receive up to 20 years in prison.

This was the first time that Russian security officials were arrested on charges of spying for Israel, the sources said.

Journalism Awards

NEW YORK — The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee is accepting entries for the 1998 JDC-Smolar Student Journalism Award.

It is designed to develop a better understanding of the global Jewish community.

For more information, write to The JDC-Smolar Student Journalism Award, The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, 711 Third Ave. New York, N.Y., 10017-4014, Attention: Kimberly Bayer.

Submissions must be postmarked no later than March 15.

Order of Canada

OTTAWA — Several Jewish Canadians were among the 68 people named last week to the Order of Canada by Governor General Romeo LeBlanc.

Promoted to Companion, the Order's highest rank, was Reva Appleby Gerstein of Toronto for her work in health care.

Named Officers of the Order are the Hon. Charles Dubin, the former chief justice of Ontario; Eva Kushner of Toronto in the field of education; and Henry Mintzberg of Montreal, also in education.

Named Members of the Order were Edgar Gold of Halifax (law); Rickey Kanee Schachter of Toronto (medicine); and Irving Schwartz of Sydney, N.S., for volunteerism.

An investiture ceremony is expected to take place at Rideau Hall in the spring.

Maccabi Canada head trying to mend fences

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Roy Salomon has gone on a lot of missions in his 29 years with the Maccabi organization, but none may be as difficult as the one he's undertaking this week.

Salomon, president of Maccabi Canada and co-chair of the North American Maccabi Confederation, travelled to Australia in an attempt to mend fences with the country's Jewish community. Along with eight other officers of the Maccabi World Union (MWU), the group was hoping to meet with Maccabi Australia officials and the families of athletes killed and injured as a result of the collapse of a bridge during the opening ceremonies of last summer's Maccabiah Games in Israel.

Four Australian athletes were killed in the tragedy and others hospitalized, including Sasha Elterman, a young woman who has suffered with a brain abscess and recently required surgery to relieve the condition. The tragedy has prompted feelings of anger and abandonment among Australian Maccabiah participants and led to a civil suit against the Games' organizers filed by a widow of one of those killed.

In Israel, which held two inquiries into the tragedy, five persons connected with the bridge collapse are facing criminal charges. They include the engineer who designed it, the contractors who built it and Yoram Eyal, the former chair of the Maccabi organizing committee.

In Australia, meanwhile, Sasha's father, Colin Elterman, is spearheading a campaign against the MWU, calling for the resignation of all its members pending a public inquiry into the organization.

Just last weekend, the families of the four athletes who were killed sent a letter to the MWU asking that it refrain from coming to Australia, the Jerusalem Post reported.

The letter called the proposed visit "a complete waste of time and money." The letter also accuses MWU officials of bringing "shame and embarrassment upon the people of Israel" by shirking responsibility for the tragedy and attempting to hang on to their "power and perks."

It is into that emotional and legal maelstrom that Salomon and the others have plunked themselves as they attempt to serve as goodwill ambassadors for the international Maccabi community.

Salomon said the mission will express to the Australian Jewish community their deepest sympathies for their suffering and to explain the MWU's role in the wake of the tragedy.

The Australian Jewish community has many misconceptions about the MWU, thinking it played down the tragedy and did little to help them in their hour of need, Salomon said.

"We feel really terrible about what happened," he said. "From day one, we reacted in a very compassionate way."

Salomon said Maccabi officials and supporters visited the victims and their families in the hospital in Israel while Maccabi Canada contacted Rabbi Sidney Shoham, who was in Israel on a CJA mission, to counsel the Australians, who were devastated by the tragedy.

Afterwards, members of the international Maccabi community visited the hospital daily, bringing food and arranging for loans and insurance coverage for the victims, Salomon said. Unfortunately, most Australian Jews are unaware of those efforts on behalf of the victims while Elterman has gone "on an emotional campaign to destroy" the MWU, he added.

"I understand that Elterman is going through a terrible tragedy...but it's not acceptable to destroy an organization with false information," Salomon said.

Salomon said the Maccabi delegation has a multi-level agenda while in Australia. It plans on holding a public meeting to explain the views of the MWU and answer any questions from the local Jewish community; it will meet with Australian Maccabi officials to try to convince them to reverse their decision to resign their executive positions in the MWU and to reconsider pulling the organization out of the MWU; and the delegation hopes to meet with at least some of the bereaved families to express their condolences.

"We're not going down there in an aggressive manner," Salomon said. "We really care. We're family and we want to say how much we feel for the families there."

Avraham Burg's covenant

Two days after the Ne'eman Committee submitted its recommendations to the prime minister, the chair of the Jewish Agency, Avraham Burg, presented his own "technical solution" to the conversion conundrum.

Unlike Ya'acov Ne'eman's group, however, which aimed at trying to find a larger, structural compromise to the issues underlying the conversion debate, Burg aimed much lower. He sought but a narrow, pragmatic passage through a potentially-divisive impasse.

His proposal calls for the Hebrew letter yod to appear on Israeli identity cards under the entries for religion and nationality. The letter would be accompanied by the individual's date of birth, if born to a Jewish mother, or the date of conversion.

The "benefit" of the proposal, according to Burg, is that the individual's conversion, without any questions asked, will be recognized for civil purposes by the state. On the other hand, the Orthodox establishment will still be able to search "behind" the particulars of the conversion should it wish to do so. The official conversion certificate will be deposited at the Interior Ministry.

Apparently, Burg had reportedly negotiated his technical solution behind the scenes, for more than two months. In the end, it was signed by representatives of the Reform and Conservative movements in Israel, the Chief Rabbinate and by an emissary on behalf of Chief Sephardi Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron.

As of this writing, the situation has not been resolved. The Chief Rabbinate has not yet pronounced on Ne'eman's macro solution nor on Burg's micro one. But Burg's intervention elicited both criticism and praise. As one writer for the Jerusalem Post noted, the pluralism waters have become considerably more muddied.

In fact, Ne'eman himself was observed to have been considerably upset at both the substance and the timing of Burg's proposal, viewing it as an attempt to undermine the work of his committee.

In response, Burg offered that he was only trying to provide a fallback position to the Chief Rabbinate in the likely event it rejected Ne'eman's compromise.

The criticisms directed at Burg summed up the dichotomy of views he engenders about himself. He is seen either as a self-serving promoter or as a selfless proponent of the best interests of the Jewish people.

On the first day of the 33rd Zionist Congress that I attended last month, Burg released Brit Am, a draft outline of the policies he suggested form the agenda of the world Zionist movement over the next hundred years.

The document is a further refinement of the one he presented two years earlier to the executive of the Jewish Agency at the beginning of his term as the agency's chair.

In Brit Am, Burg outlines the shape and content of the essential tasks that he envisions for Zionist activity in Israel and in the Diaspora. He urges that these tasks be adopted as the "new Zionism."

Burg will be the chair of the agency for two more years, after which time, the chairship evolves to Salai Meridor, the Likud party's nominee. Though they do not share political or ideological loyalties, Burg and Meridor are contemporaries and childhood chums. It is unlikely that Meridor's policies for the agency would radically depart from those of Burg.

In Brit Am, Burg is not reluctant to offer up bold ideas. Nor is he reluctant to call attention to what he believes are shortcomings in the way things have been done in the past. He is an astute politician and a far-seeing thinker. He takes squarely into account the fact that the agency stands today at something of a crossroads. It is severely in debt. Its deficit was reported recently at more than $400 million (US). Funds have lately been falling off from Diaspora contributors, a predictable but melancholy fallout from the "unity" concerns resulting from the pluralism debate in Israel.

I shall excerpt only small portions from Brit Am.

"In order to help realize the Zionist dream, the Zionist movement needs to change its content. The content of the "New Zionism" must change both in ideological terms, which defines the essence of the New Zionism, and in organizational terms, which defines the way in which the Zionist movement operates."

Burg then offers five broad challenges that the New Zionism should undertake in the coming century. They are:

- the task of aliyah and the ingathering of the exiles. (Read: aliyah from the west.)
- the task of preserving the Jewish people (Read: Jewish continuity) and contributing towards its success.
- the challenge of promoting a model society in Israel. (Read: strengthening democracy in Israel.)
- the challenge of making the world a better place.
- the challenge of uniting the Jewish people. (Read: more tolerance for pluralism inside Israel.)

According to Burg, his New Zionism contains at least 10 major innovations:

- the separation of religion and state.
- the strengthening of democracy in the face of rising religious fundamentalism.
- more and better integration of Israel into the Middle East region and reconciliation with the peoples of the region.
- abjure the "negation of the Diaspora" from the concepts of Zionism.
- replace the concept of "the melting pot" with the concept of the "mosaic."
- change our attitudes towards Israelis who are living outside Israel; an end to the delegitimization of yordim.
- provide better for the non-Jewish immigrant citizens of Israel.
- strive to improve the quality of life and of the environment in Israel.
- the establishment of a Jewish Peace Corps for every young Jew.
- separate the role of the chair of the World Zionist Organization from that of the chairship of the Jewish Agency.

Burg has placed before the Jewish public a clear, forthright agenda. He has defined what he perceives to be a number of areas for the improvement of domestic Israeli society, Israeli and Diaspora relations, and the collectivity of Jewish "peoplehood". All of these areas, he believes, are pressing needs which must be addressed before the start of the next century. MBD

Toronto family mourns murdered daughter

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A Toronto Hebrew teacher and her family are in shock following the murder of their daughter in Thailand last week.

The body of Heather (Hadar) Novak, 22, was found at a resort on the island of Ko Samed, about 160 kilometres southeast of Bangkok. She had been stabbed and her throat had been slit.

Thai police last week said they had arrested a resort employee, who reportedly confessed to the murder, saying he was drunk. He was taken to Bangkok for questioning.

Authorities said Novak was killed while fighting off a rape attempt.

She and two friends, also from Toronto, were renting a bungalow at the Diamond Beach resort. Police said Heather went to use a washroom, and vanished. Her body was found the next day in a nearby pond, wrapped in a bedsheet.

"We are extremely shocked," said Rabbi Mordechai Sevy, educational director at Or Haemet Sephardic School in Thornhill, where Novak's mother, Eliza, was a senior kindergarten Hebrew teacher.

Heather was born in Calgary and attended Mackenzie Collegiate and Associated Hebrew School, where her Israeli-born mother had once taught at the Danilack campus.

Through Rabbi Sevy, Heather's older sister Carolyn (Dorit), 27, said that Heather was "a brilliant and happy girl who loved life. She was an open-minded, generous person. She was funny and smart and always the centre of attention."

Heather studied film at York University for one year. She loved communications and media, and her death "leaves a tremendous void," Carolyn stated.

Her Israeli-born father, Haim, an electrician, was quoted as saying that Heather had planned to stay at the resort for three weeks before returning home.

The funeral took place last Sunday.

Gardner takes over police board

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Norm Gardner, long a visible presence on Toronto's Jewish scene, last week won a narrow vote to become chair of the city's powerful Police Services Board.

Backed by Mayor Mel Lastman, Gardner defeated incumbent Maureen Prinsloo by a 4-3 vote.

Gardner has spent eight years on the board, some of those as vice-chair, and will now oversee policy for Canada's largest police force, whose annual budget tops $500 million.

He has been tagged by some as pro-police and by detractors as an apologist for the police.

Gardner, 59, is an avid gun collector and sport shooter, and has gained notoriety over the past few years for being among a handful of civilians licensed to carry a concealed weapon.

Gardner told The CJN that among his top priorites is to "reactivate" meetings between the board and representatives of visible minority groups.

He said he was "buoyed" by a Toronto radio poll that found over 70 percent support for his new position.

Gardner is a longtime member of Beth Tikvah Synagogue, the Jewish War Veterans of Canada, Branson Hospital's board of directors, and B'nai Brith Canada.

He was first elected a North York alderman in 1977 and went on to serve as North York's controller. He was appointed to Metro council in 1981, and served there until last year.

In last fall's municipal elections, he was easily elected to the new megacouncil in Ward 10. He says he will be able to juggle his duties on council with those on the police services board.

He ran as a Conservative, partly on a law-and-order platform, in last year's federal election, and was defeated by Liberal MP Jim Peterson in Willowdale riding.

Also last week, Mayor Lastman announced that Anne Golden, the former head of the United Way, will head the mayor's task force on homelessness.

CJN launches Internet edition

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Click on your modem, engage your browser, set your URL for the heart of The CJN and sit back and enjoy the cyberspace version of The Canadian Jewish News.

Beginning on Feb. 5, The CJN will be accessible on the World Wide Web to newspaper subscriber and cyber-surfer alike. Readers with computers that access the Internet will be able to peruse portions of the latest edition of The CJN at our very own homepage, [www.cjnews. com].

The move is the latest development in a series of steps that have seen The CJN modernize its operations, change its look and vault headlong into the 21st century by employing more color, graphics and computer technology.

Going online is part of "our ongoing efforts to make sure the paper is as modern and relevant as it can be," said CJN editor Mordechai Ben-Dat. "We're reaching further, higher and never resting on our laurels."

The Web site will feature several news stories from the most current edition of The CJN, two- or three-line synopses of other current news items, a ticker tape-like headline that changes daily, features by our columnists and older, archival material.

Those who click onto The CJN's Web site will also find several theme-related "buttons" to press for quick access to other topics, such as health news, sports, kids' features and developments on campus.

"The site is a taste of The CJN and not a replacement for it," Ben-Dat said. "It's not the total CJN on the Internet."

"With our launch into the technological world of cyberspace, we will hopefully expand our readership and make the paper even better," said Jeff Rosen, CJN news and Internet editor.

Advertising manager Vera Gillman said the idea for the site is to "keep it in the style of The CJN. So we stayed away from dancing Magen Davids.

"We're keeping the site simple so that its pages and stories are easily and quickly accessible, like at a newsstand," she added.

CJN general manager Gary Laforet called the Web site "a work in progress.

"Because we are in the news business, this is a natural extension for us. We got our feet wet 14 months ago when we went on the America Online newsstand with a number of stories each week. We view CJnews as something which will continuously undergo change and improvement as time goes on."

Mazon records record giving

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The numbers keep getting bigger and bigger.

Mazon Canada recently announced that it allocated a record $239,465 in 1997, continuing a 10-year trend of ever increasing distributions. Since it was founded in 1987, the organization, which calls itself the Jewish response to hunger, has allocated a total of $1,239,995.

One hundred and four food banks and similar organizations across Canada were the beneficiaries of Mazon's 1997 allocations. The fall distributions, which totalled $127,465, included $8,100 that went to nine Ontario groups participating in Mazon's "campaign against child poverty and hunger." The campaign was initiated after Rabbi Arthur Bielfeld urged contributors to donate their Ontario tax savings to Mazon.

Rabbi Bielfeld, who is a member of the Mazon board, suggested the tax rebate "had been established on the backs of Ontario's poor."

The campaign was supported by Mazon's donor base, the Holy Blossom Temple, Jewish Family & Child Service, Lawrence Park United Church and Voices for Children. Mazon itself raised $20,000 and $8,100 of that sum was allocated last fall to aid child nutrition programs at organizations including Food Path Mississauga, Lanark County Food Bank, Shalom Food Project and Thunder Bay Boys and Girls Clubs.

The remaining $11,900 will be distributed in Mazon's spring round of allocations, said Mazon executive director Jacqueline Kott-Wolle.

At the same time, the organization plans to take out a full page ad in the Globe and Mail listing about 500 individuals who object to the tax rebate and who express concern for the welfare of those "who will suffer the most as a result of this tax 'break' – namely children."

Kott-Wolle said Mazon is asking supporters to contribute an extra $25 to help pay for the ad.

In other developments, Mazon announced it had established an emergency ice storm fund designed to assist food banks affected by the recent storm in Quebec. Mazon's Montreal office was in contact with a number of food banks that receive regular support from Mazon and might lose perishable food because of a lack of electricity. The new Mazon emergency fund is designed to help replenish those supplies.

Other Mazon endeavors include introduction of new Passover greeting cards, a youth poster contest on the theme, Justice shall you pursue (deadline for submissions is March 30), a speakers' bureau to publicize Mazon's programs and a kosher gourmet food and wine tasting, scheduled for fall of 1998, Kott-Wolle said.

Priest cites new attitude towards Jews in Poland

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A total of 40 per cent of the Polish Catholic priests contacted agreed to have in their churches special prayers for Jews on Judaism Day in Poland Jan. 17.

This was one example of a new attitude towards Jews cited by Father Waldemar Chrostowski, 47, director of the Institute for Catholic-Jewish Dialogue in Warsaw.

His plea for reconciliation between Jews and Poles was delivered in the presence of officers of the Polish Jewish Congress, at a well-attended breakfast meeting of the world Jewry and international affairs committee of Canadian Jewish Congress' (CJC) Ontario region. He was given a cordial hearing, but the questions following his address showed that there are still roadblocks in the way of reconciliation.

Anti-Semitic incidents involving Canadian students in Poland taking part in the March of the Living were cited by Keith Landy, CJC honorary legal counsel, who asked what is being done to prevent a recurrence. The students visited Lublin and Krakow, as well as the death camps.

Father Chrostowski replied that this presented a difficult and painful problem, that though he met four times with March of the Living participants, he found it impossible to arrange other meetings because of their schedules.

"We don't take the utopian position that we can eliminate anti-Semitism," he said. "We say that anti-Semitism is a sin; but the people do what they want to do."

He said there was an unpleasant incident when a Polish group, by mistake, gave sandwiches with meat and butter to Jewish students and were accused of anti-Semitism.

Stereotypes

Canadian students taking part in the current March of the Living will be given talks by non-Jewish Polish students "rather than be subjected to street remarks," according to Nathan Leipciger, CJC Holocaust remembrance committee chair.

The CJC is heartened by the Day of Judaism and the Pope's overtures, said Joe Terkel, chair of the world Jewry and international affairs committee. He asked Father Chrostowski to speak about a commercial mall being built at Auschwitz, but the priest did not respond to this request.

Father Chrostowski reminded his listeners that Jews were sent to Auschwitz from many other countries because it was part of the Nazis' anti-Polish policy. "We need Jewish people in Poland to understand [us]. It is not only Jewish culture that was disrupted, but part of Polish culture was disrupted. There is much more spiritual poverty today in Poland than 60 years ago."

He said attempts are being made to change anti-Jewish stereotypes connected to the New Testament.

In the question period, he denied taking an anti-Semitic position in a dispute over what the Polish bishops had failed to do.

Father Chrostowski said with half his life already over, he was tired of acting as a "fireman" in solving problems in Polish-Jewish relations.

Exaggerations of anti-Semitism in Poland by certain rabbis in North America and by Polish priests does not help the situation, he said.

Among the guests were Andrzej Gorlicki, president of Canadian Polish Congress; Iwona Bojoiga, Congress vice-president; Wojciech Tycinski, Polish consul general in Toronto; and Alicja Formas-Pietrus, Toronto district president of the Canadian Polish Congress.

Paying the account

As of this writing, U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright is dutifully visiting foreign capitals, some in Europe, some in the Middle East. She is briefing American allies on the status of the crisis with Iraq. Her wearying journeys, resolute language and diminishing options have all the ominous trappings of a prelude to war.

Iraq refuses to allow the UN Weapons Inspections team access to a number of locations where it is expected that there is evidence of Iraq's menacing arsenal of biological and chemical weaponry. Of course, in refusing to allow the inspectors to see for themselves what there is to see, Iraq's ruler is violating the agreement that brought an end to the Gulf War of 1991, which he had precipitated.

But the violation by the Iraqi ruler of an international treaty is not a surprise to anyone familiar with him. He violates laws without compunction even as he has violated the territorial integrity of neighboring Kuwait and even as he continues to violate the human rights and fundamental dignity of his own citizens.

His disdain for law and his utter malevolence, however, are once again enmeshing others in a potentially bloody and deadly snare.

At some point, the western world must call him to account for his ongoing refusal to surrender his weapons of mass destruction.

If the frequency and the nature of the public pronouncements of the American leadership are any barometer, that point appears to be looming on the horizon. During the State of the Union address last week, President Bill Clinton reiterated earlier warnings to the Iraqi dictator. Those warnings were again repeated last weekend by Albright, by Secretary of Defence William Cohen, and by the U.S. ambassador to the UN, Bill Richardson. "We are not sabre-rattling. We are at a point where force is very much on the table," Richardson told a gathering in Switzerland.

Unless Saddam recants and finally discloses his true arsenal to the UN inspectors, the only questions that remain are: When will the account be paid and what will be its cost?

It is our fervent prayer and hope that no blood will be shed to pay for the vanity of the Iraqi tyrant. A peaceful resolution to his maniacal deceptions is much to be preferred.

But it is indeed very important to have Saddam Hussein see that the western world is quite in earnest and united in its threats against him. Thus, Canada is to be commended for having clearly and forcefully indicated its support for any military initiative that may be necessary. In this respect, Canada's position is superior to the guarded expressions of support that are frequently heard from certain continental European allies, in particular France. It would also be beneficial if Canada were to convey to Russia that it stands unequivocally alongside and supportive of the Americans and the British.

In Israel, the security establishment believes that no western attack against Iraq is imminent. Some reports suggest that diplomacy still has a further life of at least two more weeks before it exhausts itself. Nevertheless, the defence apparatus is now in a state of heightened alert. The media have reported that the United States has assured Israel that it will receive early notice of any attack against Iraq and that it will share its operational intelligence and early warning systems of any Iraqi attacks. What "early warning" means in real, elapsed time in the context of the short distances between the western deserts of Iraq and the eastern borders of Israel is approximately two minutes.

Given the situation, Israel must be free to take whatever preemptive or other defensive measures are necessary to protect its citizens. And the countries in the western alliance must allow Israel that freedom.

Saddam's key purpose in governing is, at any cost and by all means, to hold tightly onto the reins of power and control. It is not to provide for the well-being and the welfare of the people of Iraq.

That purpose has now collided with the rule of law and order.

Too early for welcome mat to Iran

I am delighted that you were not editorially seduced by Iran's President Mohammed Khatami calling for discussions and dialogue with the United States. The same cannot be said for the Toronto Star, which, in an editorial entitled "Iran's Olive Branch," urged the Americans to follow the lead of the Canadian government and stop demonizing Iranians.

It is my view that following one cleverly crafted speech addressed to the American people, but not its government, it is too early to welcome Iran back as a respected member of the community of nations. The litany of human rights abuses and crimes against humanity committed by Iran should not be forgotten so quickly.

First there was the holding of the American hostages which ignored the basic concept of diplomatic immunity. Then there was and still is a complete disregard for the rights of religious minorities, especially Jews and Baha'i. Thousands of Baha'i believers have been summarily executed. Furthermore, during the Iran-Iraq war, children were marched in front of Iranian tanks to detect land mines. And Iran supports and finances terrorist groups throughout the Middle East who have openly admitted killing of hundreds of innocent men, women and children. Those groups funded by Iran condemn any peace process and call for the destruction of the State of Israel and therefore by extension, so does the government of Iran.

You allude to the first successful testing by Iran of a missile capable of reaching Israel.

Hopefully, the United States will not follow Canada's lead in restoring diplomatic relations with Iran, doing it, as it has so many times in the past, for business considerations, while ignoring religious and human rights.

Oi Vey! sour cream and bacon chips

When I was in elementary school, one of the high points of Grade 2 was to research and write about all of the animals that were kosher according to biblical law. The top five were easy – chickens, beef and turkey followed by ducks and sheep. What my teacher did not anticipate was some of the other options available to bolder observant Jews: goats, llamas and giraffes. (These animals chew cud, have multiple stomachs and the right kind of hoof). One of my classmates drew a picture of a rabbi on a ladder readying himself to slaughter the giraffe; my teacher laughed until she cried. While no one in this community is ready to go to their butcher and ask for a giraffe brisket, according to what was stated in my school books, the animal was okay to eat, so long as you could find some one to kill it properly.

Enter where this strict adherence to kashrut has employed the giraffe factor. When I went to my company cafeteria to buy a snack to go along with my brown bag lunch, I saw a bag of potato chips with a new flavor – sour cream and bacon. As an observant Jew, I don't gravitate to bacon flavored foods, simply because I don't miss what I have never had. In the case of the chips, they were stamped as "COR Dairy." Huh?

I realize that many prepared foods are 98 percent chemicals, so that bacon is often not bacon and non-dairy cheese allows one to have a "cheeseburger." But perhaps the individuals who designate foods as kosher should give more thought to the spirit of the laws of kashrut.

In the spirit of kashrut, I believe something has been missed when an observant Jew can say that his chemical laden, simulated bacon, double non-dairy cheeseburger with the potato flour bun is kosher for Passover. If you want bacon, eat bacon. If you want a cheeseburger, go right ahead and dig in.

If you want kishke à la giraffe, I can sell you a step ladder…cheap!

Can't believe sentence in Israel for poster lady

I am writing to express my outrage and disbelief at the sentence handed down to Tania Suskind for her silly prank of distributing a caricature (of the Prophet Mohammed).

Has everyone gone mad? This sentence is a travesty of justice more appropriate in the fiefdom of Arafat than in what is supposed to be a democratic society with an independent judiciary. I hope that I am not the only one who feels that way, and if that is the case, we should make this known to the Israeli leaders. I am against the cowardly decision to sentence Suskind to two years in jail and demand her immediate release.

Where is the common sense of Israeli leaders? What is happening with the courts?

A different remembrance

In which a visitor from Toronto to a barely-marked gravesite in Poland pleads for a minyan

By JERZY JASTRZEBOWSKI

The name of the village is Tylawa, pronounced Tillahva. It is tucked deep in the wooded Beskid Mountains in southeastern Poland. For six centuries, this has been the home of Carpatho-Rusyns who call themselves Lemkos. Old people there still speak an archaic Ukrainian dialect, with an admixture of quaint 17th-century Polish words.

For hundreds of years, Jews and Poles lived in little towns in the valleys, and the Lemkos peopled the mountain villages. They have been decimated by wars and persecution, expulsions to neighboring Ukraine, deportation to concentration camps by Hitler's police and Stalin's NKVD. Many survivors emigrated to Canada and the United States. The holdouts are hanging on. They trust no strangers. But I am not a stranger.

A year ago, Jan "Vanio" Holuta put two grandsons and me on an old tractor. He chug-chugged past a creek and marshes to a huge concrete rectangle deep in the forest. A tombstone inscribed in Polish and Yiddish tells the tale of over 500 Jews from the rural towns of Dukla and Rymanow, murdered on Aug. 3, 1942. I told the children that we should not pray at the grave. Instead, each of us put a pebble on top of the gravestone and withdrew in silence. Holuta pulled me deeper into the forest. Twenty-five strides east of the mass grave, he showed me a peg under a wild raspberry bush.

"And now," he intoned, "I want you and my grandsons to know there is another Jewish grave here that only I know and remember. They were young brothers from Dukla. A few years ago, I remembered their names. They hid in the mountains till the first snowfall, when gendarmes tracked them down. The sled driver was an old Lemko whose name escapes me. He had to take the two under police escort out here and later recalled how the Jews pleaded for their lives. Try to plead with Hitler's police! They shot and buried them right here, and I am telling you their story so that people remember that human beings are buried under that bush."

'There is another Jewish grave here that only I know'

I was taken by the determination of the Lemko peasant who was fighting to preserve a memory of people of a different faith, whom he had never met.

Last fall, foraging boars dug out the wooden peg. Holuta drove an iron tube into the same spot and a grandson put a hazelnut branch into it. For remembrance.

A Year Later

"Those two Jewish kids who escaped the first massacre were later shot by policeman Solomka. Solomka was one Jew killer."

We relax in the sun on the porch of Vassil Holuta's house in Tylawa. Vassil is Jan's brother. He reminisces about the open season on Jews. He knows I've made a commitment about the nameless grave.

The Jew killer's identity proved easiest to establish. Solomka wasn't a German policeman. Hitler's provincial governor used Ukrainian collaborators to do the "wet" jobs. But Solomka, who murdered Jews wholesale and beat the lights out of Lemkos, was not even a Ukrainian, remembers Jan, and Vassil confirms this. He was short and swarthy; his real name was Szoma and he was a Gypsy, probably from Trans-Carpathian Ruthenia. After the war, Lemkos who had been expelled to Ukraine sighted him there, but he quickly disappeared.

There we are: Solomka-Szoma probably belonged to the other of the two peoples chosen for the gas ovens. Did he try to prove his loyalty and buy time by murdering others who were under the same death sentence?

Then Jan's wife Marysia remembered the name and the tale of the Lemko sled driver and days later, Teodor Gocz from Zyndranowa village remembered that one witness of the liquidation of the Dukla ghetto still lives in the town. I met Antoni Rysz, and from the pieces and splinters of collective memory, I finally cobbled together as full a story as I could hope to get.

Before World War II, Dukla was 70 percent Jewish. The Jarmosz family ran a hardware store in the market square. The house is still there. They had four sons and a daughter. The eldest son, Mendel, escaped before German armies overran Poland. He survived the war in the Soviet Union, where he worked in a munition factory. Antoni Rysz met Mendel in Dukla after the war: his hands were so lacerated that puss oozed between the fingers.

The other Jarmoszes were murdered by Hitler's mercenaries, but not all at once. Two younger sons – their first names escape even Rysz's long memory – managed to jump the police blockade during the 1942 roundup and they hid in the nearby village of Chyrowa. Either police caught up with them or someone betrayed them, says Rysz, because scoundrels can be found in every community.

The long-deceased Lemko, Fecio "Hladkikh" Turkowski, had his sled and horses commandeered by police. He took the two Jarmosz brothers, guarded by two policemen, to the execution site in the middle of a meadow that today, 55 years later, is the middle of a forest. When the sled turned off the main road the bolder of the Jarmosz brothers began invoking God to avenge their imminent death. Solomka-Szoma rammed the rifle barrel into his face and pulled the trigger. Then he shot the other Jarmosz right over the pit that had been dug. Hladkikh furtively dropped a few fir twigs into the grave so the two "wouldn't be dumped like dead dogs."

The stark and powerful images of Remembering the Holocaust by Aba Bayefsky help to focus the reader's thoughts on the place the author visited. Bayefsky's Holocaust work is currently on exibit it Ottawa.

The Memory of One

Today all that remains is an iron tube in the forest and the stubborn memory of Jan Holuta. For 55 years, the man has been ready and waiting, in case someone – anyone – might come to claim the bodies.

I doubt anyone will. Too late. The bodies will remain where they are. But why not put a tombstone there? As of today, we know the last name and the approximate circumstances of the victims' deaths.

Old Gocz looks at me with doubting eyes: "There will be a problem with that. Even using my local connections," he says, "getting such a stone carved and transported to the forest site will cost at least two million zlotys. That's big money."

The big money translates into about $60 (US) because old Gocz still does his sums in Communist-era zlotys. I see a larger problem.

The Problem

Obviously, the cost is not a problem. And the problem is not the new Polish community of Dukla. They take fairly good care of Jewish cemeteries in the area.

And the problem is not with the government or people of Poland. Things have changed. After decades of shameful neglect, the surviving Jewish graves and synagogues are now revered as part of the nation's multicultural heritage. Cases of vandalism are increasingly rare, and when they do happen, police step in with an ardor seldom seen before.

The problem is with the Jews. Almost none are left. There isn't a single Jew in Dukla. I doubt I could find 10 adult male Jews in the entire country of Krosno.

I can buy the stone. I can get my friend Vanio Holuta to haul out his old tractor and get the stone to the gravesite. And I can probably get the whole village out to watch the funeral rite from a respectful distance. But I cannot say Kaddish over the grave because I am not Jewish. And I cannot design an epitaph because I do not write or read Yiddish. I simply can't do it.

Are there any Dukla or Krosno Jews left anywhere in the world – Israel, America, Canada – to provide a minyan of 10, so that two kids who did nothing wrong, except being born in the wrong place at the wrong time, get a decent funeral at last? If there is anyone out there, please come forward. Please.

Recognizing Zionism's successes

By Gerald Steinberg in Jerusalem

For the past two months, Israelis have been watching a documentary called Tekumah (translated loosely as renaissance or rebuilding). This 12-part series is broadcast during prime time on Sunday evenings. Using archival material from dozens of sources, it presents the history of Israel from the 1930s to the present.

The interest generated by these shows demonstrates that far from being a spent force, Zionism is still a powerful bond. The majority of Israelis have no memories of the founding of the state, and for sabras under 30, the fear of destruction and the sudden elation of victory in the 1967 war are only stories heard from parents or grandparents.

To the hundreds of thousands of more recent immigrants, many of whom had only a tenuous link to the Jewish people, this history is even more distant. As a result, some academics and journalists had pronounced Zionism to be an outdated ideology, with little to offer new generations. Indeed, the 50th anniversary celebrations seem to be overshadowed by daily political and social conflicts.

The excitement generated by the screening of 50 years of history stands in sharp contrast to this bleak picture. The large audience for each episode and the discussion in the media and around dinner tables indicate that for the majority of Israelis, secular and religious, left and right, young and old, the rebirth of Jewish sovereignty in the Land of Israel is still a miracle. They see themselves not only as the beneficiaries, but also as part of this process, with the obligation of continuing what the previous generation began.

Not all the images are positive. Unlike earlier narratives which portrayed Israel as "a land without a people for a people without a land," the claims of the Palestinians and their perspectives are included. The cynical manipulation of the hundreds of thousands of immigrants that streamed into Israel after 1948 is acknowledged, as are the resulting tensions between the secular Ashkenazi establishment and the more traditional Sephardi immigrant communities. By admitting the mistakes and the different perspectives that characterize Israeli society, the producers of this series demonstrate that this society is mature enough to face its history without the need for myths.

Tekumah also deliberately underplays the drama and allows the video footage and extensive interviews to speak for themselves. In the early episodes, survivors of the attacks preceding and during the 1948 War of Independence retell their stories, while pictures from this period are mixed with images of the same places today. The narrow roads linking Jerusalem to the rest of the country, where Arab forces ambushed convoys and cut off Jerusalem, are contrasted with today's modern highways, streaming with cars, visually highlighting how much has been accomplished in the past half century.

The rebuilding was not limited to the physical survival of the state. As the population grew from less than 600,000 in 1948 to almost six million now, Israel is no longer a small mini-state hanging by a thread. The economy has been booming, particularly in the past decade, as the roles of the government and the Histadrut labor union have been reduced. While the economic structures of many other newly industrialized states have recently collapsed due to the absence of a firm foundation, Israel's high-tech based industries continue to grow. From this perspective, 50 years of statehood have been an overwhelming success.

The State of Israel has also provided the basis for the cultural, social and religious revival of the Jewish people. The Hebrew language is alive again, reopening the vast riches of Jewish literature and civilization culture to the majority of the Jewish people for the first time in 2,000 years. While many of the adult immigrants have to struggle, their children grow up speaking, reading and writing fluent Hebrew in the land and environment where this language was formed thousands of years ago.

In context of Jewish history, 50 years is a very short time and only the first stage in the revival of the Jewish people. Satisfaction in the accomplishments should not obscure the difficulties and the work that remains. However, as Tekumah has reminded us, by establishing and nurturing the State of Israel, the Jewish people, both in Israel and in the Diaspora, have participated in an historic and unprecedented process.

The enigmatic side of life in Israel

By Robert Sarner in Jerusalem

Like many Jerusalemites, I depend on buses to get around the city. No problem there – as long as my bus isn't targeted by Palestinian terrorists. The trouble begins when I have to go to some part of town that I've never travelled to before by bus.

For the life of me, I can't figure out why the local transit authority deems it unnecessary to post maps of its bus lines at bus stops. Even more puzzling is that the buses themselves give no hint of where they're heading. There's no writing on the outside of the vehicle – apart from a number – to indicate its route. Inside the bus, the mystery persists. No sign, no map, no itinerary, no nothing. Chalk it up to yet another bewildering aspect of life in the Promised Land.

Israel, of course, has no monopoly on such enigmas. But as an immigrant, you're especially prone to noticing such blind spots. For all my attempts at making sense of various idiosyncrasies in my adopted home, some things simply defy easy understanding. It's just the way it is. It was true during the 12 years I lived in France after growing up in Canada and it's been no less so in Israel.

Since moving here several years ago, I have discovered much about Israel. However, based on my continuing bewilderment at the following phenomena, I obviously still have a lot more to learn:

Israeli nature – If ever there was a place in need of protecting its environment, it's Israel. Yet strangely, in a country so tiny, so strapped for green space and natural resources, Israelis show a remarkable disregard for recycling or other ecological concerns.

Roads of sorrow – One person killed in a terrorist attack and the country is aghast. But the death of 530 people in traffic fatalities in 1997, many of them the fault of psychotic Israeli drivers, inexplicably fails to move the government to finally do something revolutionary – like deploy enough traffic police with instructions to actually enforce traffic laws.

Loose lips – Every second Israeli seems to have a cell phone permanently glued to his or her hand. Who are these people speaking to all the time and why do they think everybody around them is interested in hearing their high-priced, one-sided conversations?

Placing Bibi – What is Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's real stance on the peace process, and on many other issues for that matter? Beats me. Even after he has been in office for more than a year a half, no one seems to know for sure.

On track – For decades, everyone, including Knesset members of every political persuasion, has paid lip service to the need for a modern national train system. Despite all the talk, little has been done although the need has only grown. Have you ever tried taking the train between Jerusalem and Tel Aviv?

Sour notes – Eurovision, the annual song competition (including contestants from Israel) never fails to produce one of the kitschiest, most boring entertainment events of the year, and yet it always commands huge interest in Israel. Equally baffling is how did transsexual pop singer Dana International (yes, that's her name) get chosen to represent Israel at this year's Eurovision?

Brand loyalty? – For years, Pepsi refused to sell its products in Israel, in acquiescence to the Arab boycott. In 1992, Pepsi decided to market its products in Israel to compete with Coca-Cola, who never buckled under Arab pressure. Sure enough, since then many Israelis buy Pepsi instead of Coke.

Calling Perry Mason – Former interior minister and Shas party leader Rabbi Aryeh Deri has been on trial for fraud for more than 3 years during which 150 witnesses have testified – and the thing is not over yet, for reasons unbeknownst to mere mortals. One thing is clear: Being under indictment for a multitude of alleged infractions hasn't stopped Deri from becoming one of the country's most powerful politicians.

Can't be bothered – Articles in the Israeli media over the past year detailed the presence of hundreds of Nazi war criminals living undisturbed for decades in Canada. Nevertheless, last winter, in response to a request from the Wiesenthal Centre, Israel's justice minister couldn't be bothered to lodge an official complaint with Ottawa, saying the matter was of little priority.

Simple economics – Salaries in Israel are much lower than in Canada. Housing prices here are much, much higher than in Canada. Yet the percentage of homeowners in Israel is much higher than in Canada. Go figure.

What, I'm out of space already? Pity, as I was just getting started. The list of enigmas is far too long to cram into one column. I'll tackle more in a future installment.

Eight seconds for the news

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut in Toronto

The name of Walter Cronkite will still be familiar to most of my readers. For many years, he was the anchorperson on the CBS evening news and in his day, was the most widely watched newscaster. Cronkite had a kind of quiet, sincere, modest yet firm air about him, qualities that made his newscasts thoroughly believable and attracted a huge evening audience. He can still be heard and seen from time to time on some specials, though that familiar ending, "And that's the way it is" has long been gone. His book A Reporter's Life earned him wide acclaim and amongst his many trenchant observations, one stood out in my mind. It has to do with the way television nowadays covers the news.

Those of you who read this column – or for that matter, any newspaper at all – belong to a constantly decreasing minority of North Americans. The news and its interpretation are no longer the privileged possession of the print media; they have been displaced by TV and to a lesser degree, by radio.

That in itself would not be so worrisome, but what presents increasing problem is the power of the anchorperson and the brevity of sound bytes. Together, they make for a highly skewed presentation of "what really happened."

Most people are misled into believing that what they see and hear through the electronic media is a faithful presentation of actual events. That may be so, but then again it may not represent reality at all. Increasingly, says Cronkite, it is the anchorperson who wields enormous power in the selection of what is to be presented, and that very selection process unbalances the reportage. This unevenness is aggravated by the fact that the amount of time given to any particular undertaking — save the likes of Princess Diana's death — is decreasing at an alarming rate.

Thus, during presidential elections in the United States, the average uninterrupted speech by a candidate on network newscasts fell from 42.3 seconds in 1968 to 9.8 seconds 20 years later. When the networks promised improvements, the average sound byte had fallen to 8.4 seconds in 1992 and just 8.2 seconds in the 1996 election.

"Clearly," says Cronkite, "no meaningful explanation of issues is possible in that sort of oratorical burst, but the only importance of this to many politicians seems to be that issues can be avoided rather than confronted. The major problem is simply that TV news is an inadequate substitute for a good newspaper of magazine.

Print media do not have the restrictions of TV sound bytes. They can examine issues at some length; strangely enough, the Internet often provides for that kind of investigation too. To me, however, traditional newspapers are still irreplaceable and so are good magazines. We Jews have long prided ourselves as being "the people of the book" – an accolade bestowed upon us by the Prophet Mohammed. It meant that we were readers, but that too has diminished drastically. Perhaps we read more on average than other groups, but "more" may not be sufficient and, unfortunately, that applies also to the reading of our traditional sources.

Singer's public persona at odds with private life

By Sheldon Kirshner

Isaac Bashevis Singer (1904-1991), the illustrious Yiddish writer, was a study in contrasts. He was sophisticated yet naive, charismatic yet lonely. He believed in God but was alienated from the Orthodoxy of his religious upbringing.

That Singer's public persona was at odds with his private life is hardly surprising. Coming of age during an era of enormous turbulence and transformation in Poland, he witnessed the tension between tradition and modernity. The clash of cultures affected him profoundly and would pervade his novels.

But as Janet Hadda observes in her penetrating biography, Isaac Bashevis Singer (Oxford University Press), Singer was also shaped by the household in which he was raised. His parents, though brilliant, neglected him, and Singer turned to fiction for compensation and escape.

He published his first work, a short story, in 1925, and it established him as a comer in Warsaw's Jewish literary circles. But in 1935, he gave it all up to join his older brother, Israel Joshua, in New York City.

Clash of cultures affected him, pervaded his novels

He left behind not only a promising career but a son, Yisroel, whose memoirs were recently published under the title of Journey To My Father, Isaac Bashevis Singer (Little, Brown). This engaging book not only delves into their evolving relationship, but sheds additional light on Singer himself.

Hadda, a professor of Yiddish at the University of California, claims that Singer immigrated to the United States because he could not bear to live without Israel Joshua (1893-1944), a talented novelist in his own right (The Brothers Ashkenazi) and a member of the editorial staff of the Forverts.

Despite their sibling rivalry, Singer regarded Israel Joshua as his teacher and spiritual guide, observes Yisroel, who goes by the name of Israel Zamir. Israel Joshua arranged a job at the Forverts for his younger brother and introduced him to other writers at the Cafe Royal on the Lower East Side. But as Zamir suggests, Singer was not terribly happy in his initial years in America. He felt lost in this new, alien land and thought of committing suicide.

Nevertheless, Singer did not seriously ponder a return to Poland, and he literally went out of his way to remain in the United States. In order to obtain a permanent U.S. visa, following the expiration of his tourist visas, he smuggled himself into Canada by crossing a bridge at Windsor. He then proceeded by bus to Toronto, where he was granted the necessary documents by the American consul.

Shortly afterward, he met Alma Haimann Wasserman, a refugee like himself, and they remained together from the time of their marriage in 1940 until his death five decades later.

According to Hadda, they had little in common. She came from a completely assimilated home in Munich, Germany, and did not know a word of Yiddish. She sprang from a wealthy family far removed from the grinding poverty of Singer's formative years. But by all accounts, she was an educated and cultivated woman, and no less importantly, was the breadwinner for the first 25 years of their shared existence.

Oddly enough, one of the reasons for their durable relationship was Singer's philandering. He enjoyed the company of women, considered himself a bachelor at heart and bore a resemblance to one of his most remarkable fictional protagonists, Herman Broder in Enemies, A Love Story. "My father considered the bed as the continuation of conversation, but horizontally," writes Zamir, a journalist by profession.

Singer established long-term romantic liaisons with Dova Gruber, his secretary who often travelled abroad with him, and Dvora Menashe, a much younger woman who helped him type his stories and shopped for him when Alma fell ill in the 1980s.

He claimed that his affairs enriched his life and his creativity. Alma tolerated his sexual escapades as long as he was discreet, and forgave him on the ground that a great writer also has weaknesses.

In spite of his image as an avuncular figure, Singer basically did not care for children. His attitude influenced his feelings toward Zamir, his only child, who was raised on a kibbutz in Israel. In his thoughtful memoirs, Zamir dwells at length on this facet of Singer's personality.

He was five years old when Singer, having divorced his first wife, set sail for America. For a few years, Zamir heard nothing from Singer. And then Singer wrote occasionally.

In 1955, he and Zamir met again in New York City, and what had begun as a failed father-son relationship blossomed into a mature friendship. Still, Singer remained emotionally remote. "I don't recall hearing any words of affection from him," Zamir writes.

I. B. Singer

At the outset, they did not get on well. "I racked my brain trying to find out what we possibly had in common aside from blood," observes Zamir. "He was a capitalist and I was a socialist. He was a luftmensch living on air, and I was a fisherman who lived...by the sweat of my brow. He was a Yiddishist who wrote in a dead language, and I was an Israeli who spoke modern Hebrew. He was the embodiment of the Diaspora, and I rejected the Diaspora. He believed in demons, ghosts and all kinds of superstitions. I was a materialist, a rationalist."

Their differences went further. Zamir, having been nurtured on socialist realism, did not take easily to Singer's novels. He was, for example, embarrassed by the sex in Satan in Goray, but as he grew older he discovered all his father's books and learned to appreciate his genius.

Eventually, Zamir translated most of his novels and short stories into Hebrew, and through this process got to know him better, particularly as a writer.

Singer was a creature of habit. He would wake up at 7 a.m. and lie in bed, thinking about the story he was currently composing. When he rose two hours later, the story was thoroughly structured and woven.

After weighing himself and taking a bath, Singer had a hasty breakfast. Then, taking pen to paper, he wrote without stopping. He never reread what he had written, only polishing his prose when it had been translated into English.

Singer won the Nobel Prize for literature in 1978, and the award conferred upon him a kind of celebrity. As Zamir indicates, he was sincerely glad to emerge from anonymity, and the praise intoxicated him.

Yet fame had its disadvantages. The phone rang off the hook and Singer could not concentrate on writing. He requested an unlisted number and got one. Trailed by admiring onlookers, he gave up his daily walks along Broadway. "Like a movie star, he was no longer a private citizen, and that upset him."

By the late 1980s, Singer's health had deteriorated. A victim of Alzheimer disease, he had lost his ability to focus, and could not always recognize people. "He was just not there," Hadda quotes one of Singer's friends as saying.

A year before his death, Zamir visited him in Miami Beach. "What I saw shocked me," he recalls. "I saw an old man with a drooping face gaping at me with no expression."

If you are chilled by this description, consider Hadda's final impression of Singer: "On his lap is a sheet of paper; his fingers cradle a pencil. The old man's hand moves ceaselessly in a gesture of writing. But what takes shape is merely a scribble."

It's enough to break your heart.

The dialogues of nature

By RACHAEL TURKIENICZ

Tu b'Shvat is celebrated this month, and many people are struck by the unusual nature of the holiday. Judaism considers the 15th day of Shvat to be the New Year for the trees and one might question why people celebrate this occasion, why we are even aware of it.

Certainly, issues of the environment are important to Judaism, as even the first human beings, Adam and Eve, were placed in the Garden of Eden to tend it. But is there more to this holiday? Is there a lesson we can learn from nature that can help humanity?

Oftentimes people ask why God does not speak out today in the way that we hear God speaking in the Bible. Many answers are offered that address issues of finding God while in exile or seeing God through nature, and various other possible solutions. Interestingly, the midrash takes a more direct approach to the perceived silence, and the responsibility seems to lie with the listener and not the speaker.

In a discussion on trees and the lengths of their roots, the rabbis question how a tree whose roots go down only a short distance can be watered adequately while a tree whose roots go down a great distance is likewise watered adequately. In other words, if there is enough rain to water the deep roots, why is that not simultaneously too much rain for the shallow roots?

The answer lies in nature's behaving cooperatively. "The waters above call to the waters below, saying, 'Rise up and I will come down.' And the waters below reply, 'Come down and I will rise up,' ...and human beings in between the two do not hear their call."

The image is a powerful one. The rain from above is conversing with the waters deep in the earth and coordinating the irrigation of the planet. And while this tremendous conversation is taking place, all of humanity does not hear it.

Another midrash echoes the same idea when it states: "When a tree that bears fruit is cut down, its moan goes from one end of the world to the other, yet no sound is heard." We do not listen to the cries of the earth and nature when we inflict ourselves upon them.

The trees and the rain are concrete substances that we see and feel and take for granted. They have been created by God, as were we, and they surround us at all times. Perhaps we celebrate Tu b'Shvat to remind ourselves that we must broaden our dimensions.

With the ability to clone human beings lying just around the corner, it is easy to believe that we have mastered nature. And yet, we are still unable to hear the rains talking and the trees crying. It is not that they are silent; it is that we are deaf. Perhaps when we are able to expand our awareness to the world we live in we can begin to hear the dialogues of nature. Maybe then can we rightfully ask why we can't hear God's voice.

Diplomatically Speaking

By JEHUDI KINAR

A joyous return to the Netherlands

I grew up in the Netherlands, but I moved to Israel as a young man. When I began working in the Foreign Ministry, my area of expertise was international cooperation, particularly development assistance to African countries.

Not long after I began working at the ministry, I was asked to accept a posting abroad. I told them: "I've just come here on aliyah. I don't want to leave so soon!"

But in 1976, I accepted a posting to the Netherlands and lived there with my family until 1981. My son went to a Dutch kindergarten and my daughter was born there; so that country holds a special meaning for us. Although we felt very much at home there, we spoke only Hebrew to our children and we wanted them to understand that they were Israelis living abroad.

There were a few families in the neighborhood who were also Israelis, and it felt a bit like a kibbutz – all the Israelis were always together! We also sent the children to stay with relatives in Israel every summer.

I had gone to the only Jewish high school in Holland, been involved in many Jewish youth organizations and had always kept in touch with my Dutch friends. So when we arrived, I encountered a familiar world. Upon arriving at The Hague, I immediately told my counterparts at the Dutch Foreign Ministry that I spoke Dutch. Our shared language, along with the fact that we had had the same education, read the same literature and had the same historical frames of reference, made for smooth relations.

At that time, I was the counsellor for press and information at the embassy, and in this position, no matter which country you are in, it is crucial to have a mastery of the local language. On the downside, my fluency in Dutch meant that I was always "on call" to sort things out when, for example, a plumber arrived at the office.

My Israeli-born wife, Ruti, noticed quickly that in our social contacts with other couples, often one of the partners would not be able to speak English. She studied Dutch and quickly mastered the language. This did much to expand and intensify our social contacts.

On my part, I sometimes found it a bit difficult to convince my Dutch friends that I was not returning home to the Netherlands, but was there in my capacity as an official representative of the State of Israel. It took time for people to understand, for instance, that I could not get involved in discussions about the rabbinate or other Jewish community issues, because I was there to represent Israel and not the Jewish community.

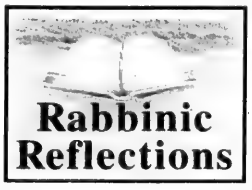
While at the embassy, I took a call from an elderly Dutch Jewish woman. She told me she wanted to make a large donation to Israel, but that somebody had to come visit her first. She asked me many personal questions, but only after establishing that she had known my family was she ready to meet me. I went to her home, where she retrieved a shoebox hidden in her garden shed.

Inside the box, I found about $50,000 worth of banknotes in small denominations. I spent several nervous hours counting and recounting the money before taking it to the bank.

The next time this woman called, I took my colleague David Sultan (now the Israeli ambassador in Ottawa) with me to her house so that I would not have to count banknotes alone. We were again presented with a shoebox full of money and a request to help her locate a Swiss bank account in which her husband (a shoemaker) had deposited shares.

The woman knew only the names of the shares and that the bank was in walking distance of one of the railway stations somewhere in Switzerland. Half the money, the woman told us, would be spent on buying an apartment in Israel and the other half would be given as a donation to Israel. I contacted my colleagues in Bern, and after three months of investigation, they were able to locate the bank.

Despite my initial reluctance to be posted outside of Israel, my experiences in the Netherlands changed my perspective on this issue. I found that I felt very proud of being able to return to the Netherlands, not just as an Israeli, but as an Israeli diplomat representing my country.



People often react differently to crises

By RABBI MICHAEL WOLFF

The Torah portion for this Shabbat, parshat Beshallach, talks about the miracle of the crossing of the Red Sea. The Torah points out in Exodus (14:10-14) that the people were frightened when they saw Pharaoh's army approaching. They yelled at Moses, asking him, "Was it for want of graves in Egypt that you brought us to die in the wilderness?" The reaction at this time of crisis was one of despair and anger at Moses for bringing them out of Egypt.

One of the major commentators, Nachmanides, asks how could it be that all of Israel turned on Moses in despair when they saw Pharaoh's army. Nachmanides answers that, as with all groups of people, the children of Israel were composed of sub-groups and it was a sub-group that despaired. Another group prayed for help. Still other groups had faith in G-d, trusted in Moses and were silent.

The lesson we can learn from this episode is that people react to a crisis in different ways. From a spiritual viewpoint, the reaction to crisis is based on the person's belief system and relationship with G-d – how much they believe and how they communicate. The reaction is also based on the individual's personality — whether they are controlling or not, assertive or passive. The ability to trust, the need to control, the degree of self-confidence, all affect a person's relationship with G-d.

Visiting hospitals

In my work as a chaplain, when I visit people in hospitals, I meet individuals in crisis. They face operations or severe illness. How we talk and what we talk about help the individual's spiritual coping mechanism to face the crisis. Putting someone in touch with their spiritual side is one way to fulfil the mitzvah of visiting the sick.

The parshah itself discusses three different crises that the people face: crossing the Red Sea, finding water to drink and food to eat, and finally, the battle with Amalek. In the first two instances, the Torah describes a group that is fearful and protests. When the children of Israel meet Amalek, the Torah does not mention any protest. Maybe b'nai Yisrael's fears have subsided. Maybe the people's faith has grown strong and they knew that G-d was present with them. In any case, b'nai Yisrael go out to battle and defeat Amalek.

I prefer the second theory, that b'nai Yisrael's faith was stronger and that this was why they did not fear Amalek. When people know that G-d is present, they relax, trust and have hope. They are not as fearful. They cope in a more effective way because they do not despair but have hope instead. They move forward to cross their own "Red Sea" and to defeat their nemesis "Amalek."

Rabbi Wolff is the head of Chaplaincy Services for FEDERATION CJA in Montreal.

Yiddish writers live on the net

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

Last week, we began our survey of the many Yiddish sites on the World Wide Web. Today, we continue with a look at the special reverence lovers of Yiddish have always had for the printed word.

First, of course, the three giants of Yiddish literature: Shalom Aleichem, I.L. Peretz and Mendele Mocher Sforim. Look for their biographies at Yiddishe Literature [http://staff.feldberg.brandeis.edu/~davidn/literat.htm]. And thanks to the Internet, you can even hear Shalom Aleichem himself read from Ven Ich Bin Rotshild (If I were Rothschild – a rich man), which he recorded late in his life [http://www.yv.org/sholem.ram].

If you want to hear some more familiar voices, head over to Jewish Short Stories from Eastern Europe and Beyond [http://www.kcrw.org/b/jss.html].

There are over 30 classic and contemporary short stories at this site read by some of the biggest names in Hollywood. Eli Wallach reads Gimpel the Fool by I.B. Singer. Lauren Bacall reads Isaiah Spiegel's A Ghetto Dog. I.L. Peretz's The Golem is read by Carol Kane. And who better to narrate Abraham Reisen's Matza for the Rich than the wonderful Fyvush Finkel? I highly recommend this site.

For immigrants to North America, Yiddish newspapers were both an anchor and an introduction to life in the new world. Perhaps the most famous newspaper was the Jewish Daily Forward started more than 100 years ago as a socialist Yiddish paper in New York [http://www.forward.com/history.html].

Its most popular feature was the advice column A Bintel Brief, in which people new to America found a journalist ready to explain the new land's strange customs [http://www.shamash.org/jb/bk971107/sbturns.htm]. One reader asked if it was safe to marry someone born with freckles. The reply: it was only dangerous to marry someone with rocks in their head.

Highlights from the English language edition of the Forward are posted on the Web, along with a history of the newspaper and excerpts from the archives [http://www.forward.com/]. (There are many other Yiddish publications available on news-stands nowadays; however, I am not aware of corresponding Web editions.)

One of the proudest moments for lovers of Jewish literature was the awarding of the 1978 Nobel Laureate in literature to Isaac Bashevis Singer "for his impassioned narrative art which, with roots in a Polish-Jewish cultural tradition, brings universal human conditions to life." You can find links to Singer's life and works at [http://nobelprizes.com/nobel/literature/1978a.html].

One other person who helped popularize Yiddish in America was Leo Rosten. In 1937, Rosten wrote *The Education of H*Y*M*A*N K*A*P*L*A*N* and 30 years later published The Joys of Yiddish. With it, he helped bring such words as chutzpah, schlemiel and kibbitz into the English language. After Rosten's death last year, Newsweek published an article titled The Nus of the Weak [http://www.nd.edu/~astrouni/zhiwriter/97/97022504.htm]. You can also listen to a five-minute interview about Rosten on National Public Radio with lexicographer Sol Steinmetz [http://huntleyl.prognet.com/contentp/npr/nc7f20.html].

What about the next generation of writers? There are several places on the Internet where you can read excerpts of more recent books [http://www.columbia.edu/cu/cria/Current-projects/Yiddish/list.html], [http://sunsite.unc.edu/yiddish/books.html] and poetry [http://www.cs.engr.uky.edu/~raphael/yiddish.html].

But a special place surely must be reserved for Leybl Botwinik [http://www.actcom.co.il/~ny/SF6.HTM]. The Montreal native and recent immigrant to Israel writes Yiddish science fiction. "Can you imagine a Godzilla-like creature speaking Yiddish? It's all in my novella Kamf Nign." Botwinik goes on: "Why write science fiction in Yiddish? Because this way, my characters prove that Yiddish will be spoken into the far future."

Hunt for war criminals not ethnic issue: Sher

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — America's onetime chief "Nazi hunter" took aim at his Canadian critics last week, saying they did their communities no favors by turning the hunt for war criminals into an ethnic issue.

Neal Sher said "ethnic East European communities have been quite vociferous in attacking me," in what he feels is a bid to derail prosecutions of alleged war criminals.

"It does not do a service to their own communities and leaders to circle the wagons. There are bad apples in all communities," he said.

"A community is not put on trial, an individual is," said Sher, who headed the U.S. Office of Special Investigations (OSI) from 1983-94.

Sher was speaking at the opening lecture in the "Super Wednesdays" series at the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue. The series is sponsored by Canadian Friends of Boys Town Jerusalem and the Canadian Society for Yad Vashem.

In a wide-ranging survey of issues connected with Nazi war criminals, Sher said ethnic communities should realize that investigators must follow the trail of evidence wherever it leads. To illustrate the point, Sher said that as head of the OSI he authorized a case against a Jew who lived in Brighton Beach, N.Y. Although it was a difficult decision, Sher said he authorized the prosecution because of the ruthless way that man served as a kapo (a senior prisoner with authority over other prisoners).

"Even though he started out as a victim, he ended up killing Jews" in a very brutal manner, even without the instigation of the Germans, he said. But by bringing a case against a kapo, you can't argue that it tarnished all other Jews or other kapos, Sher said.

Neal Sher

Turning to the argument that modern day prosecutors can only get "the small fry" and so their efforts are unwarranted, Sher said for victims of the Holocaust like Monica Singer, their killers were not small fry.

Singer was a 4-year-old girl who was grabbed by Bogdan Kozy, a member of a police unit in the Ukraine that collaborated with Germany.

At Kozy's war crimes case in the United States, the judge found that despite the little girl's pleas for her life, Kozy held her by the neck, held a pistol to her head and blew her brains out. He and his police unit then went on to kill the rest of her family..

"Can anyone in good conscience claim that Bogdan Kozy was a small fry?" Sher asked.

Sher, who was retained as a consultant to the Canadian Justice Department's war crimes unit in December, said the cases in Canada and the United States target those who served as concentration camp guards or members of auxiliary police units that collaborated in the roundup and murder of Jews.

He said allowing these men to retain their citizenship "cheapens" the citizenship of everyone else.

Sher said he believes Canada's effort at bringing war criminals to justice is sincere.

"I wouldn't have signed on if I didn't think your government now is taking this seriously," he said.

During his tenure at the OSI, Sher is credited with taking a number of groundbreaking steps: taking the first witness depositions in the Soviet Union; successfully prosecuting the unit's first cases and setting legal and procedural precedents; effectuating the removal of dozens of war criminals; leading the U.S.-German-Israeli effort to trace the fate of Josef Mengele, the "angel of death" from Auschwitz who drowned in 1979 in Brazil; placing former UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim on the U.S. watchlist of persons ineligible to enter the United States.

Also during his tenure as OSI chief, John Demjanjuk was extradited to Israel. Demjanjuk was alleged to be the sadistic Treblinka guard "Ivan the Terrible," but the Israeli Supreme Court overturned a lower court conviction against Demjanjuk and he was returned to the United States. Subsequently, a U.S. court criticized the OSI for withholding evidence from the defence that might have exculpated Demjanjuk.

Branson Place opens for dementia patients

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A day care centre for patients with Alzheimer disease and other forms of dementia was scheduled to open at Branson Hospital Feb. 2.

Subsidized by the Ontario Ministry of Health, the centre, named Branson Place, is a partnership between Branson Hospital and Downsview Services to Seniors Inc.

It is located in the Branson Staff Centre behind the hospital and has its own parking lot.

The service will cost $25 a day, over and above the government funding, and will cover the cost of supplies, according to coordinator Elisa Curcio-Mazza.

The $25 charge will apply whether the client stays a whole day, half a day or a few hours. The centre, which will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., will provide a warm lunch, as well as dinner for those staying the whole day.

"The centre will be particularly useful for caregivers who must work a full day," said Curcio-Mazza.

She said it will meet an urgent need in the Branson community, where it is estimated that some 50,000 seniors live.

The centre will be able to handle up to 15 patients a day in the home-like atmosphere. A registered nurse will be on hand to give any medications required.

Incontinent people are being accepted at the centre, Curcio-Mazza said.

The average age for people expected at the centre is 75, while previous experience suggests that there will be an equal number of women and men.

"The cost is much lower than $1,000 a month, or $12 an hour, which some people are paying for day care," said Curcio-Mazza.

Downsview Services for Seniors is a non-profit agency founded in 1974. It serves 500 people a month and offers services including the Bruce Plaza Day Centre for stroke survivors and a Day Centre Diners Club at Rodway Park Place.

For more information call coordinators Curcio-Mazza or Jennifer D'Amico at 416-633-1771, or Deana Lunn at Branson Hospital 416-635-2525.

Professor upbeat over Polish/Jewish relations

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The most anti-Semitic Poles today are those born between 1930 and 1942, whose only experience with Jews was during the Holocaust, a meeting of the Polish-Jewish Heritage Foundation was told recently.

Prof. Michael Steinlauf, senior research associate at the YIVO Institute in New York described this as a "seeming paradox."

What makes the situation even more incongruous, he told a well-attended meeting at the Holy Blossom Temple, is that stories by the Yiddish author Isaac Bashevis Singer are popular in Poland today and 20 volumes of them have been published between 1990 and 1995.

His recent work in Poland leads him to "speculate optimistically" about relations between Jews and Poles, Steinlauf said. "It will be harder and harder for anti-Semites to be taken seriously. I'm excited about the number of Poles who want to study Jewish history."

Author of Bondage to the Dead: Poland and the Memory of the Holocaust, the researcher said the relationship between Poles and the Holocaust was a complicated one, but in his view, Poles "were neither perpetrators or victims, but witnesses.

"Poles watched the ghetto walls go up, saw them burn, smelled the winds of the crematoriums, so it was not difficult for them to realize that many Jews would be killed."

The work of psychoanalyst and historian Dr. Robert J. Lipton is useful in understanding the mass trauma and guilt feelings of the Polish people, he said.

Bondage to the Dead is a tremendously important work and is now on the curriculum at the University of Toronto, said Frank Bialystock, the meeting chair.

While describing it as "an excellent book which is the first one my students must read," Peter Wrobel, professor of Polish History at the University of Toronto, said he did not agree with some of Steinlauf's interpretations of events during the Communist regime in East Germany.

'Poisoned atmosphere'

He questioned whether the experience of the Polish people during the Holocaust was unique, citing the Nazi occupation of France.

But Steinlauf said most French people did not know about the eventual fate of the Jews.

"There was a disjunction in the Polish mind. One part of the brain could not accept what another part of the brain said was happening."

An audience member who lived in Poland in the '30s said there was a "poisoned atmosphere" at the university he attended and Jewish students were forced to sit on the left side of the classroom.

Jan. 17 was declared the first Day of Judaism in Poland by the head of the Polish episcopate committee for interfaith dialogue. This was evidence of progress in Polish-Jewish relationships, said Rev. Jan Kolodynski, Our Lady of Victory Church, in the former borough of York.

The Pope's visit to a Rome synagogue, the first ever, shows the Vatican is interested in Jewish people, he said.

Job search program assists immigrants

By FRANCES KRAFT

Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Before emigrating from Grodno, Belarus, in 1994, Arkadi Belianski worked for over 30 years as a senior project engineer in the refrigeration industry. Through contacts in the Russian Jewish community here, he was able to obtain temporary positions as a machine operator and as a shomer at a Jewish funeral home.

To help him in his ongoing job search, Belianski attended the Assisted Job Search Program, a free pilot program initiated last year by Human Resources Development Canada in cooperation with the North York Board of Education at the Snowcrest Resource Centre.

The program, which operates at two locations in the Toronto area, helps job seekers with limited English by teaching job search skills and giving them access to a resource centre with fax machines, computers and phones. Similar centres are located across the country. Participants in the Toronto program have to have received employment insurance benefits in the past three years.

"We teach them how to look for work," said Susanne Gauer, a program facilitator with a background as an English as a Second Language teacher. Participants meet daily for four weeks in groups of 10 to 12 people, learning from and supporting each other.

"Once a person comes here, often they've exhausted their network," she said.

Belianski received help in simplifying his resume, which was "too technical," said Gauer.

He hasn't yet found work, but it's not for lack of trying. He's even appeared as a movie extra once.

Although his English is halting, Belianski speaks with precision and uses audiocassettes twice a day to improve his language skills. He is older than most job seekers, he points out, and his English isn't conducive to phone work.

But, now that he has learned what Canadian employers value, he is quick to note his assets: "I'm dynamic. I'm flexible. I quickly understand problems. I don't need supervision for a long time."

Although he doesn't have Canadian certification as an engineer, he feels his ability to understand blueprints is also an asset.

And being realistic, he mentions that he has a car and is willing to work as a driver.

Sixty percent of program graduates have found work, according to Gauer. "A variety of tradespeople have found work in their trades. A number have worked for years and years and because of the economy, they've been downsized. If they've worked before in [a particular] area, I would say they pretty much all find work in the same area."

"We try to promote the idea that you get a lot of 'nos.' All you need is one 'yes'," said Brian Epstein, also a program facilitator.

Epstein, who has met with representatives of Jewish Vocational Services, noted that JVS and the Assisted Job Search Program are considered community agency partners and refer clients to one another.

For information about the program, call 416-395-9451.

Farber new executive director of CJC region

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — For Bernie Farber, newly named executive director of the Ontario region of Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC), the case of Rev. Paul Melnichuk shows why CJC succeeds in defending the rights of Jewish people.

Through his producer and son Tom, Rev. Melnichuk, the pastor of Prayer Palace, apologized for what the CJC called an offensive sermon, which Rev. Melnichuk delivered Oct. 26, 1997, on ONtv (Channel 11, Hamilton).

"Jews know it is our address that they complain to," Farber said. "Our staff is limited and we would not have known about that sermon if members of our community had not informed us. We followed up with good results."

He says that CJC is "the parliament of Canadian Jewry" and that every Jew can play a role in its decisions. He wears this tradition as a badge of honor.

The 6-foot native of Ottawa is excited about his new job, even though he knows it has its risks.

He was targeted as number 1 on the hit list of the white supremacy Heritage Front in 1994 and "life was tense for awhile."

However, he is reluctant to dwell on death threats or hate mail, as he feels that all Jewish communal professionals know the risks they face.

"Besides, I would rather look ahead than look back," he said.

And he is looking forward to having Congress continue to be "pro-active instead of reactive" in defending Jewish rights.

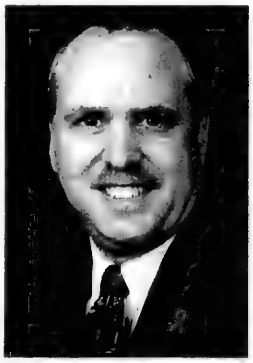
In this respect, he is glad to have as his colleague, region chair Moshe Ronen, also a child of Holocaust survivors.

In fact, said Farber, there has been a progressive change in CJC leadership in step with a changing society.

The time is past, he said, when Congress leaders walked softly or behind the scenes to repair grievances. "We're not afraid to speak our minds. Congress wants to be up front on issues, not beside them."

As an example, he cites the way university students got Congress' support when they revealed that examinations were being scheduled on High Holy Days.

"They were particularly upset



Bernie Farber

because the authorities were imposing a type of religious means test on them to see if they qualify. Ten years ago, these students would not have spoken up as they do now."

Farber knows that much work lies ahead, that protecting civil rights for Jews is an ongoing process. For example, he said, Jews in North America are the only religious group that requires police protection as they pray in synagogues on High Holy Days.

He is keenly looking forward to the next CJC plenary session in Winnipeg in May.

As a staffer with Congress since 1984, Farber, 46, will carry on with his duties as national director of community relations for CJC until a replacement is found.

"I'm used to juggling responsibilities, it's part of the job," he said.

The one place Farber can relax is in his home to which he wisely does not take his work. "My family is my grounding; without my wife, Karyn, and our three children, I couldn't carry on."

Women's Campaign winds up

TORONTO — There was much to sing about as UJA Federation's Women's Campaign officially closed the fundraising season with music, mingling and a marvelous grand total.

The campaign members recently gathered at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue to thank volunteers for raising close to $4 million. UJA Federation's 1998 campaign will end with $36.5 million — one of the organization's highest fundraising achievements.

Yiddish balladeer Janie Respitz entertained the crowd as the women recounted the highlights of the past year.

"A visit to Toronto by three heroines of aliyah was definitely a day to remember," said outgoing campaign chair Agi Mandel. The three women appeared at an engagement hosted by the Women's Campaign, where each described her personal story about their move from an unhappy homeland to Israel. "It really epitomized the strength of Jewish women," said Mandel.

Mandel also credits the Mentoring team, an initiative designed to partner new volunteers with those who have more experience, Super Sunday, and the overall "commitment of women who come back year after year," as key components of this year's success. Nearly 250 volunteers participated in the campaign.

Meals on Wheels expands

By BEN ROSE
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Senior Care's Kosher Meals on Wheels has expanded into Thornhill, Richmond Hill and parts of Markham Township, with an initial delivery of 15 meals a day.

"We think the number of meals will increase when the service is better known," said Arnold Foss, volunteer coordinator. "There has been an increase in the number of older seniors in the area."

Meals are delivered to older adults and persons with disabilities who cannot manage to prepare meals on their own.

"Since some of our volunteers live in the southern part of York Region, it is an easier run for them," Foss said.

Meals are prepared under the supervision of the Kashruth Council of Toronto. Menus are developed under the direction of registered dieticians. Meals are available seven days a week, as frozen entrees and soups are available for weekend and holiday use.

Hillel Hub hits the stands in Montreal area

By DAVID LAZARUS
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The latest hubbub at Hillel is all about the Hillel Hub, a new, student-run publication being distributed at all Hillel-connected campuses in the Montreal region.

The first, eight-page issue – the Hub will come out every five to six weeks – appeared recently and was brimming with the type of idealism that comes with the launch of a new paper.

And while the Hub may have a way to go before reaching the journalistic heights of the Centre Hillel's French-language publication, Bleu-Blanc, there's no lack of enthusiasm among the the Hub's co-editors.

Hillel has not had a regular publication since the Hillel Star disappeared about a decade ago and it's about time, they said.

"When I was registering at McGill Hillel, I asked if there was a publication," recalled Erica Horn, 19, one of the Hub's three co-editors along with Jeremy Kobulnik and Marvin Liebman.

The reply Horn, a humanistic studies major, got was no. So she contacted pals Kobulnik, a 19-year-old macrobiology major at McGill, and Liebman, a science student at Marianopolis CEGEP and president of its Hillel branch.

They in turn consulted with Hillel CEGEP director Sharon Tansky and overall Hillel director Steven Spodek, and the Hub was born.

"Sharon thought it had huge potential," Kobulnik said.

With the help of desktop publishing and a relatively modest, $750 (US) grant from the Washington, D.C.-based Hillel Foundation for Jewish Life's student initiatives committee – enough to cover the costs of the Hub's first couple of issues – the finished product is remarkably polished and clean-looking, right down to the Hillel campus symbol graphics, which, Liebman said, the group struggled to reproduce perfectly with their computer scanner.

The inside mix of the Hillel Hub is eclectic. It includes, among other things, a tribute to Yitzhak Rabin, the reminiscences of a student who volunteered in Israel for Magen David Adom, thoughts on the possibility of a "Jewish renaissance" through Hillel, and opinion pieces on the future FEDERATION CJA Jewish community campus and Yiddish in the 21st century.

There is also a page called Campus Corner, devoted to events on individual Hillel campuses.

"The first issue is a little broad," Horn says, "but we want articles on things students are involved in."

Kobulnik, in his first article cum mission statement, says the Hub will be "unique in its Jewish perspective" and "relevant to Montreal Jewish students," providing a literary, ideological and social voice for them.

All three came up with the name Hillel Hub, with a little help from a dictionary.

"The paper is the 'hub,' while you the readers and potential writers are the spokes emanating from and converging at the centre of the wheel," Kobulnik wrote.

Topics will, naturally, be mostly Jewish in nature, but not necessarily so, and articles in French are scheduled to be included in the future. Future consideration also will be given to producing editorials, but the main plan for the time being is to be informative, eye-catching, "positive," and, above all, "participatory" for Jewish students, the group said.

To that end, the Hillel Hub is soliciting articles through e-mail.

In terms of future funding, the Hub plans to pay for itself through advertisements. Spodek said financing could also come from a special fund set aside for a Hillel publication, after the death many years ago of Hillel director Herb Weinstein.

Meanwhile, there's a whole lot of layout and editing work to be done.

"We're all perfectionists," Horn said.

Articles for the Hillel Hub can be sent to the editors via e-mail [info@hillel.montreal.qc.ca].

Peace plans now in place, says prof.

By MOURA WOLPERT
Correspondent

HAMILTON — According to a Carleton University political science professor, plans for a Middle East peace are already in place.

"If only we can get the leadership with the necessary political will to implement the plans," there would be peace, said Prof. John Sigler at a recent meeting of the Hamilton branch of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs (CIIA) at the McMaster University Faculty Club.

Speaking on The Continuing Search for Peace in the Middle East to an audience of about 100 – mostly CIIA and faculty members, Arab and other students and a few members of the Jewish community – Sigler said, "The work has all been done. The researchers have all the answers. It just never gets reported.

"It's all been worked out, particularly Jerusalem. There is this fiction that [Jerusalem] is an unsolvable question. I assure you," he declared, "that the amount of work done on both the Palestinian side and the Israeli side is enormous. [It is] the most successful of all the issues."

These things are not intractable, said Sigler, a former U.S. Air Force commander, Pentagon official, author and advisor on Middle East policies to various government and non-government agencies.

"They are intractable only at the political and leadership level, in the ability to put together a coalition that can act with the political will and commitment to solve [the problem.]"

There is "enormous consensus" on the part of those who are at the working level of the peace process that these things can be resolved "if they can only get the leadership on both sides to implement them," Sigler told the audience.

Ottawa's Holzman active after leaving politics

By DIANE KOVEN
Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA — Three-term mayor Jacquelin Holzman decided not to seek another term in the recent municipal elections.

As the capital city's first female Jewish mayor (Lorry Greenberg was the first Jewish mayor), Holzman brought many innovations to the office and saw her share of controversy. Born and raised in Ottawa, she has always had a love of and commitment to the city and a strong desire to let the rest of the world know how great her hometown is.

Prior to her entry into the political world in 1982 as a city councillor, Holzman worked in the health and social services sectors, both professionally and as a volunteer. She has fond memories of her parents' involvement in community affairs, recalling her late mother's tireless work for the Hadassah bazaars and her late father's dedication as one of the early members of the Jewish Men's Softball League. Both her sons and one of her daughters now play in the same league.

In the 1950's, as president of the Ottawa chapter of National Council of Jewish Women, Holzman was instrumental in organizing the Golden Age Club and other services for seniors. She was involved in establishing the Jewish Family Services at a time when "people were astonished to find there was a need for such an agency."

While on the city's Social Planning Council, she helped establish the Tamir home for Jewish adults with developmental disabilities. She chaired the building committee for Temple Israel (the Reform synagogue) and is proud that her sons Bill and Mark have both become involved and taken leadership roles as well.

"It is important for people to give back to the community and our family has seen that as well," says Holzman.

As mayor, Holzman showed her dedication to the Jewish community and to Israel at every opportunity. She worked with the Jewish Community Centre to institute an annual flag-raising ceremony at City Hall on Israel's Independence Day.

"I don't think there are many cities in the world that fly the flags of other countries on their national days," says Holzman, "but it is a wonderful tradition."

In 1994, Holzman met with Teddy Kolleck in Jerusalem when the Jerusalem City Hall was being opened. (She notes the irony that Jerusalem's City Hall was constructed by an Ottawa firm and designed by a Canadian architect while the Ottawa City Hall was designed by Israeli architect Moshe Safdie.)

A strong and vocal promoter of one-tier government, Holzman remarked following the recent ice-storm disaster, "It was evident that we did not need 12 local governments and 84 local politicians to deal with it. We needed a good plan to come into play."

Holzman takes pride in the changes in Ottawa during her six years in office, particularly its transformation from a quiet government town to a major centre for business and high-tech.

Reflecting on her days in office, Holzman recalls that "every day there was something new. I reached people from around the world and I represented this city in many places around the world. You don't realize what a capital city we have until you have visited other capitals. Ottawa is clean, it's green and it's safe."

Jacquelin Holzman

Immediately following the Dec. 1 end of her term in office, she left for a conference in Japan. Returning on Jan. 15, she found herself in the midst of the big ice storm crisis and pitched in to help.

She plans to remain active on a number of boards and committees, including serving as co-chair of the 75th anniversary fundraising campaign for the Boys and Girls Club, which hopes to raise $2 million for their camp and clubhouses.

This will, of course, all be undertaken in her "spare" time, as Holzman has recently been appointed chair of the Ottawa Congress Centre. She plans to approach this commitment with the same enthusiasm and dedication she brings to every task, large or small.

Oh, yes. She says she plans to spend her new "leisure" time with her husband, John Rutherford, her four children and four grandchildren.

'Outsiders' receive leadership awards

By MYRON LOVE
Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — For this year's Young Leadership Awards, the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council has chosen two people who are both "outsiders" in a certain sense.

Glenna Kay, the Max Nathanson Young Leadership Award winner, grew up in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. The Harry Silverberg Leadership Development Award recipient, Michael Lazar, says he is surprised at being selected because, he notes, as a long time member of the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council, he has usually tended to support the minority position on controversial community issues.

"It speaks well of the council that a diversity of views is welcomed and validated," he says.

A lifelong Winnipegger, Lazar, who is a lawyer, has already had a distinguished career in Jewish community work. He has chaired the Israel Bonds Young Leadership Division, the B'nai Brith League for Human Rights in Winnipeg and has been a member of the National Executive of Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC).

Currently, he is chair of the CJC local resolutions committee and a member of the WJCC executive. He also participated in the B'nai Brith Baseball League and the Jewish Floor Hockey League.

Glenna Kay moved to Winnipeg after finishing university in Halifax.

"I had some close cousins here," she says. "This is a nice sized community. I felt that Toronto and Montreal were too large for me."

Kay has made her mark in the community through her involvement in the National Council of Jewish Women, where she is currently co-president of the Winnipeg Section. She is a regular Super Sunday volunteer and has been a canvasser for the CJA.

"I am proud to be part of this community," she says. "It is nice to be recognized for the work you do. I am proud of what I have accomplished and hope to accomplish much more."

The awards will be presented at the Annual WJCC Koved evening in June.

Rabbi Heschel, King remembered at ceremony

By SUZANNE KORB
Special to The CJN

VICTORIA — The recent Walk for Justice and Nonviolence here marked the 25th yahrzeit of Rabbi Abraham Joshua Heschel and the birthday of the late Martin Luther King Junior.

More than 500 people stopped traffic across two busy downtown streets as they walked from Victoria City Hall to nearby Congregation Emanu-El Synagogue. The crowd then packed the heritage synagogue and overflowed into the portable next door.

A photograph of Rabbi Heschel and King together at an American civil rights march in the 1960s stood on the bimah at the front of the synagogue. Beside the photo sat two yahrzeit candles that children from Victoria's black and Jewish communities lit while many present sang Oseh Shalom (Let There Be Peace).

The program, often punctuated by peace songs in English and Hebrew, began with a tape of King's I Have a Dream speech, originally delivered to 250,000 people in Washington D.C. in 1963. In the first few lines of his impassioned speech, the celebrated Nobel laureate longed for the day his children would be judged by the content of their character and not by the color of their skin.

King was born in Alabama on Jan. 15, 1929, to a family of Baptist ministers and civil rights leaders, and was assassinated in Tennessee April 4, 1968. He consistently met violent opposition to his stand against racist laws with nonviolent protest.

Rabbi Heschel was born in Poland on Jan. 11, 1907, to a family of chassidic rabbis and died in his sleep in New York City on Dec. 23, 1972 (18 Tevet 5733). He referred to himself as "a brand plucked from the fires of the Holocaust."

Rabbi Heschel taught and wrote on Jewish ethics and mysticism. His scholarly works inspired his social action, from civil rights to protests against the Vietnam war. Of his experience marching with King at Selma, Alabama, Rabbi Heschel once said, "I felt my legs were praying."

During the Victoria celebration, secondary students from Maxwell International Baha'i School at Shawnigan Lake performed spirited dances. One showed the tragic results that occur when parents teach racist values to their children. The other celebrated the human family with dances from the Mideast, Asia, Africa, Latin America and First Nations.

The students choreographed the dances from their homelands themselves or learned them from visitors to Canada. The overall effect was poignant, especially at the end when they danced together in a tiny area in front of the bimah.

"We were just looking at our future," said Jesse Dillard, one of the event's organizers. "We must treat [others] better."

Dillard, who is of African heritage, said area schools showed a strong interest in the celebration. He felt the recent murder of Victoria high school student, Reena Virk, by other teenagers helped motivate schools to attend.

"People are hurting and want to do something positive," Dillard said. At least six local schools were represented at the event, along with the Jewish Socialist Youth Group (Habonim Dror), Island Catholic Youth and the International Summit for Sexually Exploited Youth.

The 12-member King/Heschel Remembrance Committee, initiated by Rabbi Victor Reinstein who initiated Victoria's nonviolence walk, began organizing the celebration in December. The B.C. Black History Awareness Society, Congregation Emanu-El Synagogue and the Social Responsibility Committee of the Unitarian Church of Victoria supported the event. About 40 other local groups participated.

"One thing that touched me very much is that there was such broad representation from the Jewish community all walking together – the shul, Habonim, Federation, the JCC, secular humanists – it was amazing," said Rabbi Reinstein.

Retired professor wins Wolf Prize

By MYRON LOVE
Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The Israel-based Wolf Foundation has awarded a retired University of Manitoba plant science professor the 1998 Wolf Prize in agriculture.

Baldur Stefansson will be sharing the $100,000 (US) prize with Ilan Chet, a professor at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and a pioneer in bio-control.

"I am amazed to be chosen for this prestigious award," says the 80-year-old Stefansson who is known as the "father of canola."

Stefansson and his colleagues were successful in genetically altering rapeseed, not only to make it more suited to growth in cooler temperature zones, but also to improve the quality of the edible oilseed.

He and his co-workers introduced their altered rapeseed commercially in 1974. Within five or six years, it took a firm hold. Today, the renamed canola is one of the most important cash crops in Canada, with four million acres seeded yearly.

Stefansson is the second Canadian to receive the award in agriculture. Dr. Morris Schnitzer, an Ottawa researcher, was the 1996 winner. Stefansson is hoping to be able to go to Jerusalem for the May 10 award presentations.

The Wolf Foundation was established in 1975 by Ricardo Wolf, a German-born diplomat and philanthropist who was Cuba's ambassador to Israel. He died in Israel in 1981. The Wolf Prizes are given annually for outstanding achievement in medicine, physics, chemistry, agriculture, mathematics and the arts.

Exhibit captures Kashetsky's view of Holocaust

By JOEL JACOBSON
Atlantic Correspondent

HALIFAX — The paintings on the wall of the Dalhousie University Art Gallery are stark reminders of an era many people wish to forget, but one which Saint John, N.B. artist Herzl Kashetsky has captured on canvas for the world to see.

The exhibition, A Prayer for the Dead, is a series of paintings and drawings of the Holocaust, representing almost 20 years of Kashetsky's attempt to come to terms with the events and meaning of the Holocaust.

The collection was curated for the Beaverbrook Art Gallery in Fredericton, N.B. by Tom Smart, and is being circulated through the Maritime region by the New Brunswick Museum. It has been displayed at the Beaverbrook Gallery and the New Brunswick Museum, is in Halifax until February 22 and will then visit the McCain Gallery in Florenceville, N.B.

"This has been with me for a long time," Kashetsky said prior to the official Halifax opening which received support from the Atlantic Jewish Council. "As a child of about seven, I had a neighbor with a numbered tattoo and I asked my mother what it meant. She told me, and I wanted to know more. At university in Montreal, I met a friend whose parents were survivors and my interest continued.

The monochromatic paintings were originally done in graphite. They were followed by a larger format drawing in prismacolor on grey paper, which in turn became the study for the finished painting. All are based on archival photos and some personal photos he took in Poland.

The collection includes depictions of people boarding a train and later arriving at Auschwitz, stacks of bodies in a mass grave at Bergen Belsen, crematorium doors and chimneys, three survivors at Dachau in 1945, and a recent painting of an Auschwitz survivor.

Susan Gibson-Garvey, curator of the Dalhousie Gallery, said she saw some of Kashetsky's work a year ago and "wanted to have the whole show, not just a few samples. The picture of the bodies struck me not as a piece from this century, but from the mediaeval or Renaissance period as an illustration of hell. I thought Herzl tackled this with power and strength and I wanted to have it here."

Survivor Philip Riteman of Halifax saw the exhibition but said, his voice breaking, "I don't like to look at this because I've seen it in real life."

Kashetsky called his work, "a visual prayer, a remembrance memorial, an elegy to souls lost in the Holocaust."

Nominations being accepted for CJC executive positions

WINNIPEG — Nominations are now being accepted for the six elected national officers' positions at Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC), nominations committee chairman Prof. Irving Abella has announced.

Those positions open for nominations are president, chair of the national executive, associate chair of the national executive, treasurer, secretary and honorary counsel. Deadline for receipt of submissions is 5 p.m. March 26 at the national office in Montreal. Elections will be held May 24 and 25 at the National Plenary Assembly of CJC at Winnipeg's Lombard Hotel.

The plenary is the highest decision-making body within CJC. Held every three years, it is expected to attract several hundred delegates from across the country. Registration commences through CJC regions in February.

Nominations must be submitted in accordance with the CJC supplied forms to the national office in Montreal, Attention Nominations Committee, 1590 Avenue Docteur Penfield, H3G 1C5. They will not be accepted at regional offices. Fax transmissions are however acceptable at 514-931-0548. Forms received by mail will be accepted by the time of arrival and not by the postmark date.

A nomination must conform to the following points: be in writing; be signed by five members of CJC; set forth the name and address of the nominee and the office for which such nominee is nominated; contain the signed acceptance of the nomination of the nominee; contain in not more than 100 words the curriculum vitae of the nominee; be accompanied by a certificate from the appropriate body of the local campaign where the nominee resides as to the eligibility of the nominee, meaning he or she is in "good standing" with the local campaign. Nomination forms are available at CJC offices and affiliates across the country.

As set out in CJC By-law Number 66, the six positions are described as follows:

The president shall preside at all meetings of the national council and the national executive. In the absence of the president, or at the request of the president, the chair of the national executive shall so preside. In the absence of the chair of the national executive, the associate chair shall preside. All three shall perform such other duties as may be assigned to them by the national executive.

The treasurer shall be responsible for the administration of the funds and the property of CJC and through the comptroller shall keep a complete and accurate account of its receipts and expenditures and shall keep books for that purpose.

The secretary shall have charge of all books, records and papers and of the seal of CJC, all of which he or she shall deliver when instructed or authorized by resolution of the national executive or of the national council.

The honorary counsel shall advise the officers and national executive on such questions or procedure and rules of order as may be put to him or her. He or she shall further assist the officers and national executive in the performance of Congress activities by submitting legal opinions on the interpretation of statutes, ordinances and regulations as are in question.

Kaplansky was a leader in labor movement

By DIANE KOVEN
Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA — Canadian labor leader Kalmen Kaplansky died here on Dec. 10, 1997. He was 85.

OBITUARY

In his memorial remarks at Kaplansky's funeral, Rabbi Reuven Bulka noted that "Kalmen Kaplansky died on Human Rights Day. This means that, appropriately, he will be forever linked to human rights, just as he was during his lifetime."

Born in Bialystock, Poland, in 1912, Kaplansky immigrated to Canada in 1929. A typesetter and linotype operator by trade, his involvement with the labor movement led to a lifetime commitment to human rights.

In 1946, Kaplansky was appointed national director of the Jewish Labor Committee, which aided Jewish refugees in their resettlement in Canada and served as the foundation of the Canadian human rights movement. Upset by discriminatory practices, he worked tirelessly for change and enlisted the aid of organized labor in his battle. He was organizer of the Joint Labor Committees Against Racial and Religious Discrimination, later known as Labor Committees for Human Rights, in Montreal, Toronto, Windsor, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

'Forever linked to human rights'

The recipient of many honors, awards and commendations, including the Order of Canada, Kaplansky remained unpretentious and loyal to his humble roots.

"He was very much an international person although he had strong ties to his roots and a wonderful sense of history," his daughter Marsha remembers.

As director of the international department of the Canadian Labor Congress and in many other capacities, Kaplansky travelled extensively, addressing trade unionists, attending international conferences and representing the Canadian government at various United Nations Conferences.

"For my sister and me, his travels opened up the world to us. Wherever he went, he sent postcards," Marsha says.

Kaplansky had a special interest in the problems of native people and pioneered efforts to improve employment and economic opportunities for them.

According to Marsha, her father "belonged to many communities. He was involved in the Jewish community, spoke at the Jewish Historical Society, participated in the Coat of Many Colors project and other activities of a socio-political nature."

Kaplansky is survived by his brother Sholem, his wife Esther, daughters Marsha and Fran and three grandchildren, David, Daniel and Emily.

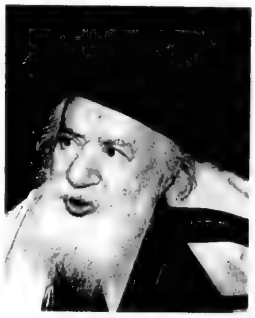
Rabbi Hirschprung was known as Halachic authority

By JANICE ARNOLD
Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Rabbi Avraham Niznik, 77, a former president of the Agudath Israel movement, has been named the new chief rabbi of the Jewish Community Council of Montreal, succeeding Rabbi Pinchas Hirschprung who died Jan. 24 at age 85. Rabbi Hirschprung had held the position since 1969.

OBITUARY



Rabbi Hirschprung

Rabbi Hirschprung was regarded by most Montreal Jews as the final arbiter on Jewish law and practice in the city, and internationally as a Talmudic scholar and halachic authority. The council, usually known as the Vaad Ha'ir, consists of the beit din or rabbinical court; and the kashrut supervisory body.

Over 2,000 attended the funeral of Rabbi Hirschprung held at the Beth Jacob School for girls in Outremont, which he was instrumental in founding. An Agudah adherent, Rabbi Hirschprung was beloved by all sections of Orthodox Jewry, as was evident by the outpouring of mourners onto the streets as his cortege made its way from Montreal to his burial in Ste. Sophie, a small town north of the city.

The procession made stops at several places that were meaningful to him: the Agudath Israel, the Bobov Synagogue where he davened, the Satmar congregation, the Lubavitch yeshivah, where he taught; and his own modest home on Querbes Avenue.

Rabbi Hirschprung had a phenomenal memory, which enabled him to recall virtually any passage in all of the Jewish sources. Admirers describe his memory as photographic and his breadth of knowledge encyclopedic.

He was also remarkable for his generosity and willingness to help anyone, even if it meant going without himself and, indeed, he led a spartan life.

"His memory was such that he had in his mind a library the equivalent of 50 Encyclopedia Britannicas, and that's a conservative estimate," said Rabbi Reuben Poupko, a member of the council's Vaad Harabonim.

"You could give him the page number of any Jewish text and he would recite it by heart, including the commentaries. He had 2,500 years of Jewish scholarship at his fingertips, be it the Talmud, law, mysticism or commentary, ancient or most recent."

Longtime friend Rabbi Shneur Aisenstark, principal of Beth Jacob, related that more than once he was so engrossed in his studies while riding the bus that he did not notice his own daughter sitting opposite him. Even when attending formal banquets, he always had a book in his hand, and usually was reading it, even when he sat at the head table. "He didn't waste a minute from learning," he said.

Less known was how he went out of his way to help those who needed money, a job or who were in trouble. Businessman Tzudyk Mandelcorn, a friend of 51 years, said he would "move mountains" to help anyone with a problem.

"He gave and gave selflessly...He was generous with his time and resources, almost to a fault," Rabbi Poupko said.

Born in Dukla, Poland, he studied at Yeshivah Chachmei Lublin, and received smichah, rabbinic ordination, in 1932 at age 20. He was considered a child prodigy because of his extraordinarily retentive mind, something he considered as a gift from God.

In 1939, Rabbi Hirschprung fled to Shanghai and arrived in Montreal in 1941, having lost most of his family. He married Jean (Chaya) Stern, a shochet's daughter and they had nine children. He served as dayan and eventually rosh of the beit din.

Although Rabbi Hirschprung usually spoke Yiddish, he had a good knowledge of English, read newspapers and was very aware of what was going on in the world. He had friends who were not religious, as well as those from many branches of Chassidism and Orthodoxy.

"He was an amiable, friendly man, without pretense. He was private and didn't care for ceremony, but he was always accessible," Rabbi Poupko said. "He had a dry sense of humor," Rabbi Aisenstark added, "and always a good word. He was very smart about what to say to whom and when."

Rabbi Aisenstark said Rabbi Hirschprung had been approached to serve as chief rabbi of Jerusalem, but chose to remain in Montreal. Some have wondered why he was buried here, in an out-of-the-way cemetery, rather than in Israel.

Rabbi Aisenstark said Rabbi Hirschprung had bought a plot in Israel many years ago, but only as a favor to someone here whose business was failing. "He never intended to use it, but it gave this man a boost."

Mandelcorn added that Rabbi Hirschprung had chosen the Ste. Sophie site many years ago. "He didn't like to impose on anyone, not even his own family. And arranging burial in Israel would have been an imposition."

The council has made little information available about Rabbi Niznik, who most recently held the title of av beit din, except that he was the unanimous choice.

The 1965 Who's Who in Canadian Jewry documents that he was born in Wysokie-Mazowieck, Poland and studied at the Baronowicz and Mirer yeshivot. He was in Shanghai during the war.

He was founder and dean of the yeshivah of Versailles, France from 1947-49. From 1949-53, he was rosh yeshivah of Eitz Chaim of Kapellen in Antwerp, Belgium.

In 1965, he had been rosh yeshivah of the Mercaz Hatorah and rabbi of Pinsker Kenyan Torah Congregation since 1953. He had also been rabbi of Congregation Bnai Jacob since 1955.

He became a member of the Vaad Ha'ir in 1956.

Compensation package available to survivors

MONTREAL — Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) is urging Holocaust survivors who qualify for a German pension fund to take advantage of the compensation package for their wartime suffering.

Known as the Article 2 Fund, Jewish victims of Nazi persecution are eligible if they: spent six months or more in a concentration camp, as defined according to the German Federal Indemnification Law (BEG); were held in a forced labor camp for Jews according to the list of places of imprisonment of the International Tracing Service of the Red Cross; suffered 18 months or more of imprisonment in a ghetto as defined by the BEG; endured 18 months or more in hiding under inhumane conditions or spent this amount of time living under a false identity, having been under 18 years of age and separated from their families at the beginning of persecution.

Additional eligibility criteria stipulates that, until now, the applicant has not been awarded compensation to date, or received less than DM 35,000. The individual's annual income must also not exceed $16,000 (US) for a single person, or $21,000 (US) if they are married. Applicants must be persecutees, as defined by the BEG. Those who were citizens of a western country other than Germany (i.e., a country that did not turn Communist after World War II), at the start of, or during their persecution, are not eligible, nor are those who currently reside in the former Communist countries.

Those who require more information should request an application kit from the fund administrator, the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, 15 East 26th Street, Suite 906, New York, NY, 10010.

Eating disorders in the Jewish community

"And a lot of parents who remember anti-Semitism in their youth really want their kids to be as perfect as possible so they don't lend themselves to criticism," she adds.

"[In cases] where the parents assume a lot of control and assume they will decide what the kids do when they grow up and how observant they're going to be, if the kids feel they don't have any say in their future, they might be looking for some control over their own lives [by controlling their weight]," says Kaufman.

For some Holocaust survivors who remember having nothing to eat, it's important to always have a full fridge, says Dr. Leora Pinhas, director of the eating disorders treatment program at Newmarket's York County Hospital and a fellow in Child and Adolescent Psychiatry at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto. "Food plays a complicated role."

Rivka, an Orthodox woman in her 40s who requested anonymity, says she has always struggled with her weight but has refused to "buy into this whole looks business."

When it came time to start looking for a husband for her overweight daughter, however, she was forced to confront the issue.

"I had thought – innocently – that weight wouldn't be a prime concern. If everything else was right, why would it be an issue? [But] television has taught us that everything has to be just beautiful."

According to the National Eating Disorder Information Centre, profits of "at least $3 billion in Canada drive a huge 'beauty' and diet industry... It is easy for us to buy into the idea that if we looked different, our lives would be better."

From the time British fashion model Twiggy appeared on the scene in 1967, thinness – even emaciation – has come to symbolize beauty. These days slinky-looking, impossibly-toned celebrities are likely to have achieved their shape with the help of liposuction and/or slave-driving personal trainers, and the image contributes to unrealistic goals for some people.

While it's sometimes hard to know at what point changing one's diet and exercise patterns crosses the line and becomes a medical problem, both anorexia nervosa (characterized by drastic dieting) and bulimia (binge eating with compensation in the form of vomiting or exercise) involve "a relentless pursuit of thinness and distorted body image," Kaufman says.

Anyone can suffer eating disorders, but the overwhelming majority of patients are young females who are convinced they're too fat, even when they are at the point of being skeletal.

With stereotypes like the Jewish mother and the Jewish American Princess, Jewish girls may already have internalized a negative self-image.

"Jewish girls do struggle with low self-esteem when these things are taken negatively," said Pinhas. "I would argue that what we have to do is reclaim our history in a positive way. I'm a Jewish mother now [of a 7-month-old]. I think I'm a good mother. I have a Jewish mother, and I'm glad. She's great. I want to grow up to be like her."

"There's a whole double message about being Jewish but making it in the larger culture," says Torontonian Nora Gold, author of a national study on Jewish women, sexism and anti-Semitism. "Women who are not interested in assimilationism have far fewer problems with their bodies."

Jewish women tend to be "shorter, wider and darker" than the Western ideal, says Pinhas.

And prevailing cultural standards of beauty have filtered down even to that segment of the Orthodox population that eschews television and movies.

Zelig Spillman, founder of The Orthodox Connection, a Toronto matchmaking service that serves the entire spectrum of Orthodoxy, confirmed that although "the girls want nice-looking guys as well," the reverse is more often the case.

Rivka worries that such a mindset is conducive to eating disorders among young Orthodox women, who may be tempted to "starve themselves for a shidduch."

Even clients who agree with Spillman's argument that women can gain weight after marriage – and who say they couldn't imagine rejecting a wife on that basis – still often choose not to date a heavy woman, he said.

Appearance is part of the picture for many young Orthodox men, says Rabbi Chaim Brodsky, rosh yeshivah of Yeshiva Gedolah of Toronto, although in his experience, the subject is raised only when a student chooses to confide personal reservations about a shidduch.

"Generally at the yeshivah we take the person as a whole. Appearance can be considered part of that, but the beauty of a person as a person is more than an outward appearance. We talk about midos [character traits]."

According to a study in Brooklyn, one out of 19 Jewish girls in the Orthodox and Syrian communities, aged 14 to 16, have eating disorders. That's "a whopping 50 percent higher than in the general population," it was reported late last year in the English-language Jewish newspaper the Forward. The study, which included over 300 patients, was undertaken by Dr. Ira Sacker, chief of adolescent medicine and director of the Eating Disorders Program at Brookdale Hospital.

"The numbers are astronomical," Sacker told The CJN.

One might expect a lower incidence of desperation dieting in the non-Orthodox community, where women tend to marry later and are less likely to rely on a third party to find them a husband.

But according to Ruth Friedman, president of Bringing People Together Inc., overweight women are even harder to match than smokers. Her clientele is exclusively Jewish, with "some" Orthodox clients.

"There is pressure to look a certain way," says Friedman. "I'm not talking 10 pounds [overweight]; 30 lbs. is starting to be a problem." Instead of her usual $350 membership fee, she charges overweight clients on a per-date basis.

Rabbi Baruch Taub of Beth Avraham Yoseph of Toronto Congregation believes there should be fewer precipitating factors in the Orthodox community than outside it. "Orthodox children are educated with a sense of self-esteem. There's an issue of modesty in dress."

Perhaps there is a perception that eating disorders are more prevalent in the Orthodox community because of large numbers of children, he suggested.

Rabbi Taub had not seen the Brooklyn study, but says that in his experience in the Toronto community (he has discussed the issue with physicians and provided support to members of his congregation), the prevalence of eating disorders in the Orthodox community is "not out of the ordinary."

"I tend to believe a human being's a human being. What affects one group affects another," says Rabbi Reuben Poupko of Beth Israel Beth Aaron Congregation in Montreal. "Obviously the first need is the mental and physical health of the [patient]."

If Rabbi Poupko is approached about an eating disorder, he makes sure the person has been referred to medical professionals, then assumes the role of a counsellor, giving support and friendship. He has visited patients at the Douglas Hospital – a psychiatric facility known for its eating disorders program – on several occasions, he says.

Although very little research has been published on eating disorders in the Jewish population, some is under way in the United States and Canada.

In Vancouver, Esther Kane, a native of Toronto who is studying for her master of social work degree at the University of British Columbia, is studying Jewish women, eating disorders and body image.

In Toronto, Pinhas, who spoke to The CJN at the Hospital for Sick Children, is surveying Jewish high school girls at three day schools and their counterparts in the public school system. (see sidebar)

"I want this study to help us address the issues in our community and I also think it can help other minority communities and the community at large," she says.

Jewish Family & Child Service (JF&CS) has done small workshops on eating disorders in some Toronto day schools and public schools.

Beth Feffer, manager of JF&CS' York Region branch and its school outreach program, believes in "helping kids feel good about themselves early in their lives." In addition to workshops addressing the general issues surrounding eating disorders, her service provides special workshops for classes in which a student has an eating disorder.

In Montreal, Jewish Family Services deals with similar issues (self-esteem, body image and nutrition) in community education programs and in adolescent development groups that go into both Jewish and non-Jewish schools, says Linda Kislowicz, executive director of Jewish Family Services (JFS) of the Baron de Hirsch Institute. A program for students in grades 4, 5 and 6 is in the works.

"From time to time if people come forward, we do offer support groups – not so much to the patients themselves, but to their families and friends," says Kislowicz. "I think there is an openness to doing that."

JF&CS currently offers no support groups for people with eating disorders or their families. "We've had very little in the way of requests," says Pat Lieberman, coordinator of the family life education program at JF&CS. "We would be open to doing something [if there were a demand]."

There is "definitely" a need for a Jewish support group, says a Montreal mother whose daughter was anorexic in her teens. "Absolutely," agrees a mother in Toronto. "Everything revolves around food, all our simchahs. Parents helping parents could be very supportive, and there's not a lot out there in terms of services and clinics."

There are Jewish parents who mistakenly believe there is nowhere for them to turn. Pinhas has heard stories from Orthodox mothers of many children who were told they must bring their entire family for therapy. "There are other treatments available. Sometimes it's impossible to bring your whole family down, and people have been turned away because of that. Keep looking, certainly."

Jewish treatment facilities would also head off problems like the ones that faced Alana Hirschberg, 22, of Montreal, when she was hospitalized for anorexia as a teenager.

Now recovered and a nursing student, she recalled in a phone interview the difficulties she had convincing hospital staff that drinking milk with meat was unacceptable to her for religious reasons. Because control issues can play a key role in eating disorders, the hospitalized eating disorder patient has little decision-making power regarding what to eat.

For Hirschberg, kosher food wasn't even available at the hospital where she was treated, she says.

In Toronto, kosher food is available at all hospitals, but it may be deemed in the patient's best medical interest to eat from the regular menu.

In all of North America, it seems there is no eating disorder treatment program or facility for Jewish patients within a Jewish context.

A support group for Orthodox girls in New York's Crown Heights area – apparently the first of its kind – is being planned under the auspices of a group called HEED (Help End Eating Disorders), according to organizer Dr. Ira Sacker.

Some people argue, however, that rather than pursue treatment in a Jewish context, Jewish families prefer to seek help where they are not likely to run into anyone they know.

"It's a two-edged sword," says Selma Elzas, Orthodox outreach worker at JF&CS. "We're slowly building bridges. I think [for the Orthodox] it comes through the rabbanim. If the rabbanim can trust us and endorse this part of the service, they can pass that on."

Orthodox people who need help might go to their rabbi first, explained Elzas, because they want to talk to someone sensitive to Orthodox issues.

"The same stuff that makes people need help makes it uncomfortable for them to ask for it," says psychologist Howard Steiger, chief of service at the eating disorders program at Montreal's Douglas Hospital.

Instead of being a cause for shame, he suggests the decision to seek help can be a source of pride – a responsible and mature choice.

U.S. attack against Iraq 'weeks away': Albright

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said Sunday it could be "weeks" before the United States takes any military action against Iraq, and that Washington is still looking for a diplomatic solution to the crisis.

Meanwhile, defence officials assessed that Iraq has no more than several missiles armed with non-conventional warheads and that there is only the slightest chance that Saddam Hussein would use them or try to involve Israel in the crisis.

"It's not days and it's not months, so that leaves weeks," Albright said in an interview from Kuwait broadcast on CNN's Late Edition, about the timing of a possible U.S. military attack to force Iraq to comply with United Nations (UN) arms inspection resolutions.

"The United States prefers to find a diplomatic solution to the standoff, but that string is running out," Albright said.

She said the administration of President Bill Clinton does not think it needs the UN Security Council to pass a new resolution before using force against Iraq.

"We believe we have the authority for a strike," she said.

Bolstered by assurances from Albright that the United States would stand by Israel if it were threatened by an Iraqi attack, the government adopted a low profile, taking a back seat in the showdown between Baghdad and Washington.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu called for silence on the issue by cabinet members and senior officials, with the sole exception of Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai.

"We will be in close consultation with Israel in terms of its security needs," Albright said. "Our support of Israel's security is unshakable."

Albright acknowledged that she discussed the Iraqi crisis with Netanyahu and with Palestinian Authority (PA) Chairman Yasser Arafat. She welcomed Arafat's call for Saddam to comply with Security Council resolutions.

Arafat sent a message to Saddam via the PLO's ambassador to Iraq and PA minister of public works, Azzam Ahmad, a PLO official said.

"He was sent within the framework of attempts to find a peaceful solution to the crisis and to try to prevent an explosion," the official told Reuters. He declined to disclose the contents of the message.

Albright also expressed appreciation for King Hussein's letter holding Saddam responsible for the consequences of his actions.

She said the purpose of U.S. policy toward Iraq is "to thwart Iraq's ability to acquire and develop weapons of mass destruction and threaten its neighbors."

Stopping short of specifying the categories of emergency aid the United States might extend to Israel to protect the population from biological or chemical weapons, Albright made this personal declaration: "I say to the people of Israel – the United States stood by you when you were attacked seven years ago. Nothing will ever shake the ironclad commitment of the United States when it comes to the security of Israel."

Weapons of mass destruction

Albright also advised Arab states and the Palestinians against sympathizing with Saddam or admiring his unconventional weapons build-up.

"Weapons of mass destruction know no borders," she said. "They are a threat to Palestinians as well as Israelis. They kill without discrimination."

Mordechai warned that if attacked by Iraq, Israel has the right to retaliate. He also confirmed the United States would give early warning to Israel of any U.S. military strike.

After meeting with Albright, Mordechai dodged questions about reports that Israel has sought hundreds of thousands of antidotes for biological weapons, particularly anthrax, but indicated that Israel would welcome any defence aid it could get from Washington.

"We have to be well prepared in our country against threats now or in the future. I would like to have support from the United States for much more defence of our citizens and population in Israel," Mordechai said. "We have been working with the United States for a long time to be prepared today and in the future for a non-conventional weapon attack.

"We have methods, but it is always good to have more," Mordechai added.

Sources said the Americans were asked for gas masks, mask parts, particularly filters, pills, identification means and other items needed if Israel is attacked with chemical or biological weapons. No supply date was given, as the items would only be ready in case of a worsening of the crisis in the gulf, the sources said.

"If we are attacked, then like any sovereign nation we have the right to take any action we decide is right," Mordechai added. "We will receive American information in time and will be able to update the public if needed," he said. "I'm sure we will be informed of any attack or any change in the situation."

But Mordechai said he still believes the chances of an Iraqi attack against Israel in the current crisis are low.

Defence sources noted there is a significant difference between the present crisis and the 1991 Gulf War, since at that time Saddam had threatened to attack Israel from the outset and ended up firing 39 Scud missiles at the country.

During the latest crisis, even though Saddam has not threatened Israel, the sources noted Israel is taking a series of precautions. Mordechai's deputy, Silvan Shalom, told Army Radio there is no need to panic, but that people should make sure their gas mask kits are up to date.

He said a whopping 12,000 people reported to gas masks centres around the country last week or six times the pre-crisis average.

Albright disappointed with 'minimal progress' in talks

By JAY BUSHINSKY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM —Although U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright made her disappointment with the outcome of her talks crystal clear, it did not spur Israeli officials to accept the blame or sympathize with her.

"I must say I hoped we would get further on this trip than we had," she said, hedging her regret with a vague reference to only "minimal progress" having been made.

Contending that "there really was no progress," a senior official implied that her immediate motive was diplomatic expediency. He contended that she wants Israel to offer more West Bank territory to the Palestinian Authority (PA) than the government is willing to surrender "to make it easier to buy the support of the Arab states against Iraq."

Albright salvaged what she could from the stonewalling that evidently faced her on the Israeli side and the ambitious demands of the Palestinians by announcing that the two sides will be sending "emissaries" to Washington.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said at the weekly cabinet meeting that the government continues to insist on reciprocity as the premise for further redeployment. This means "concrete implementation of the commitments undertaken by the PA," he said.

The cabinet did not come to an agreement on the percentage of West Bank territory to be handed over to the PA, preferring to continue deliberating this issue.

Albright evidently would have preferred to hear Netanyahu offer a pullback from 12 to 14 percent. But National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon, who has been playing an influential part in formulation of this policy, said no more than nine percent of Area C could be evacuated.

On the other hand, he went along with U.S. President Bill Clinton's proposal that the withdrawal be subdivided into smaller segments.

"In each step of this kind, the Palestinians would receive a proportionate segment of the total area earmarked for withdrawal equal to the extent of their compliance with the security commitments they undertook," he said.

Albright contended that the peace process has been stalled at the point it has reached "for a long time, frankly, far too long." She warned that the only way to avoid further deterioration is that both parties work to restore "the lost sense of partnership by taking the hard steps to put the peace process back on track. It's time to exercise leadership to achieve peace."

But Netanyahu stood by his demand that the PA call for the convening of the Palestine National Council as the sole body which can annul the Palestinian National Covenant.

Referring to Albright's approach to the problem of reactivating the peace process, the senior source said Albright believes "progress" will win more prestige for the United States with the region's Arab population.

He contended that "Israel cannot sacrifice its security just to ingratiate the United States with the Arab states of the Persian Gulf."

Dispute over covenant won't fade away

By HERB KEINON
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — The Palestinian National Covenant is the eternal issue that just won't fade away.

The reason, according to Menahem Klein, a political science lecturer at Bar-Ilan University who specializes in Palestinian affairs, is that both Israel and the Palestinians see it as a means to furthering other ends.

The Netanyahu government wants to use what it perceives as the failure of the Palestinians to amend the covenant as a way to hold up further withdrawal in the West Bank, while the Palestinians are using it as a way to win points with the United States, Klein said.

"The United States," he said, "recently accepted Israeli demands that the Palestinians spell out which clauses have been amended. The United States did this in an attempt to put together an agreement for withdrawal – they are trying to build a package deal in which clarifying the Palestinian position on the charter is part of the package. Within this framework, the United States and Palestinians agreed on the language of the letter from Arafat to Clinton."

The letter, given to Clinton by Arafat, reportedly reads: "From time to time, questions have been raised about the effectiveness of the Palestinian National Council's (PNC) actions, particularly concerning which of the 33 articles of the Palestinian Covenant have been changed. We would like to put these concerns to rest."

According to the letter, "All the previous articles of the covenant which are inconsistent with the PLO's commitment to recognize and live in peace side by side with Israel are no longer in effect."

The letter then lists the articles that have been canceled or changed, and promises that the changes will show up in any future publication of the covenant.

It was that letter which the 18-member executive of the PLO executive committee recently discussed, but did not officially ratify.

Controversy within the Palestinian camp over the letter has nothing to do with revoking the charter, said Klein.

"The discussion was not within context of changing the charter. The charter, even from the standpoint of the hawks inside the PLO, was changed in April 1996. The recent disagreement is whether – in light of what Arafat heard from Clinton at the White House, which in their eyes was not balanced – it is justified to take another step toward the Americans."

The current Palestinian maneuvering on the charter, according to Klein, is intended not for the Israelis, but the Americans. "The Palestinians are now trying to get the United States on their side, creating differences between [Secretary of State] Madeleine Albright and Netanyahu," he said.

The charter issue presented a good opportunity, Klein said, because Israel would obviously argue that the letter is not enough, while the Americans, since they had a hand in drafting the letter, would say it is sufficient. And this, it turns out, is exactly what has happened.

In Klein's eyes, the Palestinian National Council did effectively annul the covenant in April 1996, when it voted to "amend the National Charter by canceling the articles that are contrary to the letters exchanged between the PLO and the government of Israel on September 9 and 10, 1993."

But the government's position, as articulated by Netanyahu adviser David Bar-Illan, is that this type of sweeping cancellation is not sufficient, and that the PNC needs to spell out which specific clauses were changed. Furthermore, the government argues that only the full PNC, and not the 18-member executive committee, is empowered to spell out which clauses have been amended.

"The Arafat letter is like a letter from the president of the United States saying: 'I hereby cancel the first and fifth amendments of the Constitution,'" Bar-Illan said. "It means nothing."

Israel must renew alliance with all streams of Judaism

By ABBA EBAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

The leaders of religious Orthodoxy have awakened very late to what they believe to be the "danger" of Conservative and Reform Judaism.

OPINION

The first conferences of a reform movement were held way back in 1844. By 1880, the successes of reformist congregations in America were closely related to the massive German-Jewish immigration of the 1840s and the Union of American Hebrew Congregations was created in 1873. This does not sound like a movement of wild innovation.

Since then, the major developments in Conservatism and Reform have been the sharp swing to Zionism, especially since the 1967 Six Day War, and the brilliant achievements of Jewish higher institutions of learning in various fields of Jewish scholarship. The contribution of Jewish Theological Seminary scholars is especially impressive.

Today, Conservative Jews insist on the sacredness of the Sabbath and stress Jewish nationalism as inseparable from the moral and intellectual culture of the Jewish people. They give passionate support to the secular Zionist movement.

As ambassador to the United States, I was personally honored by doctorates from Yeshiva University, the Jewish Theological Seminary and the Hebrew Union Colleges in Jerusalem and Cincinnati. An Israeli diplomat who spurned these contacts would be making a fool of himself.

In Conservative institutions, there has been a movement away from Orthodoxy by ordaining women rabbis, but this is a response to universal American concepts, not a rebellion against them.

In Israel, the Orthodox establishment has been reluctant to acknowledge the Zionist fervor of Conservative and Reform Jews. The embarrassing fact that the major Zionist offensive in the 1940s was led by an eminent Reform rabbi, Abba Hillel Silver, is held as a dark secret by the Orthodox establishment.

Another achievement of Conservative and Reform Jews has been their numerical domination of the Jewish scene. They are believed to number about 80 percent of those American Jews who claim a Jewish identity. If this is true, or even a rough estimate, it follows that Israel's cause is undermined by the antagonisms that define the current relations between the Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform movements.

Israeli leaders, such as Finance Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman and Jewish Agency chair Avraham Burg, are rendering invaluable service to Israel by their devotion to the prospect of united action and common purpose by all the Jewish religious movements.

Against this background, it is clear that discrimination against the Judaism practised by Conservative and Reform Jews is discordant with Israeli and Zionist traditions.

It is not sufficiently stressed that there is something distinctively anti-American in the hostility expressed by some sectors of Orthodoxy against the newer movements in Judaism.

The founding fathers of the United States had good reason to create, in the First Amendment of their Constitution, a spiritual domain, remote from political contagion, in which the only thing demanded of Jewish adherents was mutual tolerance. Americans are inspired by their religions without being enslaved by them. If the founders had not understood the cruciality of this provision, it is possible that North America would be fragmented into a dozen separate states, each with its own established creed.

All that the U.S. Constitution asks of those sworn to defend it is that they transcend their diversity by universal respect for all faiths – even those that some of them consider to be deviant. It is intolerable that the only citizens who have to listen to attacks on their faith should be Conservative and Reform Jews, who are just as integral to the unifying Jewish experience as are the other adherents of their faith.

In historic terms, the relatively new movements in Judaism were attempting to "Americanize" their devotions by making them congenial to the movement and impulse of the present age. The need to adapt new realities to changing conditions is not an offense against existing traditions. It may turn out to be their only salvation.

For most of the 50 years culminating in the jubilee celebrations, the foundations of our state were laid jointly by coalitions of the Labor movement with the main bodies of religious Zionism. In the mid-1970s there was a sharp swing of the religious movement toward diplomatic theories that have become more militant and less consensual than before. The turn to the Right of religious Zionism is a more serious symptom – and cause – of our present malaise than are the theological differences that divide the Israeli nation.

Nothing would help Israel more than the reconstitution of the historic alliance that brought this nation to birth.

Conversion bill will push assimilation: Amital

By HAIM SHAPIRO and BATSHEVA TSUR
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — The conversion bill would encourage assimilation, and everything possible should be done to prevent it from being passed, according to Rabbi Yehuda Amital, head of the Har Etzion Yeshiva and chair of Meimad, the moderate religious Zionist movement.

Rabbi Amital said last weekend any compromise that would prevent passage of the bill should be promoted. Personally, he said, he favors the elimination of "nationality" on identity cards. Barring that, he favors the Ne'eman Committee's proposals and failing that, the solution arrived at with Jewish Agency chair Avraham Burg, whereby a letter on the identity card would identify a convert and the conversion document would be registered with the Interior Ministry.

The bill, which would make the Chief Rabbinate the sole arbiter on the validity of conversions carried out in Israel, has only symbolic significance, he said.

"It doesn't indicate whether a person may be married or whether he may be called to the Torah in synagogue," Rabbi Amital said.

Passage of the bill, he said, would alienate hundreds of thousands of Diaspora Jews whose only identification with Judaism is through Israel. If one weakens that identification, he said, then one encourages assimilation.

Rabbi Amital said the Conservative and Reform movements have a value abroad, where they create a barrier to assimilation. He added that even if Reform had been a danger to Orthodoxy in the past, the danger today is secularism.

Meanwhile, President Ezer Weizman called on Orthodox circles to accept the Ne'eman recommendations.

"I think [Ya'akov Ne'eman] has done a good job," Weizman told representatives of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America (OU) during a meeting with OU representatives at Beit Hanassi last weekend.

The OU representatives indicated they would support the Chief Rabbinate's stand, whatever it was, on the matter. Chief Rabbis Yisrael Lau and Eliahu Bakshi-Doron were scheduled to meet this week with members of the Knesset Absorption Committee, who favor the Ne'eman Committee's proposals. They were then to meet with Ne'eman. Next week, the Chief Rabbinical Council is to decide whether to back the proposals.

Flurry of diplomacy fails to break impasse

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

A year has elapsed since Israel and the Palestine Authority (PA) signed an agreement to pump life into the moribund Mideast peace process.

Mideast Analysis

But judging by the recent flurry of diplomacy, both in the region and in Washington, no further meaningful progress seems imminent.

The two sides achieved their last breakthrough in January, when Israel agreed to withdraw from much of Hebron. It was a momentous event, marking the first time a Likud government had ceded land to the Palestinians.

But after Hebron, the tentative trust which had developed between Benjamin Netanyahu and Yasser Arafat dissipated. It floundered under the combined impact of events: the Har Choma housing project; the decision by Israel to close Palestinian institutions in eastern Jerusalem and to expand Jewish settlements in the territories; the rejection by the PA of a first-phase Israeli offer to redeploy from the West Bank; and the resumption of a new round of Islamic fundamentalist terrorism in Israeli cities.

With the breakdown of momentum, the United States intervened. Special envoy Dennis Ross and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright stepped in, suggesting ways to reinvigorate the faltering process. Adopting a balanced approach, Albright urged Israel to carry out "significant" and "credible" withdrawals from the West Bank prior to final status talks, and demanded that the PA crack down on terrorism in a systematic fashion.

Under mounting U.S. pressure, the Israeli cabinet, on Nov. 30, voted unanimously to fulfil its obligation to make additional but unspecified withdrawals from the West Bank. But Israel made it clear that no action would be taken until it identified the areas it wished to keep after a final settlement, and not before the PA dealt seriously with unresolved security issues.

In the waning days of 1997, Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai and National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon presented rival final status maps to the cabinet. By Mordechai's reckoning, Israel would retain 52 percent of the West Bank while jettisoning one-third of the settlements. By Sharon's estimation, Israel would hold on to 63 percent of Judea and Samaria and all the settlements.

To the PA, which covets the entire West Bank but which partially controls only 27 percent of it at present, both figures were totally unacceptable.

In a series of cabinet decisions taken on the eve of Netanyahu's trip to the White House to discuss redeployments from the West Bank, Israel announced its terms for withdrawals. They were unveiled less than two weeks after Foreign Minister David Levy resigned in a controversy over budgetary allocations and just days after Ross failed to find a formula for Israel and the PA to resume negotiations.

In large part, Israel's terms reflect Sharon's hardline conception of final status. Not surprisingly, the PA has dismissed his guidelines as an attempt to kill the idea of a Palestinian state and to scuttle the peace process.

Israel's conditions are indeed stringent. No more pullbacks will take place unless the PA, abiding by previous commitments, fights terrorism and incitement unceasingly and fully amends its National Covenant.

Regardless of the territory it finally gives up, Israel will not relinquish security zones in the east and the west, nor will Israel give up Jerusalem and its hinterland, settlements, military bases, roads and Jewish historic sites. In addition, Israel will not cede water resources, and interim redeployments must be linked to a permanent accord.

For now, the immediate focus is on the three pre-final status withdrawals Israel is still obligated to carry out under the Oslo accords. But as of this week, Israel had not publicly revealed its intentions. President Bill Clinton has suggested a regime of gradual redeployments based on full Palestinian compliance with Oslo.

Israel is considering his plan, but the PA has rejected it. And so the impasse, with its dangerous consequences, continues.

JERUSALEM (JTA Feb. 2) — The Jewish Agency started an inquiry into the blasting last night of the building in which the Jewish Telegraphic Agency and the English-language Palestine Post had their main offices. The building was still burning today. An official announcement revealed that one woman was killed and about 20 persons injured in the explosion.

The Jewish Telegraphic Agency continued to serve all newspapers in Palestine and the outside world from temporary quarters. The Palestine Post also appeared today, using borrowed presses.

Looking good - feeling great - the art of cosmetic surgery

MICHAEL J. BEDERMAN
M.D., F.R.C.S.(c) Certified Plastic Surgeon

In this youth and fitness oriented society, with an increased awareness about positive self image, people want more control over their bodies.

Aesthetic Plastic Surgery is designed primarily to improve appearance, thereby enhancing self esteem. The increased interest in youth, beauty, and health has been a major influencing factor.

Cosmetic surgery is no longer a privilege reserved for the wealthy. Men and women, young and old, people from all walks of life are wanting to make a change for the better.

The Centre for Cosmetic Surgery is a self-contained surgical facility in mid-town Toronto where the latest in medical technology has been incorporated in a private and elegant setting.

The unique facility is a free standing centre for the exclusive practice of aesthetic plastic surgery.

The comprehensive consultation with Dr. Michael Bederman, the principal surgeon, is informative and by far the best way to find out what cosmetic procedure is appropriate for you. The advancement and improvement of surgical techniques has made the various procedures safer, with minimal pain and shorter recovery time.

Dr. Bederman has had an active practice in Toronto since 1975. He received his degree in Medicine at University of Toronto in 1969, trained in Plastic Surgery in Montreal, Miami and New York and received his Specialist Certificate in Plastic Surgery in Toronto in 1974.

Dr. Bederman is often consulted and quoted in print and television media and is a frequent lecturer and speaker.

A member of the Canadian Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, Dr. Bederman holds membership in many other Canadian, American and International Societies. He also continues to practice Plastic and Reconstructive surgery at the Scarborough General Hospital.

The Centre for Cosmetic Surgery also operates as a resource information facility which provides video tapes and printed materials on all the latest procedures. They offer a relaxed, elegant atmosphere for post-operative recovery. Private nurses are available for overnight patient stay at the Centre.

From your initial consultation to your final post-op. visit, the staff will attentively guide you every step of the way. They bring their knowledge, enthusiasm and sincerity to their patients.

Odette Levy, The Centre's Director is always happy to take the time to answer any related questions or concerns.

Prudent Investing with Segregated Funds

Segregated Funds are offered by life insurance companies. They look and act like most mutual funds, but they also have several unique advantages: they guarantee up to 100% of the principal investment at maturity (usually 10 years); they guarantee up to 100% of the principal investment in case of death (called the "death benefit guarantee"); they offer potential for creditor protection; and, the owner is allowed to name a beneficiary, thus avoiding the estate and the associated probate and legal fees.

By S. Jonathan Kirshblum, Investment Advisor

Recently, several insurance companies have added benefits that have made segregated funds an even more attractive investment.

Some insurance companies now offer segregated index funds that track the performance of global stock markets. However, they are not considered foreign content in registered accounts. U.S. and global equity funds have historically outperformed the Canadian stock market by a wide margin. Global diversification serves to potentially improve overall returns and minimize portfolio risk. Investing in a segregated index fund allows investors to increase the foreign exposure in their RRSP or RRIF without affecting their available foreign content limit.

Another new feature offered by some insurance companies is the "freeze option." This provides investors with a method to lock-in investment gains and increase the guaranteed principal as market values rise. Investors who seek growth have peace of mind that their principal and any market gains may be guaranteed for a designated beneficiary.

For example: A client invests $100,000.00. One year later the market value is $120,000.00. The client locks in the $20,000.00 capital gain by exercising the "freeze option." This increases the guaranteed principal to $120,000.00. If the client subsequently dies and the market value of the fund has dropped to $90,000.00, the beneficiary still receives $120,000.00.

The freeze option and the death benefit guarantee are mortality benefits, which are valuable to someone interested in protecting investments for a beneficiary. While segregated funds may add tremendous value in case of death, the investor need not die in order to benefit. While the investor is alive, segregated funds grow in the same way as conventional mutual funds. Segregated fund units are redeemable in whole or in part at any time at prevailing market prices.

Seniors holding individual stocks or equity mutual funds in RRSPs, RRIFs, or investment accounts should seriously consider switching these investments to segregated funds. The average annual return for the TSE over the last 50 years has been approximately 11%, not the 20% return of recent years. Switching to a segregated fund will protect these returns, and also allow future capital gains to be locked-in if the markets continue to rise.

Guarantees on the principal and the ability to lock-in capital gains provide new opportunities for investment strategies:

- Spouses trying to grow their capital while alive may now protect the principal and growth for each other in case of death.
- Parents or grandparents that have allocated sums of money for children may now invest in equity funds and lock-in future growth without risk to the principal investment.
- Middle-aged children with a parent who is a senior may purchase a segregated fund in their own name but link the term of the investment to the parent's life.

Whether it is the potential for creditor proofing, avoiding probate fees and estate taxes, increasing foreign content in RRSPs and RRIFs, or using the death benefit guarantee and freeze option as part of estate planning, segregated funds offer unique benefits that continue to attract a wide spectrum of investors.

A word to the wise: Many different insurance companies offer segregated funds with varying features and benefits. One of the chief variables is the percentage of the principal that is guaranteed at maturity or death (ranging from 75% to 100%). It is important to ensure that the fund selected provides the most suitable terms available for the individual investor's objectives. Seeking professional assistance with this investment is strongly recommended.

Jonathan Kirshblum is an Investment Advisor at ScotiaMcLeod's Head Office branch located at Scotia Plaza in downtown Toronto. Mr. Kirshblum is also a licensed Insurance Agent and he carries the designation of a Retirement Specialist. If you are interested in more information about segregated funds or would like to arrange for a private consultation with Mr. Kirshblum, please call him at (416) 863-7238.

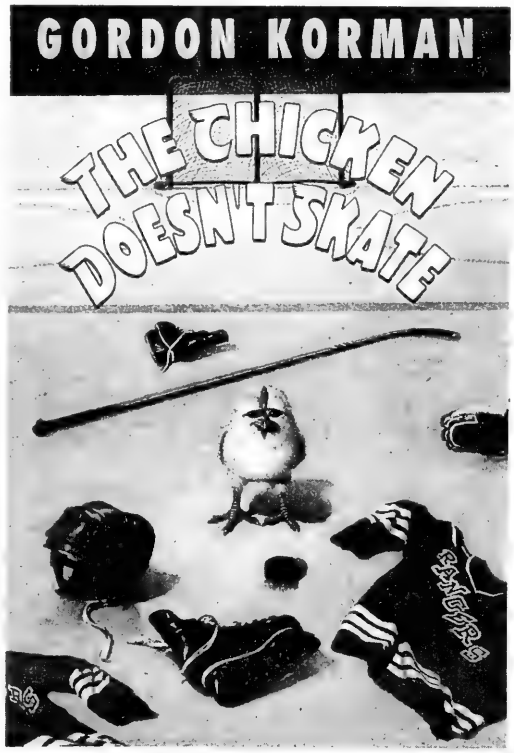
This chicken doesn't skate

By LEILA SPEISMAN
Staff Reporter

What happens when a science project becomes personal? Find out in Gordon Korman's latest book, The Chicken Doesn't Skate (Scholastic Press, 1996).

Milo Neal wants to do an award-winning experiment for the school science fair, mainly so that he can impress his father, a famous scientist. He decides to study The Complete Life Cycle of a Link in the Food Chain – in other words, the life history of a chicken. Using a real chicken.



School mascot

Everything seems to be going well, until the chicken, named Henrietta, becomes not only a school pet, but the mascot that inspires the previously inept hockey team to victory after victory. Milo has to tell his classmates that the ultimate end of the food chain is eating Henrietta.

Those of you who have read other books by Gordon Korman, especially his Bruno and Boots at McDonald Hall series, will remember how funny his books are. The Chicken doesn't Skate is no exception – you will find yourself cheering on the students as they try to change Milo's mind and save Henrietta.

But this book is more than funny. You will see how children can work together to accomplish something that is really important to them, how lonely people try to "fit in" by taking up causes they don't necessarily believe in, and how science can have a heart too.

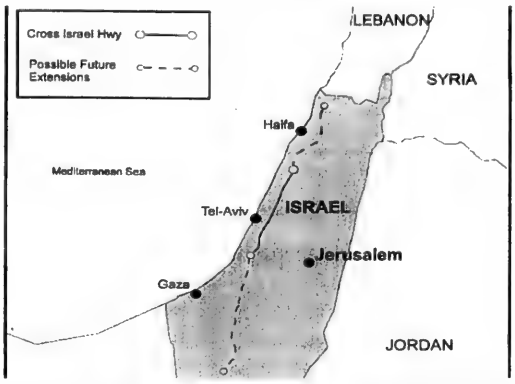
Israel awards highway contract

By JAMES PASTERNAK
Special to The CJN



TORONTO — A Canadian company leading a four-country consortium has been awarded the contract to build the Cross Israel Highway, perhaps that country's largest infrastructure project ever.

The project, which includes electronic tolling, is worth $1.1 billion and will be managed by Canadian Highways International Corporation, based in Mississauga.

The tolling technology for the project is similar to that used on the 407 Express Toll Route in Toronto.

"It helps to establish us as a world leader," says Mitch Patten, vice-president Communications and Public affairs for Canadian Highways told The Canadian Jewish News. "It's a gateway to the world."

Patten believes that Canadian Highway's approach to road construction and tolling technology will become "the standard" in the industry.

The consortium led by Canadian Highways is called Derech Eretz Ltd. which is also made up of firms from Israel (Africa Israel Investment Ltd.), France (Société Générale d'Entreprises) and Hughes Transportation Management Systems (United States).

The project is to be 86 kilometres in length running from Highway 3 (west of Jerusalem), through the outskirts of Tel Aviv, north to Highway 65 (about halfway to Haifa). It includes 13 interchanges and 88 bridges and is largely a four-lane highway with provision for future expansion. The first section (16.5 km) to be constructed northeast of Tel Aviv is scheduled for completion by September 2000.

The project will generate approximately 4,900 direct jobs during construction, 10,500 indirect jobs in support industries and 55 permanent jobs for operation and maintenance.

The Derech Eretz team includes 37 Israeli firms providing services in engineering, quality assurance, environmental consulting, legal, financial, communications and marketing services.

In the announcement, John Beck, president of Canadian Highways, pointed out that winning the contract "firmly establishes Canadian Highways as a world leader in the development of toll highways.

"We believe our partnership approach provides the best and most cost-effective solution to the Israeli government's goal of building a state-of-the-art highway with low toll rates to relieve traffic congestion throughout the region," says Beck.

According to the corporate office of Cross Israel Highway Ltd., "Among western countries, Israel is ranked among the most congested countries, with over 80 vehicles per kilometre of road."

When the full highway is in operation, the busiest tolled section of the highway is expected to carry up to 35,000 vehicles per day.

Film society adds shows

TORONTO — Starting Feb. 8, the Toronto Jewish Film Society will be offering an additional screening to accommodate increasing demand for tickets.

The 7:30 p.m. screening, which will continue, is almost always sold out, a spokesperson for the society said. Thus the new 5 p.m. screening will ensure no one will be turned away.

"The additional screening will make it easier for members and single ticket purchasers to get tickets. No one need be disappointed," he said.

On Feb.8, the society will present the Canadian premiere of A Life Apart:Hasidism in America.

Screenings take place at the Art Gallery of Ontario, Jackman Hall, 317 Dundas St. W. For more information call 416-924-6211

'Pavarotti of the bimah' to perform synagogue concert

By REVA KAISER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — This Shabbat Shira, Torontonians will have the opportunity to celebrate a day of song and simchah with a master of music.

Known as "the Pavarotti of the bimah," Cantor Alberto Mizrahi will perform a single concert at the Beth Tikvah Synagogue, Feb. 7, at 8 p.m.

Renowned for his tenor voice, Mizrahi performs throughout North America, Israel and Europe. When he is not touring, he is the cantor of Anshe Emet Congregation of Chicago.

Music was always an integral part of Mizrahi's life, he says, but his dream to be a performer was planted at the age of four, when his father took him to see a film about the great Caruso, starring Mario Lanza.

Mizrahi dreamed of performing opera, never aware of the cantorate as an option. He was still a child when his family emigrated from Hungary in 1956, and in Cleveland he was never exposed to the cantorial art form in the Americanized synagogues of his youth.

But Mizrahi's powerful and mellifluous voice was discovered in the Jewish milieu on his bar mitzvah, when he davened Musaf in addition to chanting the weekly Torah portion.

"The wind kept shifting me towards chazzanut," Mizrahi recalls. Rabbis in his yeshivah high school in Skokie, Ill., recognized his talent and suggested he pursue a career in chazzanut. As well, a high school friend of his was integral in pushing Mizrahi in that direction when he introduced him to cantorial music.

"I was enthralled by the sound. Suddenly, I had a deep desire to learn more about this rich music and become involved in it."

Mizrahi studied at the Cantor's Institute of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York City. His studies were supplemented with private tutors, including voice lessons with his cantorial mentor, Moshe Ganchoss.

Today, Mizrahi maintains his vocal education with monthly voice lessons in New York City with Patricia McCaffrey, who trains many of the Metropolitan Opera singers. He stresses the importance of constant study and finds himself always learning something new.

Mizrahi's operatic training includes the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the American Opera Centre at Julliard in New York. His dream was to perform opera, but he knew it would be too taxing on his personal life.

He has no regrets about making opera the secondary music in his life. "I'm very privileged to have a life on the bimah," he says.

Mizrahi has performed with a number of symphonies internationally. He debuted with the New York Philharmonic in 1995, and travels to Israel two or three times a year, where he performs with the YUVAL choir.

Mizrahi has a number of recordings, including High Holy Days and Chants Mystiques, a Jewish chant album which has sold 20,000 copies, a monumental hit in the classical music industry.

Plans are in progress for a new recording of 10 to 12 cantorial pieces.

"This will be my opus," Mizrahi says. The production is a collaborative effort with Srul Irving Glick, the conductor and composer-in-residence of Beth Tikvah.

"Mizrahi has the same kind of voice as Pavarotti," says Glick. "There's a thrill in it; it's wonderful. He gives 100 percent to the people and [they] always come out satisfied."

Mizrahi's cantorial concerts are unique because of his distinct blend of Ashkenazi and Sephardi music. (He is Sephardi but was trained in Ashkenazi cantorials).

Alberto Mizrachi

The concert at Beth Tikvah will be a symphony of Mizrahi's music. The program will include Yiddish art songs; Kuda, Kuda, a Russian operatic aria; a Moroccan medley sung with the Beth Tikvah choir; and many other works, including some surprise pop vocals.

Being a cantor "is a lifestyle, it's a way of living," Mizrahi says, but it is not an easy life. "To be really good in art, you must not only fight the criticisms, but you must also fight the inclinations [to do something else] all the time and study instead."

The cantorate is not for everyone, but Mizrahi's advice is "if you can't live without it, then go into it.

"Singing is life to me," he emphasizes. It is also a form of creative expression and gives him both a physical and spiritual high.

Mizrahi gets immense satisfaction and personal rewards from his singing, knowing that he's spending his life praising God and is initiating a direct connection to Him whenever he opens his mouth.

There are problems facing the art of chazzanut today, Mizrahi laments. "People love a good chazzan, but they don't understand him.

"Our mission is to make our art touch the people we deal with," says Mizrahi. A chazzan has the duty to help by teaching people about this music form.

Mizrahi suggests a number of ways to accomplish this, including organizing concerts, educating children, encouraging congregational singing and providing adult appreciation classes.

The 36 members of the Beth Tikvah choir and pianist Brahm Goldhamer will accompany Mizrahi's Saturday night performance.

Tickets are available from the synagogue office or at the door; adults for $18 and seniors and students for $15. Call 221-3433 for more information.

Asian crisis will hurt Israel

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — The current economic crisis in East Asia, alongside recent terror attacks, will lead to lower-than forecast economic growth this year, according to a report published last week by Tsipi Galyam, who heads the Treasury's Economic Research and State Revenue Administration.

In light of these two developments, there is a need to reconsider the original economic forecasts that the Finance Ministry issued last July, Galyam wrote. The Asian crisis alone is likely to reduce economic growth by 0.2 to .7 percent

"The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund lowered the growth forecast of most of the world's economies by 0.2 percent to 0.7percent," the report states. "It is hardly likely that the Israeli economy will be the only one contriving to emerge unscathed from this crisis. Even if there is no direct effect on Israel, the anticipated lower growth in other countries will indirectly affect the Israeli economy. The working premise is that the economy will suffer both indirectly and directly."

While the July estimate was for three to 3.5 percent growth in the gross domestic product, Galyam suggests the figure may well fall short of three percent. This compares to an annual average 5.9 percent between 1990 and 1995 and 4.5 percent in 1996.

CJN Purim Art Contest

It's time again for our fourth annual Purim Art Contest and we are looking for drawings about Purim from students in elementary school.

Who can enter: Children from grades 1 to 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes: The judges will choose one drawing from two different students in each grade. These "winning" drawings will be published in The CJN on March 12. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a cheque for $25.

How to enter: You may submit as many drawings as you want. However, they should not be too small or too large. Please paint, draw, or color bright, bold, colorful pictures. You may use markers, crayons, paint or pencils. And you can even give them a title. Please send us your name, address, phone number, school and grade along with your drawings.

You may mail or deliver your drawings to: CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 1500 Don Mills Road, Suite 205, North York, Ontario M3B 3K4. If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 27, 1998. We will undoubtedly receive many wonderful submissions from children all across the country. But only 12 of the drawings will be chosen for publication as "winners." The judges will base their decision on a number of factors such as: the use of color, the imaginative quality of the drawing and the way it tells an aspect of the story of Purim. The judges' decisions will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and quality of submissions received.

How the Winner will be announced: The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of Shabbat on Friday, March 6, 1998.

When the prizes will be awarded: The "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN of March 12, 1998. Have fun and good luck.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Régie des Loteries et courses du Québec.

SMITHSONIAN RETHINKS ISRAEL LECTURE SERIES

After encountering a barrage of criticism from conservative Jewish groups, the Washington-based Smithsonian Museum has withdrawn a proposed lecture series, featuring many left-leaning speakers and subjects, that had been scheduled in commemoration of Israel's 50th birthday.

Having gained a reputation for mounting controversial exhibits that challenge accepted historical attitudes, the Smithsonian chose not to rock the boat this time, preferring instead to cancel its co-sponsorship arrangement with the New Israel Fund.

That organization had apparently helped draw up the lecture series, which, in accordance with its own political leanings, seemed loaded with speakers representing the political left.

One lecturer, for example, had planned to discuss Zionism as a form of European imperialism, while another would have asserted that early Zionist pioneers cared more about securing a state than in saving the lives of endangered Jews. The Price of Occupation; and To Unify Jerusalem; were other talks on a preliminary list.

"Debate, unfortunately, was not what the New Israel Fund had in mind when it put together this lopsided list of speakers," wrote Jonathan Mahler in the English-language Forward, the weekly newspaper published in New York.

"It was clearly thinking more along the lines of George Orwell's famous line: He who controls the past, controls the future."

Although the Smithsonian belatedly received co-sponsoring offers from other Jewish organizations, its management opted to recast the Israeli lecture series without influence from sponsors. The famed national institution has not always backed away from controversy.

Several years ago, it was forced to cancel a contentious exhibit on the Enola Gay that was highly critical of the American attack on Hiroshima, and other shows have likewise presented a historical "counter-narrative," embracing what critic Heather MacDonald calls "the poisonous trends" of postmodern theory and identity politics.

Accused of one-sidedness, officials of the U.S.-based New Israel Fund claim that only a preliminary and incomplete draft of the speakers' list had been released, and blamed the conflict on "a fringe group of Jewish McCarthyites." The organization is planning a lecture series of its own.

Hollywoodism Premiere: Toronto-based director Simcha Jacobovici's latest film, Hollywoodism: Jews, Movies and the American Dream opens Feb. 6 for an open run at the Carlton Cinemas, Toronto. Based in part on a book by Neal Gabler, this riveting film demonstrates how a small group of Jewish immigrants from Eastern Europe took a technological novelty (moving pictures) and turned it into the most important new form of mass media of the 20th century. Jacobovici answers audience questions, Feb. 7 and 8.

Arts Briefs: Guitarist-pianist Brian Katz and clarinetist Martin Van de Ven put a fresh spin on klezmer classics, Tranzec Club, 292 Brunswick Ave., Feb. 8, 8 p.m. 410-3655.

The Koffler Centre School of Dance offers three outstanding summer programs in dance instruction. Information and registration, 636-1880, ext. 359 or 273.

Photographs by Cylla von Tiedemann and Andre Kertesz are displayed at the Jane Corkin Gallery, 179 John St., Suite 302, Toronto, Feb. 5 thru 28. 979-1980.

The Civic Light Opera Company proudly presents Annie Get Your Gun and Call Me Madam, Irving Berlin's two greatest hits together in concert with a cast of 20 performers. Mar. 12 to 15, Yorkwoods Library Theatre. Adults $12.50. 421-1267.

The Voices of Showtime present Seems Like Old Times, a musical review of hits from the 1940s and 1950s. Leah Posluns Theatre, Feb. 18 and Feb 22, 2 p.m. Adults $18. 234-0129.

Music exudes Jewish spirituality

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

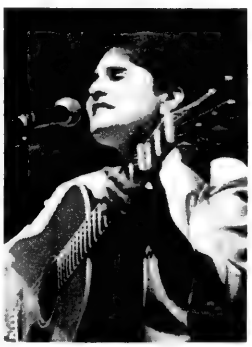
TORONTO — She's recorded more than a dozen albums and CDs since the late 1970s and her concert at New York's 2,800-seat Carnegie Hall last September was a triumphant sell-out.

Still, Debbie Friedman acknowledges that her popular style of musicianship, which combines Jewish spirituality with a 1960s folk-music sensibility, has yet to spark a fire within the Canadian Jewish community.

If past performances are any indicator, however, that's likely to change once she appears in concert at Toronto's Convocation Hall this Saturday evening

Exuding a strong, exuberant sense of Jewish spirituality and what she describes as a "self-healing" approach to life, the 44-year-old New York-based musician has been known for getting audiences up on their feet, just as they did at Carnegie Hall.

"I'm not into glitz and fame," she says. "I'm into helping Jews lose their feeling of alienation and move into a sense of comfort and pride with their tradition. There have been trouble spots with that tradition, especially for women, but the intrinsic value of the tradition can really help one live a meaningful life. That's what I'm after. I'm after meaning in a world that doesn't spend a lot of time thinking about meaning."



Debbie Friedman

Friedman, who plays guitar but composes on a piano, performs with a keyboard player, bassist and drummer. According to Billboard, her music reflects "a decidedly folk style that has been influenced by the likes of Peter, Paul & Mary, Joan Baez, Judy Collins and Melissa Manchester."

She has been called "Reform Judaism's answer to Shlomo Carlebach" for her ability to unite audiences of all denominations and ages. Two of her prayer songs, Mishebeyrach and Lekhi Lekh, have become standards at numerous Reform temple youth group services and spiritual healing services throughout North America.

There are few Jewish schools in North America where at least one Friedman song has not been sung. Born in Utica, N.Y., Friedman grew up in St. Paul, Minn., where her rabbi was W. Gunther Plaut, now rabbi emeritus of the Holy Blossom Temple in Toronto.

She has penetrated the popular culture to the extent that one of her songs for children, Aleph Beit, was featured on a Barney the Dinosaur video. Barney also sang her I Am A Latke on TV. Her 1989 CD, And You Shall Be A Blessing, is her best-

Museum illuminates untold stories of Florida Jews

By NANCY WIGSTON
Special to The CJN

MIAMI — A few blocks away from trendy Ocean Drive in the heart of Miami's newly fashionable South Beach, you can find a fascinating world of Jewish history.

The old Beth Jacob Synagogue at 301 Washington Ave. – now the Sanford L. Ziff Jewish Museum of Florida – offers a treasure trove of memorabilia that illuminates the untold stories of Floridian Jews.

This 1936 building was designed by Art Deco architect Henry Hohauser. Exquisitely restored just two years ago, the former synagogue is not only an architectural jewel shining with 76 stained glass windows, seven Art Deco chandeliers and a newly refurbished Moorish copper dome, it is also the permanent home to a record of the Florida Jewish experience, called Mosaic.

The Mosaic collection is the result of the efforts of the many volunteers who scoured the state in the mid-1980s, gathering family photos, artifacts and oral histories. With over 6,000 items, it is at once charming and informative.

Everyone knows the Jewish presence in Florida is solely a post-World War II phenomenon, right? Wrong. Jews first settled here in 1763. True, there were only three, who came after Spain ceded the territory to the British following the French and Indian War. But communities soon took root.

A prosperous Sephardi from St. Thomas purchased 60,000 acres to start a Jewish colony in central Florida in 1819. His son, David Levy Yulee, brought Florida into statehood, serving as its first senator (and was the first Jew to serve in the U.S. Congress).

40,000 Israelis live here

The Mosaic project identified nearly 50 families who have lived in Florida for over 100 years.

Another little-known fact: Fort Myers was named after Col. Abraham Myers, a West Point graduate and quartermaster for the fort in the Indian wars during the mid-1800s.

In one corner of the museum, a lighted map traces patterns of Jewish emigration. Points of origin in Scandinavia, Europe, Russia, the Middle East, the Caribbean and South America surround the Florida peninsula. As visitors watch, a population thermometer grows. Starting with the three 18th-century Jews, it crests at 800,000 in 1996; then the lights explode like fireworks.

Florida's Jews deserve to celebrate. In spite of religious discrimination lasting well into the current century, the community flourished and prospered.

"Why," asks a Venezuelan tourist, "were Jews not allowed to settle north of Fifth Street?"

Anita, our guide, explains: "A powerful Miami real estate man was anti-Semitic, and he enforced this rule."

Over time, as the Jewish population grew, "restricted" policies proved unenforceable. South Florida became a major training ground for American troops in World War II (where Floridian Jews had their share of soldier-heroes) and a population boom followed. When MD veterans were told that Jewish doctors weren't welcome at Dade County Hospital, they founded Mt. Sinai in 1946.

Although it is candid about the difficulties encountered because Jews suffered along with other immigrants as their numbers increased, the museum devotes most of its space to a celebration of Floridian Jewish life.

Much of Miami's American Jewish population has moved northward. But newcomers continue to arrive. Ten thousand Cuban Jews have settled in Miami and 40,000 Israelis now make the sunshine state their home.

Volunteering at the museum during my visit is Eva, who admits that sometimes she misses her "beautiful city" of Leningrad.

I ask the obvious question: Why did she come? Her answer is just as obvious: For my children. She smiles. Like multitudes of Sephardim and Ashkenazim before her, Eva happily calls Florida her new home.

"Debbie Friedman is the person who created the concept of Jewish music in an American context," says Moishe Rosenfeld, her New York-based agent. "It's not klezmer, it's not Eastern European, it's not Israeli, it's not Moroccan – but it's richly Jewish and its sensibilities derive from contemporary American folk music. The fusion of the two is very effective."

Sponsored by the Ontario Brotherhood of Reform Judaism, Friedman's Feb. 7 concert begins 8 p.m. at Convocation Hall. Tickets ($25 in advance and $30 at the door) are available through Ticketmaster, 870-8000; the Holy Blossom Temple, 789-3291; or via the Web site [www.magic.ca/~roger4].

Business Profile

Inventor Wayne Fromm proves:

You can make a good living playing with toys

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Toy inventor Wayne Fromm says he saved many of his favorite toys from his childhood because he thought it would be "neat" to keep them for his children.

As it turned out, the electric racing car he got for his fifth birthday and his collection of toy soldiers were never a hit with his 10-year old daughter Sage, his only child.

But she was thrilled with the talking mirror her father created for the Disney movie Beauty and the Beast. And so were thousands of other kids. More than one million of these talking mirrors were sold worldwide.

The mirror, which replicates the actual voices of the film's main characters, is one of 20 patented children's products Fromm, 43, has invented for leading toy companies such as Crayola, Irwin and Mattel.

"I have had several toys that have surpassed the one million unit mark," Fromm says.

This past holiday season he had three new children's products in stores across North America. A children's slide projector, a teddy bear with a tie-dye kit and a magic mirror featuring the Sailor Moon TV series characters were marketed respectively by Crayola, Tyco and Irwin.

It's unique for a Canadian to be inventing products for such large U.S. companies, because they usually don't usually deal with outsiders, the Toronto-born Fromm told The CJN in a recent interview at Video Invasion, the Bathurst Street arcade he owns.

A key player in the Toronto arcade business for more than 20 years, Fromm at his peak owned and operated some 400 pinball and electronic video games before shifting his focus to the toy business eight years ago.

He says he learned to fix every single electronic game so that he would not need to depend on repairmen. He later applied his talent for tinkering to designing toys, successfully adapting the technology of the talking pinball games to the Beauty and the Beast mirror, one of his earliest inventions.

He stresses that to successfully market inventions one needs business savvy. He coined the term inventorpreneur to describe himself. "If I was just an inventor I would have been exploited."

Fromm claims his entrepreneurial skills equipped him for the complex negotiations involved in licensing and other issues relating to toys, a business he characterizes as cutthroat.

"The assumption is that the video game industry is rough but you're actually dealing with gentlemen. Ironically, in the toy industry, you have to watch your back at all times so someone won't steal your idea."

Fromm traces his entrepreneurial roots to his experience running the Centre Theatre (formerly the Dutchess) at Markham and Dundas streets as a revue theatre. The building, which was sold in 1977, had belonged to his late father Leonard, owner of the Pro-Bowl chain of bowling alleys.

When the projectionists began to make what he considered to be unreasonable wage demands for overtime, Fromm fought and succeeded in getting his projectionist licence, he says. "I learned at an early age not to be held hostage by any employee."

This philosophy spurred him to learn how to repair all his own pinball and video games, he adds.

He bought his first pinball machine in 1977, the year Ontario's 20-year ban on pinball was lifted. He became an expert at running and fixing the machines and kept increasing the number of games he owned. Many were located at his father's bowling centres.

Fromm was at the right place at the right time when electronic video games hit the market in 1979 and "revolutionized the industry," he says. "I was there before the boom."

He was one of the first people to bring large numbers of these games to Toronto when they were in very high demand. As an established pinball operator, he had easy access to suppliers of these games, he says. "We couldn't get them in fast enough."

In 1980, Fromm established the first Video Invasion, North York's largest video arcade. Located at Wilson Heights and Sheppard Avenue, the arcade became a hub for suburban high school kids, he says.

A year later, he set up a second location on Bathurst Street north of Lawrence. But when he encountered opposition from more than 5,000 local residents and their political representatives, he literally had to fight city hall to open the arcade.

And while he won the legal battle, he ultimately lost the arcade war, because the city ended up passing new bylaws severely restricting the number of arcades, he says.

He was only able to expand his operation by locating machines in restaurants and bowling alleys that had pre-existing rights to house those games and by taking over an existing east-end arcade.

The sudden death of his father 8½ years ago impelled Fromm to re-evaluate his life, and turn inward, he says. "I was pulled more from within in terms of creativity. I wanted to be creative." He eventually reduced his stake in the arcade business to a single location.

In 1989, he came up with the concept of a faxable birthday greeting and was encouraged to market the card by then-Video Invasion manager, Marni Ugar, now Fromm Toys' creative director.

To that end, he attended a stationery and gift trade show in New York. There he recalls being struck by the number of people flocking to a booth selling a bubble pendant, designed as a fashion accessory.

A hunch that the pendant could be marketed as a children's product prompted Fromm's foray into the toy business. He says he contacted Disney's New York office – he had absolutely no experience in licensing – and pitched a Mickey Mouse version of the pendant.

That division turned down the idea, but steered him to the Los Angeles office, which handles film and television licensing. After three months of calling, he says, he learned the newly opened Disney stores were looking for unique products for the film, The Little Mermaid.

He flew to Los Angeles with a prototype of The Little Mermaid pendant and nailed an order for 10,000 units. "That was my entry to Disney. It was good timing. The Disney Stores don't take new submissions any more."

With six months to get the pendants to the stores – his deadline was June 1991 – Fromm cut his teeth as a toy supplier, learning the business by the seat of his pants, he says. "I didn't know anything about die-cutting or mould making or blister packaging. I worked 20-hour days."

And he notes there were many complications in the process: The bubble bottles, made and packaged in Taiwan, leaked when they were air-shipped to the United States; he had trouble finding the right glue to stick on the labels; and black soap sediment appeared in some of the bottles.

Eventually Disney allowed Fromm to sell the pendant directly to Canadian retailers and to expand sales in the United States through an American distributor. He says he sold some 500,000 units in total, but his success was marred by a royalty dispute with Disney.

Out-powered by this industry giant as Disney played hard ball around licensing, Fromm says the experience led him to devise a strategy for dealing with major league corporate players. He now manufactures his inventions and sells them to toy distributors who take care of the licensing and marketing.

"I leave that headache for others. I enjoy the nuts and bolts of creating a product more than anything."

Technion building robots to aid surgeons

TORONTO — Technion researchers are building robots that will be able to assist surgeons in knee-replacement operations and laparoscopic surgery (where miniaturized instruments are inserted through small incisions instead of operating through a large incision).

The robots will help surgeons to achieve more accurate results, thus improving the medical treatment.

"Knee-replacement surgery involves replacing the damaged knee with an artificial implant," says Prof. Moshe Shoham, head of the research team at the Palm Beach Industrial Robotics Laboratory, at the Technion Faculty of Mechanical Engineering.

"The success of the surgery, is determined by how optimally the implant is inserted. The computerized robot can prepare the bone much more accurately that the human hand. Lab experiments where a robot treats a bone-model have shown the feasibility of such an operation." To date, surgeons at medical centres in the United States and Germany are using robots to prepare the thigh-bone for hip-replacement operations only.

The Technion researchers along with Dr. Moshe Roffman, head of the Orthopedics Department at the Carmel Hospital in Haifa are now building a smaller, specialized robot to be used in operation rooms, .

Robots can be of assistance in cases of laparoscopic surgery, where the surgeon's miniaturized instruments are inserted through small incisions in the abdominal wall to perform such operations as removing a gall-bladder. Existing robots are being used in laparoscopies only to hold the camera that is inserted into the abdomen.

Today, laparoscopic surgeries can be performed using lasers, in which the robot can hold the somewhat awkward laser-laparoscope, while the surgeon uses a joystick to operate it. The robot follows the surgeon's hand, enabling him to obtain better and more accurate results. This version of a robot is also being built at the Technion in collaboration with Dr. Shmuel Goldberger of the Meir Hospital in Kfar Sava.

"Robots are not replacing human hands in surgery, nor will they in the future," Shoham says. "They, however, will enhance the procedure accuracy compared to the human hand, and will serve as the surgeon's third hand. The implications of this research are far-reaching. We will be able to employ the orthopedics robot in high-risk surgery, such as spinal operations for connecting two vertebrae, while the laparoscopic robot can be improved so that the surgeon will be able to feel the changes of force applied during the operation as if it were his own hand operating." Shoham expects the robots to be ready for further experimentation within several months.

The multidisciplinary research is carried out in collaboration with Prof. Yehuda Charit of the Mathematics Faculty, and Dr. Gershon Alber of the Faculty of Computer Sciences, along with a team of Technion students.

New implant to treat prostate cancer

NEW YORK — An implant that treats metastasizing prostate cancer by suppressing the production of testosterone in men has been developed by Prof. Irving Spitz of Jerusalem's Shaare Zedek Medical Centre together with scientists from the Population Council in New York.

Prostate cancer is the first type of tumor proven to be connected to hormone production, Spitz said.

The implant contains a compound, histrelin, a synthetic form of the natural hormone LH-RH which controls the body's production of sex hormones. The delivery system via a hydrogel implant is the innovation, as histrelin has been around for some time. Implanting the 2.6 centimetre long capsule under the skin on the inner part of the arm is a simple procedure. The implant has been used in clinical studies on 34 patients. Granting approval for this new procedure from the United States Food and Drug Administration could take two years.

Until now, this type of prostate cancer has been treated by castration or quarterly injections of testosterone suppressors, which are painful and inconvenient.

Spitz, who heads Shaare Zedek's hormone research institute, conducted a study of the implant, along with Dr. Amitsur Farkas, who heads the medical centre's urology department, and Prof. Raphael Catane, who heads the oncology institute. The implant is also being tested at Cornell University and the University of Salzberg.

Israel & the Jewish World

Four faulty assumptions in current Iraq, U.S. standoff

By SHLOMO GAZIT
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

Israel, the United States and the entire world are once again training their gaze on Baghdad. The key to the future lies with four faulty calculations. If these are not handled carefully, they are liable to lead to bad decisions and unwanted complications.

OPINION

• What is the Iraqi tyrant's motive? It is a mistake to view Saddam Hussein as a lunatic acting irrationally. Saddam's thinking is quite rational and serves his own purposes as he defines them.

The explanation provided by the Israeli media for his actions – a fierce struggle for survival – is inadequate, since no external threat has endangered either his regime or him personally since Desert Storm in 1991. The only threat to his life comes from the possibility of a domestic assassination attempt, and indeed, he is doing his utmost to prevent any such attack.

Saddam is motivated by his desire for Iraq to remain a regional power. For this, he needs the non-conventional weapons he has been manufacturing and stockpiling, as well as the lifting of the crippling economic sanctions imposed on his country for the last seven years.

Saddam has made repeated efforts to cancel the UN supervision in Iraq; a change of attitude in the world's capitals would halt the sanctions or at least modify them in his favor.

• What are the goals of the United States? Washington is mortified because the military mission it headed seven years ago achieved its objectives only partially: The dictator has not destroyed all his weapons and missile launchers.

Given the situation, America will suffer a humiliating defeat if the UN inspectors are forced to leave Iraq and the economic sanctions are revoked.

For the United States, the most feasible and realistic goal is to insist on continued sanctions and the UN presence in Iraq, for as long as Saddam remains in power.

• What are the limitations of using military force? Faced with Saddam Hussein's insolent demands, a united Congress and American public opinion are calling loudly for a military attack that will inflict painful punishment on Iraq, but the White House decision-makers would do well to weigh the limitations of military force with great care. Any attempt to send a military task force into Iraq with the mission of conquering Baghdad and eliminating its tyrant would not be feasible; it is likewise unthinkable that the United States would employ non-conventional weapons against Iraq.

Under these conditions, the United States is powerless to destroy Saddam's hidden stores, where he develops, manufactures and amasses weapons; neither can the United States rely on its bombers to target Saddam and eliminate him. Finally, the United States cannot risk having the media broadcast the horror of wounded and homeless Iraqi civilians.

• Does Israel face any threat? There is a great difference between 1991 and today. Seven years ago, Saddam had an account to settle with Israel because Israel had wiped out Baghdad's nuclear reactor 10 years earlier and left him with a burning desire for revenge. He hoped to provoke Israel into retaliating against his missile offensive, which he believed would prompt the Arab members of the American-led military coalition to back out and disable the American initiative.

We are already familiar with Saddam's style – he makes no secret of his intentions. While he spoke quite openly seven years ago of setting fire to half of Israel, now there is no mention whatsoever of Israel.

Let us recall that Saddam's demand for calling off UN supervision and lifting the sanctions against Iraq is based on his declaration that Iraq's stockpiles of non- conventional weapons have been destroyed; he would be making a grave error by exposing himself publicly as a liar and proving the United States justified in insisting that the supervision and sanctions continue.

What are the operative conclusions? First, that Israel should not panic for no reason. At the same time, we should refrain from expressing any threat or provocation toward Iraq as long as Israel is not in danger. Second, the United States should not take military action unless it can guarantee unconditional success; the United States would be wiser to concentrate on maintaining – and even deepening – the sanctions.

Alleged war criminal on way out

Maciukas, a resident of St. Léonard, was accused last July of hiding his membership in the 12th Lithuanian Battalion, first known as the Second Auxiliary Police (Schutzmannschaften) Battalion, and in the German air force, in order to enter Canada in January 1948. He became a Canadian citizen in 1956.

The battalion was a volunteer liquidation unit operating in Lithuania and Belarus and set up by the Lithuanian police in tandem with the Nazis between 1941 and 1944 to kill Jews, Gypsies, partisans and suspected Communists.

Silverstone said that like Csizsik-Csatary, Maciukas might choose to leave Canada voluntarily before he is actually deported. Deportation could see Maciukas sent back to his last previous country of residence, Lithuania, while leaving on his own accord would allow him a potential greater choice of countries to go to.

CJC, however, would prefer to see deportation hearings proceed since it would prevent Maciukas from ever returning to Canada, Silverstone said, even though he saw that as an unlikely scenario in any case.

Maciukas was the 12th among a list so far of 14 alleged Nazi collaborators Ottawa has launched denaturalizations proceedings against in Federal Court since 1995. Three of the 14 – Antanas Kenstavicius, Joseph Nemsilla and Erichs Tobiass – died before their cases were adjudicated.

The quickened pace has been part of an effort by the federal Ministry of Justice and the Justice Department's War Crime's Unit to respond to persistent complaints from the Jewish community that Ottawa has spent 50 years dragging its heels on the issue and provided safe haven for hundreds of suspected war criminals because their leanings were anti-Communist.

Last September, the head of the unit, Paul Vickery, told a local Jewish community audience that Ottawa was now being very serious in its efforts, with Canadian deportation cases being launched at the same pace as the unit's American counterpart, the Office of Special Investigations (OSI).

Last December, the war crimes unit hired the OSI's former director, Neal Sher, as a "special advisor."

Outdoor club targets Jewish couch potatoes

Speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee.

– Job 12:8

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Among the objectives of the Mosaic Outdoor Club of Southern Ontario (soon to be the Mosaic Jewish Outdoor Club of Southern Ontario) is to get you off your tuches.

The club aims to counter the image of Jews as being sedentary and skittish when it comes to the outdoors. If Jews don't hunt or fish, as Jackie Mason tells us, they probably don't pitch tents, canoe, rock climb or hike.

Wrong, at least gauged by the popularity of the Mosaic Club. In just six months, the non-profit group has signed up, solely through word of mouth, 180 outdoorsy types who get together for a variety of activities, and to commune with nature.

Members, ranging in age from 22 to their late 60s, go hiking, biking, canoeing, camping and even stargazing, says club president Danny Zehavi, an avid cyclist and camper who once hiked down the Grand Canyon in the middle of winter.

While the club does provide a social setting for Jews to meet, it's primarily geared to adults who love the outdoors, says Zehavi, a 31-year-old engineer who lives in Waterloo. The club fosters the development of outdoor knowledge and respect for Mother Nature.

But what makes an outdoor club Jewish?

"We try to foster a sense of community and an appreciation for the environment, all in a Jewish context," he says.

Judaism, he adds, has much to say about enjoying nature while respecting it, and keeping the world clean.

Club secretary Sam Lewkowicz, 43, says he once lit Shabbat candles on a rock while on a canoe trip in northern Ontario.

And all food packed for trips is vegetarian (and freeze dried).

The Mosaic network of Jewish outdoor clubs began in Colorado a decade ago. There are 20 chapters across the United States and one in Jerusalem. The southern Ontario group is the first in Canada.

So far, members here have trekked through Credit Provincial Park, hiked down the Rouge River Valley in Scarborough, rock climbed at the Toronto Climbing Academy, biked from Keswick to Jackson's Point, canoed around the Toronto Islands, camped out in Algonquin Park and skated at Harbourfront.

Cross-country skiing is offered almost every Sunday through the winter.

It's not for the faint of heart, but couch potatoes are more than welcome. "We rough it," smiles Zehavi, "but not too much."

Activities can range from an afternoon, right up to three-day canoe trips.

Future events include orienteering (learning to get around in the bush solely by compass and map), scheduled for Feb. 8; and a winter camping orientation, tentatively slated for March 1.

The club has feelers out for a camping trip in Frontenac Provincial Park at the end of March.

For information, contact the Mosaic hotline at 416-280-6407 or on the Internet at [www. mosaics. org/toronto].

NFL eyeing Israel

By SIMON GRIVER
Special to The CJN

JERUSALEM — The National Football League (NFL) is planning to expand its exposure in Israel.

NFL Israel was established recently in order to introduce American football to the Jewish state. Like most of the world, Israel is soccer-mad, but the NFL is confident it can generate enough interest among players and spectators to make the American game economically viable in Israel.

NFL Israel has worked out a 10-year game plan that is as strategically meticulous as a two-minute drill. In the first phase, sponsorship, promotional and broadcasting deals are being put in place. At the same time, 60,000 high school students will learn to play the game: the Amal vocational training high school network will give American football classes to 40,000 of its students, and Israel Radio's Reshet Gimmel, together with the McDonald's hamburger franchise, has recruited some 20,000 youngsters for American football courses around the country.

In the second phase, one of the NFL's leading teams — the New England Patriots — is committed to playing an exhibition game against another NFL squad at Israel's national soccer stadium in Ramat Gan within the next two years. Furthermore, Israeli interest in American football will be stimulated by live weekly broadcasts of a major NFL match with Hebrew commentary on a local television station.

Within a decade, it is hoped that Israel will have its own professional team — which will compete in the NFL's world league — comprised mainly of native-born stars who have graduated from the current high school program.

The NFL has targeted Israel as part of its plan to invest in the development of the game throughout Europe, the Far East, Latin America, Australia and New Zealand.

The Inside Back

The full extent of diplomatic immunity

By JONATHAN SHIFF

The Canadian Embassy rented a home in Israel to house the ambassador. When the parties came to a disagreement, and the landlord sued the embassy, the Canadian government claimed diplomatic immunity. Canadians who take pride in their country's reputation for law-abiding behavior and good manners may have been shocked by the tactics, but lawyers found great interest in the legal issues which arose as the case made its way into the Supreme Court (Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada v. Sheldon Edelson and et al).

It is well known that countries and their diplomats enjoy immunity from most court proceedings in their host countries. This is primarily a way to protect diplomats from persecution that might interfere in their duties, and is also perceived as a form of respect for the foreign country's sovereignty, as if it were unseemly to drag a foreign government into the host state's courts.

Unfortunately, this privilege can be abused, and there have been many stories about diplomats who commit heinous crimes and escape without being punished, hiding behind their immunity.

In the Israeli case, Supreme Court president Aharon Barak distinguished between various kinds of immunity – immunity for the country versus immunity for the diplomats. The contract at issue was between the landlord and the foreign country – the government of Canada. The Canadian ambassador was not a party to the agreement but was acting as a representative of the Canadian government. Therefore, the question was whether the Canadian government was immune in this case to civil proceedings.

Barak ruled that the foreign government's immunity is not absolute, but is limited to certain instances. International law distinguishes between actions a government takes as a government (e.g. taxation, expropriations) and those actions it takes in the realm of private law, such as entering into various business transactions. In the latter case, international law does not grant the government immunity.

Naturally, the difficulty lies in deciding what kind of action is being scrutinized. The test requires examining its substance, not its goal. Thus, the fact that the lease was to house a diplomat does not convert it into an governmental act, because a lease is essentially a private business transaction.

This difference makes a lot of sense. Even if we believe that governments should not be accountable to foreign courts for actions they take as governments, there seems to be no good reason why a citizen of the host country should be left without any recourse if he or she enters into a contract with a foreign government. Not only would such an approach do harm to the ideas of equality and the rule of law, but would also have the practical effect of ensuring that people never entered into transactions with foreign governments.

Barak was of the opinion that foreign governmental immunity should be very limited, and recognized only clear cases. In this case, if the Canadian government broke the lease and did not make the payments the landlord had coming to him, the Israeli court was not going to leave its citizen without recourse while Canada hid behind its governmental immunity.

Even in the age of faxes and e-mail, when foreign leaders speak regularly by telephone, diplomats play an important role in the conduct of foreign affairs. States and their representatives should have a measure of protection from the whims and caprices of host countries and their legal systems. At the same time, states and diplomats must respect the laws and contractual obligations which apply to everybody else. It would appear that the Supreme Court of Israel struck a proper balance in this regard, even if Canadians might not be happy with the results.

About Life

Dear Ella,

Since this letter is anonymous, let me not beat around the bush. I hate my in-laws. They may seem very nice to the average person, but really they are nosy, manipulative, critical and demanding.

Sure, when you meet them, they smile and offer you a drink or something to eat, so my friends end up leaving my house believing that I've made a mountain out of a molehill. This makes my blood boil even more.

They live in the United States, so at least I don't have to see them all the time, but when they visit, which is every major holiday, they stay for a week, fill my kids up with sweets till they're bouncing off the walls, take over the cleaning of my house and have something nasty to say about everything. My husband just stands there like he's just had a lobotomy.

Any suggestions?

In-Laws Should be Out Lawed

Dear In-Laws Should be Out Lawed,

The key to making these visits work is mutual respect. Try to keep one thing in mind – when the in-laws come to visit, they are your children's grandparents and it is natural for them to want to spoil the kids. Your children need to bond with their grandparents and you can help make that happen. However, respect has to work both ways.

First thing, get your husband onside. You can't fix this alone, nor should you. Tell him these are his parents and therefore you would appreciate his support when they criticize the home that the two of you have made for yourselves and your children.

Secondly, when things get out of line, stop them in their tracks. Take your in-laws aside and tell them you prefer to do things this way not that. They may be insulted at first, but if you say it nicely and not accusingly then you've done nothing wrong. You might even try explaining why you prefer doing something a certain way, like "I prefer the kids not have anything to eat before their dinner, or they won't be hungry." Don't be so "fahitzed" or impatient and don't have your back up before they walk in the door.

Next time they visit, psych yourself up and change your attitude. With a little respect, understanding and support you can keep control of your home and even enjoy the family get-togethers. The effort you put into it will be worth it.

Britain makes case for attack

Saddam's inventory detailed

By DOUGLAS DAVIS
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

LONDON — Britain last week presented a comprehensive and compelling case for military action aimed at forcing Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to allow UN weapons inspectors unrestricted access to search for weapons of mass destruction.

In a nine-page document, the Foreign Office detailed the inventory of chemical and biological weapons that the UN inspectors have destroyed and the lethal quantity of non-conventional weapons that Saddam is suspected of continuing to conceal.

Britain's foreign secretary, Robin Cook, described the document as "a tale of repeated deception," adding: "Anyone who does not grasp the gravity of this issue should read it."

According to the document, the

J.B. Salsberg dies

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Joseph Baruch (J.B.) Salsberg – Zionist, Yiddishist, tireless raconteur and a giant in Canadian Jewish history – died here Feb. 8 of natural causes. He was 95.

Few figures on the Jewish scene loomed as large and legendary as Salsberg. Those who knew him from a distance saw a fighter for workers' rights, a maverick Ontario MPP and a popular speaker and writer. (He was also a longtime CJN columnist.)

Tireless advocate for workers

Those fortunate enough to have known him up close encountered a courtly and utterly charming man, whose impressively bushy eyebrows would rise with every dry Yiddish bon mot, which he usually followed with a small shrug. A real character, in the best sense. And among the last of a breed.

He was born in Poland in 1903 and brought to Canada by penniless immigrants at age 11. Two years later, young Joe was toiling in the sweatshops for $3 a week, an experience that would lead him to a lifelong commitment to working people.

On Spadina Avenue, Salsberg achieved near-icon status for his doggedness in helping garment workers achieve fair wages and working conditions. Professionally, he was an insurance executive, but it was politics he loved. He served as a Toronto alderman in 1938 and 1943. From 1943 to 1955, he was the only communist member of the Ontario legislature, enduring the Cold War stigma that went with the job.

An ardent Zionist, he renounced communism in 1957 after a trip to Moscow that opened his eyes to the full extent of Soviet anti-Semitism.

The funeral was held on Tuesday. A full obituary will appear in next week's CJN.

The News in Brief

CANADA

RA Convention

TORONTO — Rabbi Philip Scheim of Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation will be the first Canadian to chair the Rabbinical Assembly convention when the Conservative group meets next week in Jerusalem. Three hundred and fifty rabbis are expected to attend the annual event, which will include opportunity for dialogue among Conservative, Orthodox and Reform rabbis.

ISRAEL

Rabin Memorial Defaced

JERUSALEM — Vandals spray-painted messages on a Jerusalem memorial to Yitzhak Rabin that call Rabin a traitor and a murderer.

Kach said it was retaliating against proposed legislation to remove a memorial at the grave of Dr. Baruch Goldstein, who murdered 29 Muslim worshippers at the Tomb of the Patriarchs in Hebron in 1994.

Israel to Block Construction

JERUSALEM — Israel's Interior Ministry last week approved plans by an American land developer to build 132 apartments for Jews in predominantly Arab eastern Jerusalem.

But a spokesperson for Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the government would block the move because it could exacerbate tensions with the Palestinians.

No Pageant

JERUSALEM — Israel has called off plans to host this year's Miss Universe pageant.

In canceling its plans, the Tourism Ministry cited the high costs of staging the event.

The pageant had been slated to be held at the Red Sea resort of Eilat this spring.

Dialogue Favored

JERUSALEM — Iran's vice-president says she supports a dialogue between the Israeli and Iranian people.

In what is apparently the first interview an Iranian political leader had given to an Israeli newspaper since the 1979 Islamic revolution, the Yediot Achronot daily quoted Masoumeh Ebtekar as saying, "I support a dialogue between the Iranian and Israeli people, but it is still too early to speak of a political dialogue between Israel and Iran."

WORLD

New Synagogue

DRESDEN — After 60 years, the city of Dresden is getting a new synagogue to replace the one destroyed on Nov. 9, 1938, during Kristallnacht.

The new shul will sit on the same spot where the old one burned to the ground.

Nazi Loses Citizenship

WASHINGTON — A federal appeal court in the United States has confirmed the citizenship revocation of an Illinois man who helped massacre Jews during World War II, the Office of Special Investigations announced recently.

The court found that Bronislaw Hajda, 73, served as an armed guard at the SS Training Camp in Trawniki and in the Treblinka death camp. It also found that he participated in the July 1944 massacre of the last 300 to 700 Jewish prisoners at Treblinka in the face of the advancing Red Army. Afterwards, he served in the SS Streibel Battalion.

Farrakhan Expelled

MOSCOW — Authorities in southern Russia have expelled Louis Farrakhan.

Officials in the autonomous region of Dagestan expelled a delegation of foreign Muslims led by the Nation of Islam leader, saying Farrakhan and his group lacked the proper documents.

But the leader of the Union of Muslims of Russia, an umbrella group that invited Farrakhan to Russia, said the expulsion was politically motivated and was due to the fact that Dagestani authorities "erroneously described Farrakhan as an extremist."

Israeli Views on Pluralism

NEW YORK — The results of a new survey of Israeli attitudes about religious pluralism are not having the effects intended by the Orthodox group that commissioned it.

In fact, the results are being welcomed by leaders of the Reform and Conservative movements, who are hailing the findings as a vindication of their views of the religious pluralism controversy.

A study of 500 adult Israeli Jews was conducted Jan. 22 by the Gallup Institute/Israel for the Orthodox Union (OU), a New York-based organization that represents centrist Orthodox congregations and concerns. The poll had a margin of error of a little more than four percent.

Those responding to the OU poll were asked 16 questions. The answers to just six of them were made public by the OU, which then tried to withdraw one of the findings from its news release because it was "confusing," said the OU.'s president, Dr. Mandell Ganchrow.

That finding was that nearly half of those surveyed said there can be only one standard regarding conversions to Judaism, while 43 percent feel that more than one standard is acceptable.

Officials of the liberal movements suggested that the finding was revoked because it didn't support the OU's claims that the liberal movements are virtually unknown and unwanted in the Jewish state.

Freestanding Holocaust museum seen as ideal

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Canada's national Jewish organizations have voiced qualified support for a controversial Holocaust gallery in Ottawa's Canadian War Museum. But they all say they're prepared to compromise with Canadian veterans who are opposed to it.

As well, Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) and B'nai Brith Canada (BBC) say the Jewish community wasn't formally consulted about plans to add a permanent Holocaust display at the Canadian War Museum.

Both groups, as well as the Jewish War Veterans of Canada (JWV), made submissions last week to the Senate subcommittee on veterans affairs, which is studying the $12-million renovation of the war museum. The organizations appeared just days after a joint statement was issued, saying the museum was prepared to compromise with veterans opposed to having the Holocaust gallery in the war museum.

The statement, issued by the Canadian Museum of Civilization Corp., which oversees the Canadian War Museum, CJC, B'nai Brith and the Jewish war veterans, said "an alternative solution can be proposed," one that would "satisfy the needs of all parties."

The statement said that while the museum and the Jewish groups "have not abandoned our original proposal [to have the gallery inside the war museum], the Canadian Museum of Civilization Corp. is prepared to pursue other options to house a Holocaust gallery, which everyone agrees warrants a permanent exhibition."

Among the options discussed last week were having an independent, free-standing Holocaust museum somewhere in Ottawa, separate from the war museum. It's the route CJC and BBC prefer, but the Jewish war veterans prefer having such a display inside the war museum.

The whole affair seems to have blindsided Jewish officialdom. For months, the Canadian Museum of Civilization said it would satisfy the concerns of veterans – who argued that a Holocaust gallery would be out of place in the Canadian War Museum because the Holocaust was not part of Canada's World War II experience – but that plans for the 6,000-square-foot gallery would proceed.

However, last week's joint statement indicated that the museum bowed to pressure from veterans' groups.

Congress and B'nai Brith say that while the Jewish community was involved in the proposal (a fundraising committee was struck, for example), it was never formally drawn in.

"Canadian Jewish Congress has never lobbied the federal government for a permanent Holocaust exhibit" in Ottawa, CJC told the Senate. "CJC was not formally consulted" about the plans to put one in the war museum.

While Congress "enthusiastically endorses the establishment of a permanent Holocaust gallery in Ottawa," and is "comfortable" with the decision to put it in the refurbished war museum, it "always believed that a free-standing facility was the preferred option for a permanent exhibit in Ottawa."

Because the high costs indicated that such an option was not feasible, CJC endorsed the war museum plan.

Inclusion in war museum 'most feasible'

Congress tried to assuage concerns expressed by other groups, specifically members of the Ukrainian community, saying that a Holocaust exhibit in the war museum "would in no way diminish the horror of other such tragedies."

If an independent location cannot be provided, CJC said, the government should honor its original commitment and place the Holocaust gallery in the refurbished Canadian War Museum.

CJC said it does not agree with concerns expressed by veterans groups, saying a "logical and compelling" case can be made for including the gallery in the war museum. Canadian forces "directly confronted the outcome of the Holocaust" by participating in the liberation of death camps and defeating Nazism.

The controversy created by the whole issue is "regrettable," CJC added.

In its brief, BBC made clear that "the Jewish community did not ask for a Holocaust gallery. This proposal was made by museum authorities, not by the Jewish community."

The current proposal only has merit if the mandate of the Canadian War Museum is broadened to include public education on the causes and effects of war on civilians. If its mandate does not go beyond military history and artifacts, "we could not support placing a Holocaust gallery in it."

BBC says the "ideal" solution is to have a free-standing Holocaust museum in Ottawa, developed and funded by the federal government. It would also support a gallery under the auspices of the Museum of Civilization but located outside the war museum.

BBC said it would not accept having the gallery attached to the war museum, even with a separate entrance and identity – except as a temporary solution.

The Holocaust "must not become a political football," it said.

The Jewish War Veterans' National Commander, Sam Pasternack, said the gallery belongs in the expanded war museum. "How can Canadians comprehend the full context of World War II without learning of Hitler's Final Solution?" he asked.

He cited the Imperial War Museum in London, which has its own Holocaust exhibit, and which has been endorsed by Britain's foremost politicians and clergy members.

But Pasternack told The CJN his group is willing to compromise with other veterans and would endorse an independent Holocaust museum.

Pierre Pontbriand, a spokesperson for the Museum of Civilization, told The CJN that placing the Holocaust gallery inside the war museum is still the "most feasible" solution because of the huge costs of an independent building.

"In a perfect world, a stand-alone [museum] is very nice, but the reality is quite different."

Pontbriand said a free-standing Holocaust museum could cost as much as $50 million.

The CJC's Irving Abella said the Museum of Civilization "could have handled all this better."

DID YOU KNOW THAT MUTUAL FUNDS AND RRSP'S ARE NOT MUTUALLY EXCLUSIVE?

The variety of RRSP options available to all Canadians is truly remarkable.

These days, there is more talk about mutual funds than almost any other investment product. And for good reason: there are very few better long term strategies to choose from.

We recommend that you maximize your RRSP contribution every year throughout your working life, and we currently believe there are too many outstanding benefits to ignore including mutual funds in your RRSP strategy.

➤ Qualified management:

One of the greatest advantages you have with Mutual Funds is that they are managed by professional portfolio managers. The peace of mind alone is reason enough for many clients.

➤ Diversification:

There's no better long term strategy then to spread your risk as thinly as possible. But through portfolio diversification, certain obvious advantages come to light. You can maximize your foreign content RRSP's and optimize your higher risk holdings. This is often a daunting undertaking for private investors. We certainly recommend it be left to seasoned financial professionals.

➤ Convenience:

We find that there's really no investment easier to execute than mutual funds. Transfers, tracking and redemption are readily handled. In fact, you can transfer your RRSP investments between many different funds at any time. And you can contribute small amounts on a regular basis to suit your needs.

➤ Compare the returns:

Compared to GIC certificates and many other RRSP vehicles, Mutual Funds often outperform by as much as 20%, 30% or 40%. Branson closure to be delayed

By BEN ROSE

Staff Reporter

TORONTO —Because of the shortage of beds, Branson Hospital will stay open for at least two or three years beyond its scheduled closing of June, 1999.

"This is our top priority," said Debra Bloomfield, an official of North York General Hospital which is about to take over operation of Branson under a recommendation of the Ontario Hospital Restructuring Commission.

A formal agreement to switch Branson's operation is about to be signed, Bloomfield said. At that time, she said, a more definite date of Branson's closing may be made.

In the meantime Branson's emergency will remain closed at night though the possibility of re-opening it under the new agreement will be explored, she said.

Also on the hospital front, the heads of Mount Sinai Hospital and Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care were chosen by Premier Mike Harris to co-chair a task force to recommend ways of loosening the logjam of patients in emergency waiting for beds in Toronto.

"We think it's an acknowledgment that we're both considered respected institutions," said Ted Freedman, Mount Sinai president.

"It's an opportunity to look at the problem from both ends," said Stephen Herbert, president of Baycrest. The backup of patients in emergency is related to shortages in other hospital areas, he said.

"We wouldn't have taken on the job of the task force if we didn't think we could do something positive about it," said Freedman, in an exclusive CJN joint interview with Herbert.

Although their report may not be ready for a month or two, both told The CJN that they would not hesitate to recommend changes immediately to ease the blockage.

Both said the task force will include input from Community Access Centres which are being set up by the provincial government to coincide with the boundaries of the six municipalities which make up the new Toronto megacity.

Anti-Semitic incidents down for second year

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The number of anti-Semitic incidents reported across Canada dropped for the second year in a row in 1997, with 212 incidents coming to the attention of B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights, the agency reported last week.

Incidents of harassment and vandalism declined 13 percent compared to 1996 and was part of a "good news, bad news" scenario, said Rochelle Wilner, national chair of the League. While numbers decreased, several incidents were extremely destructive and were "serious cause for alarm," she said.

Campuses were vandalized, dozens of Jewish professors and students were targeted with "vicious anti-Semitic pamphlets" and key figures in the extremist right in Canada took their anti-Jewish campaign to the Internet, Wilner said.

Wilner delivered her prognosis at a news conference to announce the release of the 1997 Audit of Antisemitic Incidents, the League's annual report on racist attacks on Jews.

Wilner, Karen Mock, executive director of the League, and Frank Dimant, B'nai Brith's executive vice-president, summarized the conclusions of the report. They attributed the decline in reported incidents to several factors, including more effective policing, public anti-racist education and to the lack of leadership among racist groups.

Mock said Canada was seen internationally as as model in addressing the growth of racism through use of the law, community action and public education.

"Together, when we take a stand, we can get hatemongers to take cover," she said.

Only one in 10 anti-Semitic incidents is ever reported, "so we have only a fraction of the incidents that are out there," Mock said. In addition, the audit did not include data on Internet hate since it is impossible to quantify incidents on that medium, she said.

Swastikas deface home

Analysing the geographic distribution of anti-Semitic incidents, the audit found there were 98 reported incidents in Toronto, the most of any Canadian city but the same as the year before. That total comprised 46.4 percent of all incidents reported in Canada.

The number of incidents in Montreal dropped from 30 to 21 (10 percent of the total) while figures for Ottawa declined as well, from 27 to 25 incidents (12 percent).

Winnipeg reported 18 incidents in 1997, one more than the year before. That figure represents 8.5 percent of the national total of incidents even though the prairie city is home to only four percent of the country's Jewish population.

There were only seven reported incidents in Alberta and Saskatchewan while the number in British Columbia decreased from 23 in both 1995 and 1996 to 19 in 1997.

While the number of incidents was down, those that did take place were often frightening:

- A teen was assaulted and called a "dirty Jew" in a doughnut shop in Niagara Falls, Ont.
- In Winnipeg, three youths broke into a family's home and spray painted the floors, doors and walls with swastikas and "die Jews." Police arrested the youths.
- Polish skinheads assaulted a Jewish girl in Toronto. Two young offenders were charged in the case.

Farrakhan visit concerns CJC

TORONTO — Louis Farrakhan, the controversial leader of Nation of Islam, has scheduled a return visit to Toronto for Feb. 19.

Farrakhan, who last visited the city in 1996, is scheduled to speak at CNE Coliseum.

Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, is concerned that Farrakhan's rhetoric may violate section 319 of the Criminal Code: the wilful promotion of hatred against an identifiable group.

"We are heartened that Minister Farrakhan agreed to honor Canada's Criminal Code and stayed away from the explosive remarks during his first Canadian appearance in 1996," said Moshe Ronen, chair of CJC Ontario region. "But the minister's statements, since the Million Man March in Washington, continue to be filled with hurtful rhetoric aimed at Jews, Catholics and whites. I trust that Mr. Farrakhan will again honor his commitment to abide by Canadian law.

Louis Farrakhan

"We must remember, when the minister spoke in 1996 in Toronto on the second day of Rosh Hashanah, the Nation of Islam was selling books entitled The Jewish Onslaught and The Jews and Their Lies," Ronen added.

"We call upon law enforcement agencies to monitor the sale of such despicable publications and urge that local organizers transmit these concerns to Minister Farrakhan in Chicago prior to his visit."

Hobson seeks probe, sues justice department

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The former head of Canada's war crimes unit is calling for a "mini-commission" of inquiry to investigate his charges that political or bureaucratic interference prevented the unit from fulfilling its mandate of bringing Nazi war criminals to justice.

Bill Hobson said last week he hopes the law suit he initiated against several senior Justice Department bureaucrats and lawyers will prompt creation of an inquiry, perhaps headed by former justice Jules Deschenes. Deschenes headed an investigation into Nazi war criminals that in 1986 called for changes to Canada's criminal and immigration laws. Deschenes said 20 cases required urgent action and hundreds of others warranted further investigation.

Hobson suggested Deschenes could "come back and look at how things were implemented after his report."

He said he also was "looking for an apology to the Jewish community," as well as an apology to people like Arnold Fradkin (his deputy in the unit), who was treated "in a brutal fashion."

Hobson, who served as director of the unit from 1987 to 1990, has of late been one of its most outspoken critics. Last week he launched a law suit naming as defendants the attorney general of Canada, Bruce Macfarlane, Peter Kremer, John Tait, Yvan Roy, Kim Prost and John Sims. He claims they acted wrongly in their various positions connected to the unit by "negligently and intentionally inflict[ing] nervous shock and mental suffering" on him, as well as breaching a "fiduciary duty of loyalty" to him and of making "intentional misrepresentations to him."

Hobson said that as director of the unit and as a lead prosecutor in several cases, he followed the mandate set out by government ministers to pursue either a criminal or a denaturalization remedy. He pointed out that the unit launched criminal charges against Imre Finta and a denaturalization case (stripping a suspect of citizenship prior to deportation) against Jacob Luitjens within a short time of each other.

But unbeknownst to him, others in the unit were sabotaging that two-pronged approach by limiting their investigations to criminal charges. He said he could never get a straight answer from others in the unit as to why they weren't pursuing the denaturalization approach.

"My feeling was, there were people walking around the unit saying there would be only ever be two cases. They wanted to close files – close files," he said.

Hobson said he believed "someone from above had given them a message. They would not have treated me and Fradkin the way they did if they had not got a message."

Hobson said he recently received evidence that prompted the suit. The suit's allegations have not been proven in court.

In the Notice of Action filed in Ontario Court (General Division), Hobson claims that Tait "was involved in directions given to some lawyers in the unit to ignore both the government's mandate and Hobson's management and instructions consistent with the government's mandate."

Bill Hobson

Hobson goes on to claim that "Roy and Prost have recently stated publicly that 'had they been told to look at denaturalization, then it is a different story. They said this was not our focus; the mandate they had from the government was you prosecute these cases and nothing else.' Given the government's mandate filed in the House, how did they come to this position, as they had been told just the opposite by Hobson," the document states.

The Notice of Action claims "the decision to do nothing in respect of the denaturalization remedy was an abuse of authority given to members of the unit ... and at the very least obstructed the government's mandate and the recommendations contained in the Deschenes Commission reports."

Hobson claims that in his 1989 annual report, he recommended denaturalization cases be employed against suspects and that it wasn't until 1995 that the government adopted that approach, instituting three actions against individuals he had named six years before.

Hobson claims that as a result of the decision to focus solely on criminals matters, he spent many months abroad away from his family in the fruitless pursuit of evidence in cases that would never go forward. Hobson also claims he was "manipulated out of his position at the war crimes unit. As a result of this conduct, Hobson said he suffered nervous shock and mental suffering."

He is claiming $500,000 in punitive damages and unspecified general and special damages.

CJC urges redress of Japanese war atrocities

By PAUL LUNGEN
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Canadian Jewish Congress has joined a coalition of Canadian groups to press the Japanese government to apologize for wartime atrocities and to make restitution to the victims of those acts.

The ad hoc coalition also has come out in support of a Japanese professor who has fought a 33-year legal battle over a school text he authored that was screened by government officials to eliminate references to wartime atrocities. The group urges that young people be taught about Japanese army atrocities.

In addition to Congress, the group includes the National Association of Japanese Canadians· the Vancouver and Toronto Association for Learning and Preserving the History of World War II in Asia (ALPHA), supported by the National Council of Chinese Canadians; the Korean Women's Association of Western Canada; the August 15, 1945 Foundation; and the Filipino Veterans Association.

The group has undertaken several steps to try to convince Japan to acknowledge its wartime past. It has circulated a petition, addressed to Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto, which argues that "Japanese aggressions and criminal actions of the past must be made known...in order for Japanese children to become responsible participants in a democratic society, and for the promotion of world peace and human rights."

During the APEC conference held in Vancouver last November, the coalition wrote to Hashimoto urging him to redress the injustice done to victims of Japanese aggression during World War II. It also referred the prime minister to the Japanese court case involving Prof. Saburo Ienaga in which the Supreme Court awarded $3,400 in damages to the professor after government officials removed a reference in a school textbook to a Japanese Army germ warfare group, Unit 731.

The unit, Ienaga had written, killed 3,000 people in northern China. It conducted live experiments on civilians in which they were operated on without anesthetics, injected with diseases and left to die.

The coalition is also circulating a proposed letter that will be sent to Canadian parliamentarians, urging them to acknowledge in the House wartime Japanese atrocities. Such a move would "greatly promote racial harmony and stress the importance of world peace," the letter suggests.

The letter referred to the 60th anniversary of the Rape of Nanjing (Nanking) in which Japanese forces conducted "one of the most brutal massacres in the long annals of wartime barbarity...The Japanese army swept in to Nanjing and within weeks not only looted and burned the defenceless city but systematically raped, tortured and murdered more than 300,000 Chinese civilians. Amazingly, the story of this atrocity continues to be denied by the Japanese government."

Irwin Nest, executive director of Congress' Pacific region, said the letter is designed to sensitize Canadian politicians to wartime events in Asia.

Since being approached by ALPHA about a year ago, Congress has lent its support to its education efforts, Nest said. In an article he wrote for Ming Pao, a Canadian daily newspaper in Vancouver, Nest stated it is time Japan faced historical facts. He pointed to the efforts of German leaders to confront Germany's past and he suggested Japan should make similar efforts to preserve the memory of past events.

Reena eyes residence for older adults

By RON CSILLAG
Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Spurred by projections of an aging clientele, Reena has embarked on an ambitious plan to build a $1.5 million residence for developmentally disabled adults aged 55 and over.

Reena envisions a fully kosher, two-storey residence in Thornhill's Bathurst-Steeles area, for up to 16 older adults. Plans call for private or semi-private bedrooms, an elevator, communal living area, kitchen, leisure space and a garden.

Residents would go to day programs at Reena's new Battle Centre, about five minutes away by car.

It would be the first such facility in Canada, says Reena's executive director, Sandy Keshen.

Today, about one-third of Reena's 500 or so clients are over 50. By 2005, Keshen says, the ratio is expected to climb to 50 percent.

That's why Reena, and its building arm, Batay Reena, have launched an awareness and fundraising campaign for the residence, planned to be about 6,500 square feet. It will be modeled on the successful Elmridge program for well seniors.

Organizers hope to open the building in 18 months.

Many disabled adults still live with their own aging parents. Keshen says Reena has fielded concerns from the parents about what will happen to their children once they're gone.

"The major issue is their quality of life," Keshen explains. "There are issues of fragility, medical needs and dignity."

The developmentally disabled are not candidates for mainstream old age residences like Baycrest, she noted.

About half of Reena's clients live in residences. Keshen says a group home for older adults would free other resources and ease the organization's waiting list, currently at about 200.

Alex Eisen is chairing the fundraising campaign. Proceeds from Reena's annual dinner-dance, to take place June 22, will go toward the planned residence. Longtime volunteers Al and Faye Mintz will be honored.

CORRECTION

A most important case

Can Quebec unilaterally secede under the Constitution? Does international law give Quebec the right to secede? In a conflict between domestic and international law, which takes precedence?

These are the questions which the Supreme Court will begin deliberating next week on Feb. 16. To our mind, it is the most important case ever to have come before the highest court of our land. It will provide the legal parameters for the political tactics of the two sides, the federalists and the separatists, contending over the future of Canada.

There are some people, most notably of course all of the separatists, who claim that the court has no role whatsoever to play in deciding the fate of Canada, that "democracy," not law, is paramount in the question of Quebec's right to separate. As The CJN has written before, this is an absurd notion that rests for its justification on a false dichotomy between law and democracy, on a flimsy and ultimately dangerous definition of democracy that excludes the rule of law. Indeed, so contemptuous is the government in Quebec of the application of law to the possible dismemberment of Canada, that it has chosen not to appear before the Supreme Court.

Last week, however, the ranks of the legal exclusionists were joined by a small number of prominent federalists as well. Claude Ryan, the former leader of the Quebec Liberal party and Daniel Johnson, the current leader of the Quebec Liberal party, called a press conference to argue that the Supreme Court should not be deciding upon the legality of a unilateral declaration of independence by the Province of Quebec. Jean Charest, the leader of the federal Progressive Conservatives, similarly inveighed against the reference to the court.

Their interventions were regrettable. They diminish the collective strength and the unity of the federalist cause. Moreover, we believe their positions also to be substantively unsound. In a written statement Ryan maintained: "The court would act more wisely by referring back to the political actors the responsibility of finding democratic answers to the questions..." (Our emphasis)

Once again, we see resort to a flawed concept of democracy, one that appears to absent the rule of law and appears merely to be interchangeable with the term "political." But the two are not interchangeable. Surely, a "democratic" answer, by definition, requires inherently, rules and procedures and established norms for the peaceful and reasonable expression of the will of the people. If it is not expressed through a framework of established procedure and law, the will of the people is nothing more than a slogan and nothing less than a justification for rule by mob. That Ryan, Johnson and Charest have adopted this view is regrettable, but probably expedient for them, given the emotional and highly-charged circumstances of political engagement in Quebec on this issue.

But that the ranks of the legal exclusionists should have been joined so demonstrably in Quebec City last week by Gordon Wilson, the constitutional advisor to British Columbia, was nothing less than shallow, short-sighted and self-serving politicking. And it was fundamentally illogical. He was purporting to lobby for "a new model of Confederation," as expressed by the Globe and Mail, with the very forces who are sworn to dismantling Confederation. His efforts would have had far more credibility if, instead of seeking photo opportunities with the separatists on the virtual eve of the reference to the Supreme Court, he would have rather been seeking to build alliances with federalist forces, who actually believe in Confederation.

Whatever the decision by the court on the reference, the separatists will use it as the next tripwire in the campaign to inflame passions and to beat more fervently the drums of separation. Wilson's aid to their cause, is unseemly and unfortunate.

May God grant the justices of the court the understanding and the wisdom to render true and clear-sighted judgement, and may He bestow upon Canada's leaders an equal wisdom, to act, after the judgement of the court,with justice, fairness and courage.

German doctors were involved with Nazis

I read with interest Sheldon Kirshner's article (CJN, Jan. 22) on Nazi doctors. I agree that the complicity of the German medical profession in the Holocaust is not as well-recognized as it should be.

William Seidelman, a Toronto physician whose research forms the basis for Kirshner's article, suggests that virtually no one has conducted or is conducting research on this important topic. "Research along these lines is still in its infancy."

Without wishing to diminish the value of Seidelman's work, or to argue with his substantive conclusions, I would like to point out that a major book was published a decade ago on this topic. Robert Jay Lifton's The Nazi Doctors: Medical Killing and the Psychology of Genocide was published in 1986 by Basic Books (New York), and the 1988 paperback version of the book is still in print.

This book provides the definitive survey of the involvement of the German medical profession in the Nazi program of atrocities. Many of the examples cited by Seidelman in Kirshner's article were examined in Lifton's book, which also provided a nuanced interpretation of the steps through which the doctors' morals were corrupted. Anyone interested in this topic must consult Lifton's excellent book.

Wants English coverage of Sephardis

I am happy to note that The CJN (Montreal edition, Jan. 29) assigned the story that took place at the Centre communautaire juif winter camp to a journalist who covered the story in English. Although the incident does not highlight a positive event emanating from a Montreal Sephardi institution, the coverage is noteworthy in that it represents the first time an article concerning the Sephardi community has been accessible in English to CJN readers.

We hope that The CJN did not chose to cover these particular events in English because they contain an explosive and negative element. I am certain that journalists are aware of their responsibilities in covering events that concern every segment of our community. My hope is that this precedent will allow us, henceforth, to read news originating from Sephardi community institutions in English, as well as articles in French about other prominent Jewish community institutions. Our collective future and community must transcend language issues and reflect the richness of our diversity.

JF&CS does not endorse kosher food drive

Please be advised that Jewish Family and Child Service, with the support of UJA Federation of Greater Toronto, administers a financial assistance program that allows Jews in Toronto to live in dignity and honor, without needing food banks or soup kitchens.

As well, at Passover, the National Council of Jewish Women provides food baskets for needy Jews in our community.

Jewish Family and Child Service has not endorsed a specific kosher food drive, about which all synagogues and schools received a fax.

Lewinsky story was a no-no!

The CJN (Jan. 29) has printed many ridiculous articles in its day, but the piece on the Lewinsky family having a synagogue membership wins the prize for tasteless and inappropriate. Were your readers supposed to think Monica a shayna maydel because she went to Hebrew school? Face it, a woman who throws herself at a married man — no matter how good a job he has or how good he's been to the Jews and Israel — is not a nice Jewish girl. The "Is she or isn't she?" question should have been left to the same speculation as "Did he or didn't he?" Please spare us the indignities of such poor female role models. Next time find us a Jew to be proud of.

Tu b' Shvat has arrived

By KATY ALLEN
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

On the 15th day of the Hebrew month of Shvat, the New Year for trees is celebrated. According to Webster's Deluxe Unabridged Dictionary, a tree is "a woody, perennial plant with one main stem or trunk which develops many branches."

So, on Tu b'Shvat, we celebrate oak trees, maple trees, olive trees, fig trees and so on – except that the word tree has many more meanings and uses. In the same dictionary, tree is used in nearly 100 other contexts.

In the Bible, the Hebrew word for tree, eitz, occurs 109 times; the plural, eitzim is found an additional 28 times. A dictionary of biblical Hebrew indicates that eitz has almost as many uses and meanings as does the word tree in English.

So what exactly is celebrated on Tu b'Shvat?

Perhaps the tree of life. "And from the ground the Lord God caused to grow every tree that was pleasing to the sight and good for food, with the tree of life in the middle of the garden," says the Bible.

God banished Adam and Eve from the garden to prevent them from eating from the tree of life and living forever. What would it mean to celebrate a tree that gives everlasting life? Who lives forever? God? Only God? Perhaps a celebration of the tree of life is a celebration of God, of holiness, of the sacred.

The Bible is also the source of the familiar phrase in the Torah service liturgy: "She is a tree of life to those who grasp it, and whoever holds on to her is happy." Here, the "tree of life" is a figurative reference to the Torah, and one can therefore celebrate the Torah and all that is associated with it.

In Proverbs, "The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life." If we celebrate this tree of life, we celebrate both the righteous among us and the fruits of their labors – the effects of their righteousness upon us.

Another possibility: We could celebrate the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which God commanded Adam not to eat, saying, "Of every tree of the garden you are free to eat, but as for the tree of knowledge of good and bad, you must not eat of it; for as soon as you eat of it, you shall die."

Of course, Eve ate of the fruit, gave it to Adam who also ate of it; as a result, the two were banished from the garden. How can we celebrate a tree that caused us the pain of living outside paradise? One answer might be that since we do live in this world, our ability to distinguish between good and evil is critical to our survival – physically, emotionally and spiritually.

The word "tree" also has some less pleasant usages in the Bible. It was a "tree' upon which Haman was hanged. The word can also mean "pole," and when Joseph is in prison and tells the baker the meaning of his dreams, he says, "In three days, Pharaoh will lift off your head and impale you upon a pole (eitz)."

Do we want to celebrate gallows and poles on which heads have been impaled? We have no problem celebrating the demise of Haman – we do it every year at Purim – but we might not want to celebrate the deaths of all whose heads were impaled upon poles. Many were certainly criminals, but why would we celebrate the death of the baker?

Possibilities also arise from modern uses of the word "tree." A family tree turned upside down shows how a single set of ancestors branches out and multiplies. Perhaps you want to celebrate family, or maybe life itself. Like trees, we thrive when deep roots hold us in place – whether to family, community or religion.

Our roots give us a foundation from which to grow ever larger and stronger, and branch out in all directions. We can then leaf out, reach upward toward the sky and the light. We can flower, bear fruit and allow new trees to grow in our shadow – whether they be our children, our students or our proteges.

For children, such as Christopher Robin in A.A. Milne's children's classic, Winnie the Pooh, a tree may bear a tree house and become a home away from home, a place to live and grow in fantasy and in reality at an age too tender for the child to want or be able to actually leave home. Celebrate tree houses and you celebrate children's growth and imagination.

But perhaps you wish to leave behind the realm of metaphor and celebrate the real, living trees outside your window. Thick bark protects each one, yet hidden within is constant movement. Nutrients are transported from the leaves to all the tree's cells, and life-giving water moves upward from the roots. Every spring, sap rises, bringing new life, buds, flowers and leaves. Always, the trees are renewed.

Trees have an important role in the natural community. Their leaves convert the sun's energy to food, which is passed along the food chain and gives animals energy, too. In a forest, the trees provide shelter and food to a variety of organisms, and when they die and fall to the ground, the nutrients within them return to the soil, enriching it for the seedlings that will soon emerge in the newly created sun-lit opening.

Trees. They are a cause for celebration: real trees, the Torah, a life of righteousness, your family tree, the tree in the garden of Eden, tree houses, our own lives. The possibilities are endless.

Let your imagination fly. Celebrate a New Year for trees. Celebrate life. Celebrate metaphor. Celebrate trees, whatever they mean to you.

I can imagine that 50 years from now, while enjoying our annual community Tu b'Shvat celebration, my teenage grandchild might ask: "What did the Jewish community do at the end of the last century when you learned that the burning of fossil fuels was probably causing global warming?"

"You have to understand," I will tell her, "that environmental issues were quite new to us then. Today, many Jews are moved by Jewish teachings to actively pursue environmental sustainability and justice.

"Back in the 1990s, however, Jewish institutions did not connect the historic Jewish commitment to pursue social justice with concerns about the environment. We were, like most moderns, ecologically illiterate."

"Illiterate Jews!" my granddaughter will exclaim. "How could that be? Ecological literacy is as fundamental to survival as understanding law, science, medicine or history. Weren't Jews back then among the most well-educated citizens of the United States, as we are today?"

"We were well educated in many fields, but not ecology," I will recall. "Like most Americans, we were ignorant of the consequences of our actions for future generations. That is, until thousands of young Jews took up leadership positions in the environmental movement. And they mobilized the Jewish community to get educated and take action.

"By the 1990s, industrialized countries had filled the atmosphere with so much pollution from burning oil and coal that we had increased the natural greenhouse effect that keeps our planet habitable.

"Even though the expected warming was just a few degrees, averaged across the globe, scientists agreed that such warming might lead to a dramatic rise in sea level, the disruption of agriculture, increasing floods, droughts and forest fires – and the disruption of ecosystems. All of this was likely to cause a lot of human suffering and the extinction of many species."

"So the earth began to – how do you say it, Zayde – shvitz?"

"You could say that," I will say with a chuckle. "The earth began to shvitz. Then, in late 1997, the nations of the world gathered in Kyoto, Japan, to write a treaty committing the industrialized nations to substantially reducing their greenhouse gas emissions.

"Though some protested that the treaty was unfair and should have included all countries from the outset, the rich nations were responsible for most of the pollution."

"God's creation was in danger! It must have been frightening. What did the Jewish community do?" my granddaughter will ask.

"First, we had to help people understand how the quality of human life in the future, of your life, depended on their action or inaction. Some people argued that efforts to address global warming would detract energy from other pressing Jewish public affairs issues. You know, even a people with as much historical perspective as ours has trouble considering the effects of our daily actions on future generations.

"Big industries spent millions of dollars opposing the treaty. They tried to convince people that the scientists were wrong. And they told people that creating a clean economy would put millions of people out of work."

"But without the Kyoto agreement, millions more people might have suffered, and even more of the forests we celebrate on Tu b'Shvat might have been destroyed. It is so clear now. Did people really believe the treaty would hurt them?" my granddaughter will ask.

"Many people did. But history has proven them wrong. Now that we are applying ecological intelligence to our economy, we have created many solutions that are good for the environment, save money and create new jobs, such as solar and wind power, mass transit and ecological architecture.

"But back to your question about the Jewish community's response. We began to realize that – behind all of the rhetoric and economic arguments – profoundly Jewish values were at stake. We had a choice: To act prudently to ensure our descendants' security by creating a cleaner economy, or to continue to pollute the planet at the peril of God's children and creatures.

"Once we understood the choice, we began to speak out for action. We recognized it was a matter of justice – justice for future generations, justice for poor people who would be most vulnerable to climatic changes and justice for nonhuman creatures. And we recognized that we in the industrialized nations who generated most of the pollution had to be the first to reduce our emissions.

"We organized educational events in our synagogues and schools. We wrote letters and made phone calls to all of our elected representatives. The coalition of farsighted people and conservation advocates, of farmers and factory workers, who joined together for the common good won the debate.

"We also had to clean up our own houses. We involved Jewish homes and institutions in reducing their energy consumption. In those days, buildings were responsible for one-third of greenhouse gas emissions and vehicles were responsible for another third."

"It is an inspiring story, Grandpa. It sounds like the Jewish community really made a difference."

"We never know how much a difference we are going to make. The most important thing is to do the right thing. After much work, a great change has occurred in the Jewish community in these past 50 years," I hope to be able to tell my granddaughter.

"It is now instinctive for us to consider the effects of our individual and collective technological and economic choices on other people, future generations and the earth. What is now considered a basic Jewish practice once seemed like a radical act."

"Zayde, it makes me so proud to be Jewish," my granddaughter might smile and say, "so very proud."

So may it be.

Opinions

Views that are hard to Digest

Last month's column dealt with Eileen Pressler of the Council on Public Affairs, who is suing Prof. David Lethbridge for libel. Fears are that should her suit be allowed, others who speak out against racism will be silenced.

By Jean M. Gerber in Vancouver

Pressler claims to be merely a free-speech advocate, circulating through her Council on Public Affairs Digest opinions that have no other voice. Let's sample what she has published or written.

In the March/April 1993 Digest (page 12), Pressler printed a long letter from G.L.M., who asked that his name be withheld for fear of his life, since, he wrote, "the Talmud says, 'Even the best of the goyim should be killed.'" In the letter, he quotes passages from the Talmud that he sent to the Canada Customs' Prohibited Importations unit, presumably to show that the Talmud contains obscene material. Passages quoted deal with punishment for those who have sexually abused children.

Pressler added this editor's note: "We decided to publish the foregoing letter for several reasons. First, to illustrate the double standard employed by Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise censorship bureaucrats... Secondly to give those of our readers who are not familiar with the writings of the Talmud a tiny sample of the kind of disgusting and vile teachings contained throughout its pages; teachings which are completely contrary to Christian doctrine."

In the January 1992 Digest (page 4) editorial, titled "In Our Opinion," she bemoaned the fact that Terry Long, head of the Canadian Branch of Aryan Nations, had been sent into hiding. Pressler continued: "Have you ever seen a Jew portrayed in the media, movies or so-called docudramas as anything but a generous, warm and praiseworthy human being? Of course not... Nearly all of the communications media is concentrated in the hands of Jewish interests... There is precious little that's critical of Jews allowed to be published or filmed today... Has anyone but a Jew successfully prosecuted someone under the hate laws section of the Criminal Code? The answer is No!"

And on page 5 under the headline "For Fear of the Jews," she wrote: "The truth is that very few Christians are even aware of the existence of the Talmud, and fewer still know about some of its hate-filled, degenerate, depraved and revolting contents... In fact, Jewish religion strictly forbids the teachings of the Talmud being made available to a non-Jew upon penalty of death (Sanhendrin 59a). In Toronto, you need special permission from a librarian to peruse it."

So, according to Pressler, the Jews control the media, Hollywood and the minds of Christianity, while hiding hideous rituals in the Talmud!

There's more. I'm not making this up:

In the September 1990 Digest (page 4), she asks "why a mostly Christian nation would support a Christ-hating nation, such as Israel."

According to her editorial of May-June 1992, (page 9), Ashkenazi Jews who populate North America and are the Zionist occupiers of Palestine are actually not Semites at all, but are in fact descendants of the Khazars, so they have no legitimate claim to Israel: "Zionist-Khazars have not earned the title of 'The World's trouble-makers and destroyers' for nothing. They have had centuries to perfect their techniques on us; we being their intended victims," she wrote.

The true Semites are Christians, Pressler said. "[We must] stand our ground and fight! We are soldiers for Christ and Truth, not for Satan and his lies!"

Canada does not escape.

She has written that Pierre Trudeau and Lester Pearson are a part of the drive to undermine a Christian society by promoting bilingualism. (Digest May 1991, page 7) And tear up that debit card! It is a plot to control the world's financial markets. (Digest, November 1991, page 6)

Whose opinions does she promote? The opinions of Terry Long of the Aryan Nations; David Irving's ideas about Hitler; Jim Keegstra, whom she calls "a fine Christian gentleman;" the Leuchter Report which "shattered major historical myth and legend, claiming that the Germans gassed millions of Jews to death in concentration camps in Poland." (Digest April 1991, page 8); the Liberty Net, a telephone line which provided hate-filled messages and was banned in several guises by a Federal Human Rights Tribunal.

The last witness to appear on behalf of Pressler was Ron Gostick of the Canadian League of Rights, an organization that has long supported people like Doug Collins and sells a reading list of hate.

She also prints advertisements. Here's one: "Find out all about the kosher tax scam. Every time you buy groceries, you pay a religious tax. Find out how you can claim the kosher food tax on your income tax return."

So you decide on the character and opinions of the Council on Public Affairs.

Freud tried to nail sawdust

Asclepius, the mythic Greek founder of medicine, was a tad too arrogant. So Zeus punished him. He zapped Asclepius with a thunderbolt. The good doctor was mortal after all.

By Shel Krakofsky in London

No such Olympian punishment ever came to Sigmund Freud (1856-1939), the creator of psychoanalysis. There are those who wish his theories would just go away. Some of those theories, if not dead, are certainly in eclipse.

Freud's most popular and unrelenting critic, the literary scholar Frederick Crews, has written from his bully pulpit in the New York Review of Books, that Freud "has been the most overrated figure in the entire history of science and medicine – one who wrought immense harm through the propagation of false etiologies, mistaken diagnoses and fruitless lines of inquiry." For Freud's defenders, this is an ouch and Crews is a grouch.

One of the problems with Freud's overall theory is that it relies too heavily on anatomy to explain the psychological differences between men and women. Feminists (both male and female) have correctly noted his extreme "phallocentrism."

Women do not envy the male appendage. It is masculine power and privilege that are the issues. Freud's phrase, "anatomy is destiny," polarized the sexes by invoking simplistic biology at the expense of social, cultural and environmental factors in the developmental differences between genders.

The major criticism of psychoanalytic theory is that Freudian notions are not accountable to ordinary or rigorous standards of scientific corroboration. The unconscious, for example is not easy to test. Something like trying to nail sawdust to a wall. Like myth but unlike science, it can be accepted on the basis of faith.

Unfortunately, among Freud's most ardent detractors, there is little or no room for residual admiration. They are being as unfair to Freud as they feel Freud was in understanding the mind. Aspects of Freud's thinking in fact do give us a firmer grasp of such diverse phenomena as slips of the tongue, humor and dreams.

It is at night that we discover what we fear and what we want without restraint. By knowing and acknowledging our fears and desires, we are able to mediate and better control them. A self-professed "godless Jew," Freud developed a secular description (id, ego, superego) of the very Jewish precepts of yetzer hara (the evil inclination) and the yetzer hatov (the good inclination).

Antagonistic to his traditions, Freud nevertheless joined the Viennese lodge of B'nai Brith after he recognized the pervasiveness of anti-Semitism. Over the years, he delivered some of his first psychoanalytic papers to its members.

All 17 members of Freud's original psychoanalytic circle were Jewish. It has been argued that Freud tried to create a theory to neutralize the differences between Jews and non-Jews. The European Jew could now merge with western man and culture.

Freud married the observant Martha Bernays and he was determined to establish a non-religious home. During courting they wrote often, though she refused to write him on Shabbat. Freud insisted. Martha compromised. She wrote him on Shabbat – in pencil!

Freud's eldest son, Martin, recalled that the Freud children were brought up without any trace of or instruction in Judaism. None of the children was ever taken to a synagogue. In fact, Freud refused to have any of his sons circumcised... hmmm, castration anxiety?... penis envy?

There has emerged a plenitude of devastating criticism that Freud bullied colleagues and pressured his patients to create confabulations rather than real memories to fortify his theories. Nevertheless, the psychoanalytic model of the hidden, powerful influences shaping human thought and behavior is too compelling to be completely dismissed.

Even though he was a brilliant thinker and magisterial essayist, there is a loud chorus of scientists and cultural critics for whom, alas, Sigmund was no Freud.

Remembering my brother

About the time this article is published, my brother Walter's yahrzeit will have come around. When he died in 1964, he was rabbi of Temple Emanu-El in Great Neck, N.Y., and an extraordinary rabbi he was. Where else will you find a community that, 20 years after its leader's death, still feels inspired to dedicate a facility in his name? Such was the power of his influence, the depth of his understanding and the love he engendered. Alas, he was only 44 years old when he died.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut in Toronto

Recently, I came across a little pamphlet published by his congregation; it contained comments he had written for his temple's bulletin. Here (in excerpt) is one sample:

A marriage interview. The practical and technical parts of the ceremony had been disposed of. The autumn sun shone through the study window and the warming rays must have proved welcome, for deep down on the inside, the couple were disturbed. Here, before them, were a group of questions they had neither thought through nor discussed, and yet were not to be avoided. They wanted to be married by a rabbi and the rabbi was frank about it: "It is incumbent upon me to inquire whether, should you be blessed with children, you will raise them in accordance with the Jewish way of life?"

"That means," he continued, "that you will make every effort to give them a Jewish education and that you will endeavor to have your home reflect and support that education?"

"Indeed... but... with one reservation," answered the bride-to-be. "We will send our child to Sunday school; we will even join the temple ourselves; but we will provide the opportunity only. We will not influence our child. Whether he will be religious or not, observant or not, believing or not, that will be for him to decide!"

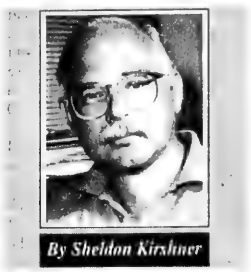
These words are repeated innumerable times when parents think about the religious education of their children: "Religion is the private and free choice of the individual."

How different our attitudes are toward other areas of life: spelling, reading, writing, reasoning, health and manners, to enumerate only the obvious. Would we let our children decide for themselves whether to eat with their hands or with their forks; whether, to go to a doctor or not; whether to be in bed at a time we determine or at an hour they fancy? Readily we would agree that it is our example that counts, that we, the parents, are the child's most important teachers, and what we do, think and hold dear will communicate itself to our offspring whether we verbalize it or not. Why then so permissive an attitude toward religion?

What in life can be more important than values, ethics and meaning, than a view of the universe that derives these from a Source larger than humans, more abiding than their fleeting ideas? Would we deny our children the environment from which they can grow not only in body, but also in mind, not only in mind, but also in spirit, not only in spirit, but also in faith? If only we will endeavor to believe and to observe, our young ones, entrusted to us in sacred care, will, in freedom, observe and believe after us.

The Kirshner File

Lawyer turned to documentary filmmaking



By Sheldon Kirshner

Two years after Elliott Halpern began practising law in Toronto, he bumped into a familiar face as he hurried to work on Bay Street. It was Simcha Jacobovici, an old friend he had not seen since their student days at the University of Toronto.

Jacobovici, then a freelance journalist who had made something of a name for himself with a documentary about Ethiopian Jews called Falasha: Exile of the Black Jews, said he had an idea for a movie comedy. Would Halpern write the script?

Two months later, Jacobovici phoned Halpern to ask how the screenplay was going. Hearing that Halpern had hardly written a line, Jacobovici all but gang-pressed him into a hotel room. Together, they churned out a script for a film that, as it happens, never even saw the light of day.

"We had so much fun collaborating that we decided to go into partnership," recalled Halpern. In 1986, they formed Associated Producers, which has since blossomed into one of Canada's leading documentary production companies.

"It was very tough at the beginning," said Halpern, who started his second career without the benefit of formal film training, and who has learned his craft through trial and error.

Their first two films, Aids in Africa and Burden on the Land, which dealt with development efforts in Africa, enjoyed a measure of critical success. But they had to wait until 1991 for their break. It came with Deadly Currents, which explored the Arab-Israeli conflict through the prism of the Palestinian rebellion in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Since then, the pair have gone from strength to strength, winning numerous awards capped by two consecutive Emmys for The Plague Monkeys and The Selling of Innocents. The first is about an Ebola virus outbreak. The second concerns the child sex trade in India.

Barely having completed these documentaries, they recently finished three more films. They are Hollywoodism: Jews, Movies & The American Dream, which focuses on the European Jewish immigrants who founded the Hollywood studios, and which opened in Toronto at the Carlton Cinema last week; and The Dancing Game, which looks at world of ballroom dancing.

Later this year, Halpern and Jacobovici, who tailor-make their films for television, will release Quest for the Lost Tribes, a two-hour special which takes viewers on a spiritual adventure to the remotest places on earth, and Scandals, a six-part series which examines the impact of scandals on major institutions of society.

As is evident, the partners prefer serious themes. "Our goal," Halpern explained, "is to raise the right questions and to get people thinking about moral and ethical issues. We don't harangue or preach, yet our films are not value-neutral."

At a minimum, Halpern and Jacobovici, who appear to have a symbiotic relationship, mull over a topic for at least a year before they commit themselves to it. "We share a vision. We don't choose fast-breaking and ephemeral stories," said Halpern, who was born in Hamilton, the son of Sidney and Anne. "We try to dig deeper."

Calling themselves generalists, they roam far and wide for subjects. "We can't be pigeon-holed," said Halpern, 41, the father of three children whose wife, Christine, is an illustrator.

Virtually all their films are set outside Canada. "We're both curious about the rest of the world, and besides, domestic Canadian stories don't travel well."

Through practical experience, they realize that non-Canadian topics open more doors. "Our films are a happy convergence of our creative curiosity and the needs of the market place."

Halpern was genuinely surprised when Associated Producers, based in the garment district and close to Chinatown, won its second Emmy in 1997 in the category of investigative reporting.

"We couldn't imagine we'd win two in a row. It had never been done before. So that really blew us away. We were competing against the American TV networks. It was a big arena. The odds were not in our favor."

To Halpern, it is no great mystery why Associated Producers beat out the likes of ABC or CBS. "We have certain advantages over them. We put more resources and time into a film than they do because they are spread thinner."

Not surprisingly, the Emmys have been good for business. "It gives investors a degree of comfort in our track record. They know we can deliver."

Despite their dependence on external financing, Halpern and Jacobovici exercise full editorial control over their films, retaining the prerogative of final cut. But they are not rigid, allowing television stations to trim their documentaries to fit certain time slots.

Compared to feature films, documentary filmmaking is not exactly a lucrative undertaking. But they earn a nice living, being able to support a staff of 15 to 20 contract and permanent workers.

Halpern, a University of Ottawa law degree graduate who practised civil litigation, sees similarities between his current and former professions.

"We attempt to construct a version of objective reality from disparate bits of information. And both lawyers and filmmakers are required to absorb whole little worlds."

But there is one crucial difference. "In a trial, you're a hired gun, an advocate. In film, you try to be objective."

Rule breaker

To his superiors in the Japanese Foreign Ministry, Chiune Sugihara was a rule breaker. To Jews fleeing Nazi terror, he was a savior.

As a Japanese diplomat in Kaunas (Kovno), and later in Prague, Sugihara issued more than 4,000 transit visas, in direct contravention of regulations. His story is told by Hillel Levine in a book entitled In Search of Sugihara (The Free Press).

Sugihara, the Asian Wallenberg, arrived in Kaunas when it was part of Lithuania and left after it had been annexed by the Soviet Union. For no apparent reason, he risked his career by helping Jews. One of them, Zorach Warhaftig, was a signer of Israel's Declaration of Independence and a minister in every Israeli government until his retirement.

In 1947, Sugihara was forced to resign. His dismissal was portrayed as an act of retrenchment. But until his death in 1986, he believed he had been unjustly punished.

Levine, a meticulous researcher, draws a searching portrait of Sugihara, but never penetrates the veil of secrecy behind which lay his humanitarian motives. Perhaps Levine would have found the answers had he interviewed Sugihara. As it is, he remains an enigma, virtually a cipher.

What is clear is that Japan, its alliance with Germany notwithstanding, did not subscribe to Berlin's anti-Semitic obsessions. Japanese diplomats were under instructions to cooperate with Germany. But Japan never embraced the racist underpinnings of its policy. Yosuke Matsuoka, whom Levine describes as "the most pro-Nazi" of Japanese foreign ministers, is said to have declared: "True, I concluded a treaty with Hitler but I never promised him to be an anti-Semite." Draw your own conclusions.

The complete Malamud

Bernard Malamud: The Complete Stories (Farrar, Straus & Giroux).

No matter how subtly or ingeniously the ingredients are mixed, readers of Malamud's short stories know what to expect: Characters who experience failure and loneliness, events and situations tinged with pathos and humor, a unique blending of realism and fantasy. His men and women are often grubby, pathetic or even mean, but they reveal longings, passions, weaknesses, capacities for sacrifice or faith that transfigure them. In his hands, the line between the cruel and the kind, the holy and profane, the grotesque and the beautiful is redrawn in a dozen inspired ways.

This generous volume contains the 53 stories published by Malamud during his 40-year career. All the old favorites are here, as well as a number of stories unearthed from magazines in which they originally appeared.

Fantastic comedy recurs in various forms in Malamud's writing. It can be the central plot of a work, as in The Jewbird. A bird with a Yiddish accent flies through the window of a New York apartment, and availing himself of the Jewish custom of granting lodging to vagrants and strangers who ask it, he takes up residence with the family. But the father, who resents the bird's influence with his wife and son, harasses the creature, and finally, we deduce, murders it. The bird, dying, identifies his assassins only as "Anti Semeets." This story-joke is funny to the end, but not too funny. It sends up disquieting reverberations.

The Jewish storekeeper who tries too make friends with his Harlem black neighbors in the narrative Black is My Favorite Color is hardly a heroic figure, but he is depicted honestly and sympathetically. Repeatedly rebuffed in his efforts to understand and to be understood by a "colored" youth, by a "colored" maid, by a "colored" sweetheart, he serves to illustrate the difficulties that beset Jewish-black relationships. In the end, he has to realize that the blacks, though themselves an underprivileged minority, are already poisoned by a diabolical image of the Jew. So, beyond the gulf separating black and white, there are additional complexities that a Jew must reckon with.

Often frustration is at the heart of the stories. In The Silver Crown, a desperate young man seeks out a "wonder-working" rabbi and orders a mysterious silver crown that will bring healing to his sick father. Despite the considerable cost involved, no crown is ever shown to the increasingly skeptical son. Is the healer a charlatan? Is the entire scheme an elaborate hoax? In a momentary fit of rage and despair, the son expresses his hatred for his father who promptly dies. Could the crown have saved him? Did the man of little faith break a magic spell? The forlorn, mourning son wonders – as does the reader.

An inmate of an asylum tries to cajole a visitor into mailing a letter with neither message nor address. The visitor refuses to accede to the absurd proposal. Yet, for the eager inmates, the black sheet of paper is filled with a multitude of vital messages. At length, the confused and badgered stranger is uncertain as to his proper course of action. The inmate cheerfully informs him that he is crazy and asks: "Why don't you come back in here and hang around with the rest of us?"

Retirement is the melancholy story of an aging, lonely doctor who tries to woo a voluptuous young woman he has never met by placing a note in her mailbox. He dies a little as, from afar, he watches her disdainfully read his carefully penned missive and tear it into little pieces.

In Lady of the Lake, Henry Levin goes abroad to seek romance. When he meets the girl of his dreams and proposes to her, she asks him if he is Jewish. "No" he responds. She then reveals that she was once an inmate of the Buchenwald concentration camp where her Jewishness was tattooed into her very flesh. Marriage outside of her faith is unthinkable for her.

JEWISH EDUCATION
The Next Generation

Constructing an identity

By DR. ELLIOTT MALAMET

The American novelist Philip Roth once portrayed Jews as "people who are not what anti-Semites say they are." This playful definition captures something true about the current state of Jewish self-perception.

Many of us, in loud aggressive tones, can tell you what we are not. But to say, "Well, I'm not like those Orthodox Jews, who are rude and intolerant and out of step with modernity" does not impart what kind of positive Jewish construction one has made in one's own life. And the reverse is equally true: To say, "I'm not like those Reform Jews who dilute and destroy Judaism," again fails to articulate a coherent and relevant message about why Judaism is important for Jews of all ages at all times. So instead of character, we have caricature.

Part of the problem that many Jewish educators have run into is that people often associate classic Jewish ideas with the ideology of a specific denomination, as opposed to the Torah itself. One striking example of this confusion came home to me a few years ago at an introductory meeting for people who wanted to volunteer to spend time with AIDS patients. This meritorious project was organized by and held at Holy Blossom, a Reform synagogue in Toronto.

After a few opening remarks, which drew upon biblical verses extolling the virtues of compassion, the rabbi conducting the meeting launched into a diatribe proclaiming that "Orthodox Judaism brands homosexuality as an abomination."

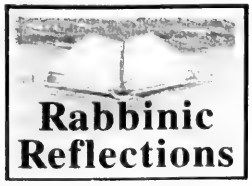
I raised my hand and politely informed the speaker that, in fact, it was the Torah itself – the same Torah that had been quoted a few moments earlier to confirm that compassion towards others was a Jewish imperative – that labelled gay sex as an abomination, in Leviticus 18: 22. What Orthodox Jews think or do not think of this matter is entirely beside the point from a biblical perspective.

The rabbi clearly did not wish to deal with the ramifications of the Torah's heartbreaking complexities, the combination of its seemingly liberal virtue of caring for the downtrodden and yet its ancient code of sexual conformity. And so my point was simply ignored, or rather, used as a catalyst to repeat the disgust that the speaker felt for Orthodox Jews and their "intolerance of gays."

This is, of course, not a one-sided story. Having met enough Orthodox Jews who will derisively refer to those who do not meet their halachic specifications as "goyim," I am more than convinced of the mutual contempt that exists. Our Jewish plague is that we are very busy checking out what we think other groups are doing wrong.

Would it not be more beneficial to start working on how to address our children's needs and construct programs that will show off the power of Judaism in its best light? And that means asking the question: What do I really know and understand about Judaism? And if, upon honest examination, our answers seem less than fully informed, then a re-evaluation is in order.

In Through the Looking Glass, the king asks Alice to look down the road and relate what she can see. "I see nobody on the road," Alice admits, to which the king ruefully replies, "To be able to see Nobody! And at that distance too?" In the Lewis Carroll world of contemporary Judaism, we cannot afford to construct our identities on the perceived void in someone else's Jewishness. We must stare into the abyss of our own spiritual shortcomings and ever strive for the truth of Judaism. Our children deserve no less.



Tithing and Tu b'Shvat

By RABBI RONALD WEISS

We often understand the 15th day of the month of Shvat, Tu b'Shvat, as "Jewish Arbor Day," a time identified with planting trees in Israel. Yet, upon closer examination, it is clear that Tu b'Shvat originally had nothing to do with planting trees. What, then, was its initial significance and how can we relate to this holiday today?

We are told in the first mishnah of the tractate Rosh Hashanah that four specific times throughout our annual calendar are called "Rosh Hashanah," the beginning of a new year.

The first day of the month of Nisan is called "Rosh Hashanah l'Melachim." This refers to the anniversary of a king's reign. In listing a date, a necessary item on many legal documents in those times as in our own, time was measured by the number of years a king sat on his throne. The beginning of the month of Nisan was the time that the king began another year of his rule, even if he had been crowned less than 12 months earlier.

The first day of the month of Elul is described as "Rosh Hashanah l'Ma'aseh Behaimah." Jews who had 10 new animals born among their flocks during the year were required to designate one of the 10 as a tithe to be brought to the Temple as an offering. The year for tabulating the tithing of one's animals was from the beginning of Elul.

The first day of the month of Tishrei is called as "Rosh Hashanah l'Shanim." It is designated as the time when all the laws in the Torah relating to the agricultural year are applied. This Rosh Hashanah has taken on extra spiritual significance for us because of the tradition that it is also "Hayom Haras Olam," the birthday of the world and the annual occasion when all mankind is individually judged by the Almighty.

The mishnah concludes by listing the 15th day of Shvat, Tu b'Shvat, as "Rosh Hashanah l'Elan," the New Year for trees. But according to our understanding of the Talmud, this refers to the laws of tithing as they apply to the fruit of the trees. We are told that the year when one was to calculate his his tithe of fruit began on the 15th of Shvat.

Of these four occasions in the Jewish year designated "Rosh Hashanah," only the last two have any practical significance today. The first of Tishrei, being seen as "Yom HaDin," the Day of Judgment, is a most solemn holiday as it concerns the welfare of every individual.

Rabbi Eliyahu KiTov, in his Sefer HaToda'ah, proposes a wonderful way to reconcile the Talmud's emphasis on Tu b'Shvat as a day of significance with respect to the tithing of fruit and our celebration of this holiday today, which stresses the planting of trees. He says that Tu b'Shvat represents our concern for our homeland for its trees and its fruits. Just as we pray on our Rosh Hashanah for G-d to grant us a year of fruitfulness, health and success, so too are these the thoughts and prayers we ought to express on behalf of Eretz Yisrael.

If by planting trees on Tu b'Shvat we are able to realize these sentiments, then may this custom be part of our national consciousness until the completion of our redemption.

A virtual festival in cyberspace

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

You are cordially invited to a festival. A virtual festival. During the week of Feb. 22 to 27, "the first major worldwide Jewish event in cyberspace" is being held. Jewish Web/Net Week [http://www.jww.org/] is setting out to become a massive meeting place, a music festival and a place of learning. And there's even a bit of hand-holding for people new to the Net.

The week is sponsored by some of the heavyweights of the Jewish Internet including Virtual Jerusalem [http://www.virtual.co.il/], the Jewish Communication Network [http://www.jcn18.com/], Shamash [http://www.shamash.org/], Jewish Family & Life [http://www.jewishfamily.com/], JESNA: Jewish Education Service of North America [http://www.jesna.org/], Jewishnet [http://www.jewishnet.net/] and America Online's Jewish Community Online. To see a list of some of the other Jewish sites which have joined, go to the Jewish Web/Net Week Webring [http://www.webring.org/cgi-bin/webring?ring=jww&list].

There will be a music and comedy festival featuring live on-line performances [http://www.jww.org/events.html]; an area to discuss and debate Jewish issues [http://www.jww.org/chat.htm]; a marketplace for hard to find Judaica [http://www.jww.org/channels/internationalmarketplace.html] and much more [http://www.jww.org/channels.html]. Organizers are looking forward to welcoming 500 participating Web sites each of which is expected to unveil new content in honor of the festival.

A special emphasis is being placed on education [http://www.jww.org/channels/edorglinks.html]. The festival hopes to encourage 250 Jewish schools to become newly connected to the Internet.

And they hope to attract 600,000 worldwide participants over the week.

(Why 600,000? That just happens to be number of Jews mentioned in the Exodus from Egypt.)

Whether or not they reach that figure, the Jewish Internet continues to thrive and is becoming commonplace in many Jewish homes, libraries, synagogues and day schools. But that acceptance is not universal. An interesting advertisement was brought to my attention recently that I find relevant in light of the preparations for Jewish Web/Net Week.

Titled "An Urgent Message" the advertisement appeared in the Jan. 16, print edition of The Yated Ne'eman [http://www.yated.com/], an Orthodox weekly newspaper published in New York. The ad was sponsored by the Rabbinic Administrative Board of Torah Umesorah National Society For Hebrew Day Schools and signed by Rabbi Elya Svei and the 12 other rabbis of the board:

"In recent years, the widespread use of the Internet has brought about unprecedented problems for Jewish homes and the Jewish community at large. We have become aware of an alarming number of cases concerning children and young adults from the finest homes who have been exposed to and influenced by the most depraved kind of corruptive materials now readily available on the Internet..."

"We, therefore, urge that Jewish parents who are concerned with protecting the innocence of their children and the kedushah (sanctity) of their homes, limit their use of the Internet to their place of business only, and not allow it into their homes. It is evident that the possible advantage of having Internet access in the home is greatly outweighed by the terrible dangers involved..."

For those who have decided that the (undeniable) risks posed by the Internet are outweighed by its potential benefits, Jewish Net/Web Week is preparing to unveil some intriguing projects. Next week, I'll look at some of those endeavors, including the international children's mural for peace; a place where Jewish women can share the extraordinary stories of their lives; an area with special resources for Jewish educators; an online registry of good deeds and much more.
